$1½ Million Donation To Be Received

Meen Franklin
Associate Editor

Chancellor Wagoner announced Friday that Dino DeLaurentis will donate $1½ million to the UNCW Creative Arts Department.

The surprise announcement came during a small reception at the Hilton. The reception was attended by administrative officials, faculty members, and University Trustees. Dino DeLaurentis was not present, but his daughter, Raphaela, spoke on his behalf.

The donation will greatly enlarge the capabilities and facilities of the Creative Arts department. Now it will be possible to enlarge the Reader's Theatre. The facility has been overcrowded for several years, and an enlargement was needed, but could not be funded before. Also on the agenda for improvements will be the addition of new and varied courses in the department.

Members of the Creative Arts department were excited at this development. Many expressed thanks for such consideration to long overlooked department. "We rarely get the attention we deserve. This makes up for everything," Dr. Voyce Parrot stated.

Some slight changes will occur due to this generous donation. Raphaela DeLaurentis will be added to the faculty and will be teaching Film Directing 100. The only other change will be in the name of the building. Kerran Hall will become Dino Hall.

Raphaela explained Dino's generosity. "Dino feels by making this donation, he is investing in the future of creative arts. Also, daddy is making a sequel to Firestarter and Dino Hall might come in handy."

Student Aid Cuts Examined

Nearly 90 percent of all student financial aid goes to students, who do need the money, a study says which challenges the Reagan administration, claiming the students don't really need money.

The study, undertaken well before President Reagan, unveiled his proposal to slash student aid, contradicting Secretary of Education William Bennett's charge that too much aid money goes to students whose families don't need it.

In defending the proposed cuts, Bennett said the cuts "might require (students') stereo divesture, automobile divesture and three-weeks-at-the-beach divesture," but otherwise wouldn't hurt students, at a recent press conference.

Stampen dismissed Bennett's comments as "rhetoric targeted at the middle class."

Stampen says the study shows very little aid money is wasted.

About 22 percent of aid money students got came from Pell grant, Work-Study and Supplement Educational Opportunity programs.

To get most other government grants and loans, students had to pass stringent need analyses, which keep the money from students who Stampen says don't need it.

"Lots of people wouldn't be in a school without student aid," he says.

Consequently, Stampen predicts low-income students will be hardest hit if Congress approves the latest round of aid cuts.

Huey Lewis To Appear

Recently, many attempts were made by Concert Committee member Stephanie Kendall to contact some big-name talent for this year's Seaside Jam. But the efforts seemed wasted when no one had signed and the April 15th concert date was drawing near.

As the concert date drew near, the caliber of the groups contacted dropped. Initially, only big name artists like the Rolling Stones, Lionel Richie, Prince, and Hall and Oates were considered.

But as time passed, more mundane and obscure talent was contacted: the Moldering Boulders, Princess and the SeaOats.

When the SeaOats turned UNC-W's offer down, Stephanie was close to despair. Then Raoul Redfern saved the day. Stephanie was able to contact him through a new wave band member she met at The Patio one weekend.

Recently a bill was presented in the State Legislature that proposed to raise the legal drinking age to 21. A similar bill was passed in Congress with a wonderfully thoughtful addition...no highway funds for states that do not pass the bill.

Well, frankly, I'm glad our officials are finally doing something about this horrible life or death situation. Us kids don't know how to drive sober much less inebriated and the roads will be much safer now that the older, more experienced drivers will be drunk.

I think with all of the other wonderful ideas of our State Legislature they should present a bill with a mandatory curfew for those under 21 as well. No decent, law-abiding youth should be out after 9:30 anyway. Why, there's all amount of evil that a youngun' could get into.

It's good that our government is laying down the law on the youth of today. It's like they say, "Spare the rod and spoil the child."

On more than one occasion, people have come up to me and said, "Stephanie Loftus, you're such a bitch!" (Sometimes it's because they're referring to this column, even!!) "All you do is bitch about things you don't like. Week after week, you're such a BITCH!!!"

Ok, I can handle criticism.

So I got up today and vowed to write a column about all the GOOD things that happen to me at UNC-Wonderful!!

I took a shower this morning, and the hot water lasted the whole way through!!!! Hooray!!!!

Back in my room, I tripped over the fan we run because the heat's too high and we roast up there on the fourth floor. But I'm not going to bitch about that.

Rushing to class, (I was late) I narrowly missed getting hit by a car dashing far faster than I. And then another zipped by!! And then another!!!! What's going on?! I squinted my near-sighted eyes and peered at the horizon. (Gasp!) A nearly empty parking at noon!!! What paradise!! I wished my car wasn't getting fixed so I could have parked there too! Golly!

Travelling across the lot, I noticed a faculty car parked in a student's space. But I'm not going to bitch about that.

After class I walked over to the cafeteria to meet Kim and Don for lunch. We ate downstairs. The salad bar had tons of great stuff on it, and all the servers seemed really happy, probably because the sun was shining and all the eaters were glad!!!

I ate a cheese sandwich and a salad, both of which were very good!! I almost asked for a chillo dog, but the guy ahead of me got one, and I saw how lumpy the chili was! But I'm not going to bitch about that.

After lunch, we picked up Kim's car and drove over to the Union to check our mail. She and Don got letters!!! I got stuff from Southern Belle---a rebate!!!! (Gasp! Shock! Choke!) What a surprise!!! Zippedee-doo-da, and golly-gee-wiz!

When we came outside, after being inside for approximately 6 minutes, Kim's car had a ticket on it. Oh no!

She parked in a 12-minute space! But I'm NOT gonna bitch about that.

After all this, I was semi-frazzled and I decided to go back to Dorm '79, where, I reasoned, I wouldn't be so tempted to gripe, complain or air any petty grievances, out loud, or on paper. If I just locked myself in my room, I hypothesized, I wouldn't be bothered.

Wrong!! The elevator, which has been broken for the past week, still doesn't work!!! And the water fountain was ripped off the wall!!! And the dryers weren't working and stole my 75 cents!!!!

I CAN'T STAND IT ANYMORE!!!!!!

I'm such a bitch!

April fools.

Stillpoint

by
Bob Haywood

There comes a time in a spiritual man's life when he must face the inevitable calling. We are all aware of this fact. But so many of us try to evade the calling.

I feel I can no longer evade it. I realize that there is another road I must journey down to reach the goal God has set for me. My love for the students and the university has weakened the signal, but it still got through.

I was resisting the call, but God just spoke louder. As we see so many times in our lives, God adjusts as we squirm and wiggle to ignore His pleading. I was vaguely aware of what my new mission in life was, but I kept holding out, hoping the signal was wrong. But now I know the signal was not wrong. I must face the new calling and be strong in my new ventures. Please be with me as I venture on, and never doubt that this is what God wants.

I know now what I must do, and I am writing this Stillpoint to let you, the students of UNCW know.

I have decided to become a walking prophet. From now on, I will be Swami Haywood, teller of tells and savor of souls.

Even my look has changed. If you note the picture, you will see I have adopted a more Eastern or MidEast religious look. I feel this will help people believe me. I have not abandoned you, O flock of UNCW. I just have heeded the new call of our Lord.

I trust your prayers and chants will be with me in my new endeavour, and I will continue to pray for you.

The Seacrock is the student newspaper of The University of North Carolina at Wilmington, and is published every once in a while. Editorial opinions reflect the views of the Editorial Board and are written by the Editor or someone on the staff. Editorials reflect the views students should adopt if they care to stay here at UNCW. The University of North Carolina at Wilmington is committed to equality of education opportunity and does not discriminate against applicants, students, or employees based on race, color, national origin, religion, sex, age, or handicap. Moreover, The University of North Carolina at Wilmington is open to people of all sexes and actively seeks to promote sexual integration by recruiting and enrolling a large number of oversexed students.

Cutting The Crap

Now that the old senate is drawing to a close and the new senate will soon be sworn in, we felt it was time you met your out-going senators, up close and personal.

Lynn Ward. New here's an interesting senator. He never knew he had a twin brother until they met in the senate. And who is this twin brother? Why, Charles Gavins, of course! Lynn was separated from Charles at the tender age of 14, when Lynn was sold to a pack of llama traders for a pack of Lucky Strikes and 3 pieces of gum.

Kevin Markham. Kevin here is the one dignitary in the senate. He is actually the long-lost son of Ronald Reagan, who left California and all of its glitter to join a traveling ballet troupe. When he visited UNCW on a tour, he was so impressed (or depressed?) by the senate, he decided to stay and be Senior Senator.

Doyle Kornegay. Not much is known about this guy. He hangs out a lot with Kevin, though, and it is suspected he is KGB secret agent.

Edward Troublefield. "ET". What else can one say that hasn't already been said and would be suitable to print? But folks, ET has changed his ways. In fact, he is now a strong supporter of tough administration and would like to invite everyone to his prohibition party. All you can drink of fruit punch and a few cookies will be provided.

Sharon Bounds. Ah, she appears to be so quiet, but we know better. Actually, she is also a KGB agent with Doyle, and works part-time as a sleazy micro-chip repairperson to supplement her income.

Jana Archer. Another senator who appears quiet and law-abiding. But not so! Jana was recently bailed out of jail by the SGA bail fund when she got caught smuggling 400 illegal Swiss watches into the country.

Daniela Sullivan. Our foreign ambassador in the senate. Daniela takes it upon herself to personally acquaint male foreign students to our lovely campus. Being from Europe, Daniela feels she can help them feel more at home.

Lynn Franklin. Strange girl. She resigned from the senate last week because she couldn't remember that 6:00 p.m. is when the big hand is on the 12, and the little hand is on the 6. She kept coming to the meetings at 12:30 p.m. Voted Miss Congeniality, her favorite saying is "get away from me, you ugly nerd!"

Stephanie Loftus. "Glow-worm" to her friends. This girl adds a lot of something to the senate. We don't know what yet. Involved in several aspects of the media, we think it is only time before she gets caught tapping phone lines or supplying the radio station with only Styx albums.

James Moore. Now this gentleman adds some class to the senate. And we need it. But somehow, we always manage to spill our fruit juice on his lovely white tuxedo during the executive mud wrestling.

Eddie Quinn. Fairly new to the senate, Eddie hasn't had time to break all the rules yet. In fact, he doesn't even know all the rules yet, and someone should tell him that the senate meetings are not held in the Chancellor's office. He's gotten in a lot of trouble over that little mistake!

Jenny Catb. This girl makes Annie look like a depressed sourpuss. She has the biggest smile in the whole world, and it is believed that her dad is a dentist. Oh well, with her in the senate, we can turn down the lights and save electricity, yet still see everything clearly since the light reflects off her teeth.

Tim Robinson. A lot of people think Tim is just "strictly" business. OH NO! Tim has an almost private life that would surprise everyone! Why, most of the SGA bail money goes to getting Tim out of jail. Just this past weekend, Tim was arrested for fighting in a topless bar. He was determined not to take his shirt off!

Billy Price. We got this senator from Wilson, NC, and he has been most helpful in providing the senate with tennis balls for our debates.

Charles Gavins. Lynn's long lost twin brother, and stand-in for Flip Wilson. This guy is originally from sunny California and is famous for his surfing. Look for him at the next surf-about!

and came back looking like Malibu Ken. Any girls named Barbie should watch out! Reid Kerr. Or is that Pat? Or Reed? Fred? This guy has a hundred aliases. One has to wonder what he has done to make him change his name so much. In his spare time, Reid likes to crash his bike into brick walls or fall off his bike.

Sid Flaherty. One of our more (unique?) senators. Sid is a true JOURNEY fan and has bought EVERY single and album they ever made. STEVE PERRY is his favorite singer of all times, next to Slim Whitman. In his free time, Sid likes to call people he doesn't know and wish them a "Happy Valentine's Day."

Kim Worley. Kim's back in the senate after an absence. Possibly it was an absence of good sense that brought her back. But she certainly keeps things under control with the extensive police training she received as a UNCW campus police rookie.

Then there are the new senators: John Middleton, Mike Crupi, Tommy Carter, Joe Keffer, Preston Salmon, John Burnette, Betty Jo Howard, Allen Daniels and Terri Hawes. We don't know much about them yet, but we think they are part of a chain gang, esp. considering the fact that they often wear chains around their ankles!

Now let's not forget some more of the SGA team:

Paul Bell. Vice President. No one knows where Paul came from, but people suspect it was somewhere besides planet Earth. He brought with him a few more spacelings, Karen Flynn and Marsha Harrington.

Susan Goodrum. The backbone of the SGA. She's probably the S&G in SGA. She does everything at once, and by 5:00, she has usually completed 2 days' worth of work. We suspect she either has a twin, or she is an android!

And last but not least, we have these two unsavory characters: Daryl McNair, the guy who could sell vacuums on the moon (you need talent like that if you are going to be Election Board Chairman), and David Forvendal, our treasurer who secretly longs to be a Michael Jackson double in the next breakdancing movie.

And now that you've met them, aren't you glad you didn't know about them until after the elections???

The President's Corner

by Eric Squires

As I sit here in my office for the last week of my term, I can not help but reflect on the many accomplishments I have tried to make. I have tried to serve you, the students, to the best of my ability these two years. But I didn't always succeed. For that I am sorry.

But there were times I came through. Like remember the guy who stopped his car to let you walk across the street so you wouldn't get any wetter than you already were? That was me. And you're certainly welcome.

And who do you think faced the whole administration with the futuristic idea of turning the old bookstore into a parking deck and art museum? Yep, that was me.

I didn't mind going to bat for you, Mr. and Ms. Student. In fact, last year, I substituted for three baseball players who didn't feel like going out of town one week. But, who's complaining? It's all in the line of duty!

But let's not forget my proudest accomplishment. I singlehandedly repainted all the spaces I possibly could when the administration had turned them all yellow!!! I like the faculty, but I knew they didn't need that many parking places. My back hurt for a week, but I felt so good inside. I had served the students!!

Now I must end column on a bittersweet note. I am leaving. But I am moving on, not down. I have been given the greatest offer an ex-SGA president could hope for. I have been asked to become a gospel singer. The above picture shows me practicing just the other day.

People are excited about my career opportunity. I have received several comments on my abilities, and I believe you will find them favorable.

"I've never heard anything like this!!" remarked Rev. Chris Christian at a local revival I crooned at.

"Singing like this belongs in someplace besides this earth!" remarked my great aunt when I sang at the Cross Stitch Retirement Home.

Gospel singing has added a new facet to my life. I can now appreciate fully the talents of Christy Lane, and I hope to someday sing with her.

So, remember me fondly, as I'll remember you, great students of UNCW, and please buy my latest single, "If the devil don't get me, I've got to thank God."

Dear Egbert?!

Dear Egbert,

I know that the feminist movement is becoming prominent but I believe in male chauvinism. First I better tell you, that yes, I am female. I love for men to treat me in a subservient way. I could devote my life to cleaning and cooking for the man that I love. I don't understand why women can't be happy and satisfied as housewives. Take advantage of it--live it up!! I am starting a male-chauvenistic, anti-feminist movement on campus called EFC (Educated Females for Chauvenism). I hope that all interested members apply!!

Dear Egbert,

I have been in college for a year now and I still have a question that I am too em-barassed to ask. I want to prepare you, because I think (or at least have been told) that most people know the answer. But no one has ever told me! I guess the best way is to just blurt it out: what I want to know is--how do I know if I'm male or female?

Dear Ambiguous,

Dear Egbert,

I've started writing this column in the newspaper and lately I've had a problem with it. All of the sudden, no one is having personal troubles! Spring got here and the mail stopped coming in. I would like to expand the column to three or four letters, from the original two. (Which is all I've been getting). How can I get more people to write in, or make them have more troubles, so they will write in?!

Learning Your Lavatory

This campus is equipped with several fine lavatories, but students are not using them to their full potential. So, this column has been created by The Seacrook staff to help the students better understand the facilities available. The column will appear on a bicential basis.

Lavatories here on campus are equipped with the finest toilet tissue available. This tissue is made exclusively from petrified wood to create its special texture. Most students take this toilet tissue for granted, but if they only knew the trouble the administration goes through to get it, they would no longer think lightly of it.

To secure this fine product, the administration has to deal with the biggest names in the business. Liquid Plumber, Charmin, and T. D. Bowl Mann all compete in a sack race to see who will carry the exclusive product. Once that is established, the winner then offers this product to a few carefully selected customers. Pit stop gas stations, greasy spoons and universities are the usual caliber of customers the winner chooses.

The administration has to buy the product by the 18-wheeler truckload. And then the administration has to decide what to do with the truck! Usually it is parked on Reigel Road and left to block traffic on Monday mornings.

So, as you can see, securing this fine toilet tissue is no easy matter. But every year the administration goes through this hassle just for you and the distinguished facilities here at UNCW. Just remember that next time you visit our facilities.

This band member was able to contact Raoul, and the deal was set in motion.

It seems that Raoul's uncle, Dr. Julio Redfern, is Huey Lewis' private physician. Raoul had his uncle tell Huey that he was suffering from a serious vitamin deficiency--one that could only be cured by eating large quantities of rutabagas and drinking vast quantities of beer by the seashore.

Dr. Redfern said he knew of just the place for Huey's cure--Wilmington. Dr. Redfern had somehow gotten the Azalea Festival confused with the Rutabaga Festival. Raoul, in describing Wilmington, had specifically said the region was famous for Azaleas. But Dr. Redfern was hungry when he was trying to pull this little deception off, so he said the first thing that came to mind.

The Azalea Festival committee was unwilling to change the name to the Rutabaga Festival, so UNCW will just have to change Seaside Jam from 'Save the Whales' to 'Save the Rutabagas'. To pull this off successfully, the name rutabaga and Wilmington will have to go hand-in-hand.

So when you come to the concert, be sure to drink a beer to Huey's health and DON'T FORGET TO BRING RUTABAGAS!

College Women Less Sexual

College women apparently are less sexual than they used to be, a survey attests.

The current observative trend on the campus could be responsible for the declining student sexual activity, reports the recent survey of The University female.

Five years ago, half of TU's female student had sex at least once a month, compared to 38 percent in 1983-84, says The University psycho Men Arlard, author of the survey.

Arlard's survey, her third of TU women in 10 years, questioned some student about sex.

Not all of the results have been analyzed, but Arlard speculates "it could be part of a larger observative trend in sexual activity as well as in politics.

Pinning the decline on observation is a Freudian hangup, states Ura Rat, human professor at The University, but the complications run deeper.

"An easing of the sense of having to perform may be a factor," he comments. "It could also mean a greater acceptance of more's. Rat's own study of student sexuality in the sixties and seventies revealed student position in premarital sex declined from 50 percent to 10 percent from 1970 to 1975.

And the percentage of undergraduates who had become engaged after or during premarital sex rose from 50 percent in 1870 to 78 percent in 1977.

SPORTS

New Sport Instituted

Bill Brooks, athletic director at UNCW, has announced that a new sport will be instituted here.

"We feel that, with the teams we already have here, under-water softball should put us on the map," Brooks said.

The sport, which has caught the imagination of European sporting crowds in the '80's, will become UNCW's first revenue-producing sport.

"We expect 10,000 fans at all our home matches," says first year coach Buck Henry, who also teaches Marine Biology.

All home matches will be contested at Wrightsville Beach, next to Crystal Pier. Underwater softball rules state that natural, or oceanic surfaces must be used. So it is not surprising that UNCW's away schedule include coastal teams like UCLA, Florida, and Brownsville.

The first match will be played on April 10, at midnight (if a full moon is forecast).

Is Gibson Leaving?

George Walker
Ex-Editor

Is Mel Gibson's job as head basketball coach on the line?

According to some inside sources, it is. The athletic department refuses to comment on Gibson's status.

The evidence recently compiled by The Seacrock does point to the conclusion that Gibson will be canned. First, an A T and T employee has provided The Seacrock with a list of locations and names from Athletic Director Bill Brooks' telephone. South Bend, Digger Phelps. Lexington, Joe B. Hall, Madison Square Garden, Lou Carnesecca, and worst of all, Dean Smith of Chapel Hill had all been contacted.

If this isn't enough, consider Gibson's phone calls. According to the A T and T employee, Gibson has made no less than 15 calls in the last week to the national headquarters of Chi Phi. Could they be offering him a job? We can only speculate that they are.

Gibson has come under fire after five straight losing seasons, and his handling of the players.

If Gibson doesn't return, it is likely that UNCW will name (if it doesn't get a national name) George Durham as player-coach.

"We'll light up the scoreboard every night," Durham says. "Run and gun is how the game should be played." Stay tuned.

Renovation Lamburn Wins Schweitzer Award for '85 Nears End

Nancy Slovik
Contributor

Completion of Hinton James Hall's renovation this May will lessen common school frustrations for UNCW students.

Hinton James Hall will house admissions, the cashier, registrar and records, and student financial aid. The Dean of the College of Arts and Science will also have an office upstairs. Students will find standing in line and going from one office to another and back with paper work from the four offices much more convenient and comfortable than at Alderman Hall because space is being carefully reapportioned.

According to Mr. Carl Dempsey, Assistant to the Vice Chancellor of Business Affairs, there will be a large middle area open in the building to alleviate the inevitable congestion of a busy entrance. This area will also serve as a lobby with seats for students to fill out various forms or to wait for friends.

The cost of the Hinton James Hall renovation is $554,000. Hinton James and Alderman are two of the three original campus buildings, the third being Hoggard Hall. Alderman will provide more administrative space after the move of the previously mentioned offices to Hinton James.

I-40 Completion Set For Late 1980's

Joe Galadok
Contributor

Efforts over the past couple of years to get a much needed interstate highway built in southeastern North Carolina have finally paid off. The completion of I-40 is scheduled for the latter part of this decade, according to the State Highway Department. It appears this modern thoroughfare will feed into an outmoded local system.

"We can't even handle what we've got now," said John Bauerlein, Traffic Engineer for the City of Wilmington. "Our Father Canon Robin Lamburn who has devoted 50 years of his life to missionary work in Africa, the last 20 at the Leprosy Village at Kindwitwi, Tanzania, will receive the 1985 Albert Schweitzer International Prize for Humanities.

Lamburn, who is British, studied theology and pathology at Oxford in the 1920s and went to Africa in 1930, beginning a long period of ministry in what was then Tanganyika. Under the auspices of the Anglican Church, on Jan. 1, 1965, he became responsible for villagers in Kindwitwi, 120 of whom were lepers, isolated from their home communities and social outcasts. Kindwitwi is 180 kilometers (112 miles) south of Dar-es-Salaam on the Rufiji River.

Now 81 years old, Lamburn lives simply and without modern conveniences in the style of his fellow villagers. Through his work and by his example, conditions at the village have improved, villagers have begun providing for themselves, even those severely disabled, and he has initiated other changes that could lead to the elimination of leprosy in the Rufiji basin within the next generation.

The announcement of Lamburn's selection was made Thursday afternoon in Wilmington, N.C., by Mrs. Dolores T. Kirk, director of the prizes. Lamburn will receive the award pose more of a problem than a solution.

The worst part of the clogging will begin just south of Corning Glass Co., at the overpass. This is a problem area because the I-40 intercept is less than two and a half miles to the north, at Gordon Road. But up to this point, North College road has room for expansion if necessary.

Oleander, College Rd. and Market St. can in no way be expanded any more than they already have been.

"There is also a safety factor to students at the University, and especially to those who refuse to use the crossing light installed in front of Wachovia Bank," Bauerlein added. So the only alternative is to reroute the interstate traffic before it hits the overpass.

An alternate route, truck route, or by-pass for port traffic would take the majority of the load off of South College Road, leaving it with only with the present congestion.

A by-pass has been proposed, the Smith Creek Parkway, and in ceremonies at The University of North Carolina at Wilmington March 21.

The Albert Schweitzer International Prizes, which carry a $5,000 cash award and bronze medal, are presented every four years at UNCW by the N.C. Educational, Historical and Scientific Foundation. In addition to the humanities, the prizes recognize achievements in music and medicine, the three areas in which Schweitzer excelled.

Chairing the anonymous Schweitzer Prizes selection committee is the Rev. Dr. Hugh Anderson of the divinity faculty at the University of Edinburgh, Scotland.

Prior winners include Mother Teresa for humanities in 1975 and Andres Segovia for music in 1981. The prizes not only keep alive the memory of Schweitzer; they bring great men and women to the campus of The University of North Carolina at Wilmington so that students may meet and mingle with great models to live by.

The Leprosy Village of Kindwitwi had been set up by the German colonial administration to isolate leprosy sufferers from the community. Their basic needs would be met but isolation was required. The British administration continued this system, even though leprosy had become a curable disease.

When independence came to Tanganyika, and with the city has put up money to buy the right of way in hopes of inducing the state act on this. But until the state lets Wilmington know where this is to be built, the city cannot purchase any land.

Editor:

In reference to the article "Stealing Stars and Stripes," we feel that misleading information was quoted from R.W.Helm about the Greek Systems in general. We feel comfortable in speaking for the entire Greek System at UNC Wilmington, when we say that Mr. Helm had overstepped his bounds. He should not have accused the fraternities in their "alleged handiwork." We're mad! How does Mr. Helm possibly come up with this bizarre theory directed at fraternities?

We feel that he owes the fraternity system at UNC, Wilmington an apology. We believe this malicious accusation is something that hurts the student body, administration, and potential members of future chapters here. We are a young and budding system here in Wilmington and this kind of publicity can do nothing but stunt our growth.

All of the fraternities here on campus have worked hard to gain the admiration of the community. Various activities have helped to give the Greek System here in Wilmington a good reputation. Maybe some of you unaware of the charitable work that has been going on. The Delta Tau Delta Fraternity has participated in the Crop Walk, Special Olympics and they also went out into the Wilmington area and fixed up orphans homes by painting and re-building.

The Sigma Alpha Epsilon Fraternity has sponsored a Christian Childrens Fund. They have also participated in the Red Cross Blood Drive on campus and were a big help in cleaning up after the Hurricane Diana disaster.

Pi Kappa Phi Fraternity has been active in national fund raisers. They contributed over $1000 to the Save The Lady campaign (referring to the reconstruction of the Statue of Liberty). The Pi Kappa also worked on project Push where they raised funds for playground units for the severely handicapped.

The Chi Phi Fraternity are the only chapter with a house. Although they are the only group with a house, most of the Greeks live off campus and have responsibilities in the community. They have received much publicity for their support of the Seahawks basketball team. They also have a drive to raise funds for Muscular Dystrophy, and contributed over $500 last year.

The Kappa Sigma Fraternity went down to Wrightsville Beach and painted the fire hydrants. They also have participated in the Special Olympics and have a fundraising campaign for the United Way.

It's been warm the past couple days and I've seen half the campus out in shorts and shades (and with TANS already!). Everyone's buying their beach equipment--chairs, blankets, towels, swimsuits and suntan oil--everything you need for a day at the beach!

There's one thing, however, that I desperately need to survive the summer...a full supply of trashy romances!! I've already begun to lay in stock for the summer!

It's just impossible for me to lay out without a book titled something like "Dawn's Sweet Desire" or "Love's Tender Fury"--filled with glamorous heroines, swashbuckling heroes, and of course, a dastardly villain or villainess!!!

Wow! These people LIVE!! Sweet Morgan driven from her ancestral Irish keep, flees from her perverted uncle's evil lust into the strong arms of dashing Seth, the raven-haired, grey-eyed terror of the English seas!

The Tau Kappa Epsilon Fraternity is also active with the blood drive on campus and participated in the Crop Walk. They also raised money by rolling an empty keg from Wrigleville Beach to Wilmington, and donated the profits to St. Jude's Children's Hospital.

So, Mr. Helm, I submit to you that the Greek System you

So much happens though that you really have to work hard to suspend your disbelief. But that's the fun of the whole deal!!

I mean, the fair Auroras are usually just sixteen, but they are so gorgeous and well-endowed that they drive all men crazy with lust and desire! I know some really cute sixteen-year-olds, and even some that are considered beautiful, but "inspiring lust"?!! NO WAY!!

And these wisps are so capable!! Do you know any youngsters who can take care of themselves? Or with a devoted servingmaid at their sides?? I don't!

These level-headed, intelligent Rhea Claires must protect their virtue from evil relatives, lustful rogues, and mean-tempered pirates (not to mention a foppish rake or two) until cared for by the ruggedly handsome, much-older Ryans, who, of course, become the sophisticated child's master. (In were involved with may have participated in pranks, but we are proud of what we have accomplished. It's like my Mom always says, "If you don't have more ways than one!)

Once these two get tossed together "by Fate", all hell breaks loose! Their deepest yearning desires are filled by the other, but these two can't just be content with the century's most perfect love!! No, they keep pushing and prodding at each other until the hot-tempered Sean captures fiery Nicole and brands her with a burning kiss!!

You know what happens next.

Then after a few more adventures, and a misunderstanding or something, comes the joining in matrimony of this perfectly-suited couple, leaving me with the moral message that Mr. Right is indeed Out There for me to marry.

(Sigh!) If he's anything like Sean or Ryan, I'm a lucky girl!!

All I need now is an ancestral Irish stronghold...a dastardly villain...long, flowing, ebony hair...umm, brilliant emerald-green eyes....

anything nice to say, don't say anything at all."

"YOU CAN'T DIRECT THE WIND; BUT YOU CAN ADJUST YOUR SAILS."

This saying which I have framed and sitting on a table in my office came to mind frequently as we sailed through the Bahamas during Spring Break. It was a good time to think. Life slowed down a good bit and allowed reflection.

It's really true. The winds blow where the winds will and there was nothing that we could do to make the winds come from any other direction than they did except change the set of our sails. We had to adapt to the conditions around us, for the conditions around us would not adapt to our whim and fancy or even, need.

What is really important in terms of human behavior is coming to understand how responsible we are for the manner in which we react to conditions in our life over which we have no control.

There is a tendency among humans to blame factors outside of ourselves for bad moods, bad grades, bad relationships, and so on. It is true that many things happen to us that are unpleasant, i.e. the winds blowing from the wrong direction, but we choose how we react to these circumstances. If I run around on my cruise, I can get angry at the Captain or I can find a cold place to read and then swim. That's my choice. If a friend snubs us, we can get angry and pull away from them or we can wonder what's going on in their life that causes them to behave in a way that appears abnormal and show concern. A stimulus is a stimulus is a stimulus. Our plans and relationships get disrupted all the time. But no one makes you or I angry, sad, weak, or helpless. We are totally in charge of our response. Our peace of mind, happiness or sense of well-being lies completely in our own hands.

Rather than blaming outside circumstances, we would do well to take time and reflect on the way we react to the conditions around us. We would do well to look in ourselves and seek the deeper dimensions of peace and patience and joy and understanding that would allow us to enjoy our sail through life no matter which way the winds may blow.

Dear Egbert?

Keep them letters coming...

Dear Egbert,

First let me say how much I enjoy your column. It adds a lot to the paper. I am writing this letter, however, to "above it" all (because I did not like his letter).

Dear Jerk,

I am one of the "ignorant people" at this school. You said what you think of me and my friends, and frankly, we were offended. I would now like to tell you what I think of you (and I am sorry, it isn't much). Most likely, you have little or no friends (and I will try to use some tact) and you're not a nice person. You are immature and have been spoiled by your parents (I'm betting that you are a mama's boy). My advice? Try to focus less on the faults of others and more on you're own; I've tried to help you by mentioning some of you're faults. With some hard work (and maybe a new mirror) I think you'll see that you're not as perfect as you and your parents think. Also, you may want to go to the English lab while you are "schooling" at UNCW. You will probably need to write some papers and after some help with diction, you may want to do better on those papers. Good luck—you need it!

signed-perturbed

Dear perturbed,
Thanks for your opinion. It seems you are not the only one who feels that way.

Dear Egbert

My roommate Amy (not her real name) has been dating someone (I'll call him David) for about three years. Recently, I have noticed her flirting a lot with her boyfriend's best friend. A couple of weekends ago, David was out of town and his best friend spent the night with Amy. David knows nothing about what's going on. He works a lot also and while he's at work, his best friend is usually with Amy. Amy and I haven't talked about any of this. It makes me mad that she is doing this because it will probably hurt both guys. What, if anything, should I do?

signed-Shocked

Dear

Shocked,

I think that your first step should be to try to talk with your roommate, since she is the closest to you. Since it seems you are doing this out of concern, tell her this. Perhaps since just the fact that you are noticing and willing to talk to her, the situation may come into perspective for her. Most importantly, be honest with her and tell her how you feel. It may be the case that your talk will show her what she is doing and it also may be the case that it won't. If she ignores it or doesn't want to talk—at least you tried and that's about all you can do.

Dear Egbert,

I have a problem. I am totally in love with this chick I see running around campus all the time. She is so beautiful I dream about her night and day. I even got up the nerve to talk to her once, but I think she probably doesn't even notice. What can I do? I am very shy with girls. The thought of asking her out for a date scares my wits out. I mean, if she turned me down I have no more reason to live, but if I don't ask her I shall die of a broken heart and she'd never know about my suffering. I don't even know her name. Help me please.

signed-Elfman Mangrove III

Dear Elfman,

Let's get things into some dimension of reality. This girl is only a "chic," how do you know that she has any intelligence or that you two would have anything in common? Before you go overboard and kill yourself—find out if she's even worth it!! If she's not, look around, I'm sure you will notice some other "chic" that may be better than before!!

Letters may be turned into the Seahawk office in the envelope outside the door-205E-Union.

Reading Program Begins

News Bureau

A master's degree program in reading education will be established at UNCW. The UNC Board of Governors, meeting in Chapel Hill, authorized the creation of this new program to serve teachers in Southeastern North Carolina.

Approximately 25 students will be accepted into the program to begin in the fall of 1985, said Dr. Roy E. Harkin, dean of the UNCW school of Education. Subsequently, the program should be able to accommodate a minimum of 40. "The curriculum will prepare master teachers in reading, We're pleased to be able to participate with the school's in addressing needs of the area," Harkin said.

The nearest similar programs are located at East Carolina University and Campbell University over 100 miles distant.

"The percentage of teachers holding graduate training in this region has lagged behind the rest of the state because of limited access to training. There has been a great deal of interest in the proposed master's program in reading education," Harkin said.

The program will require a core of four courses—human development and learning, research in education, tests and measurements, and curriculum development. Specialization course options include linguistics, diagnostic reading, teaching reading, teaching writing, adolescent literature, and speech activities.

Degree requirements are 36 graduate hours and successful completion of oral and written comprehensive examinations.

Harkin expects no new money to be allocated for this program. "We will do this with existing resources and with faculty that we presently have or that we can expect to add in normal enrollment increases," he said.

Registration Changes, Begins this Month

Computerization. A walk through most any of the administrator's offices at UNCW will lead you to an Apple II or IBM PC. Computers are time-efficient, labor saving and challenging. And just plain fun. A 1980's time capsule would have to include one.

Preregistration, long a burden to administrators and students alike, will be completely computerized for the first time.

The new system will be completely simplified

Now the student must pick up a card from his advisor and go to a data entry station on his/her schedule day and an attendant will logue the all of the desired courses into the computer.

The computer will reject a card from anyone trying to register early and also has the capability of alerting the attendant if a section is filled to capacity. If so, the student must pick another.

Students will receive a printout of their course several days after preregistration.

Local Bars to Combat Law

Todd Rhoads
Contributor

Local bars which cater to college students are already making plans to lessen the impact of the impending change in the drinking age laws.

Several bars are planning to have special nights designed for those 18-20 years of age who will be effected by the change in the drinking age. Frank Pope, manager of the Pier 9, is planning to try what he refers to as "Galloway Night" now for college students who are under 19. Pope plans to use a special stamp for those underaged to ensure they will not be served alcohol. If "Galloway Night" is successful Pope will probably implement a similar night if the drinking age changes so college students, who make up most of The Peir's business will have somewhere to go.

Stan Parades, assistant manager of The Patio, says that they will most likely not stay open as a bar since the majority of their business is from college students. Parades said they would probably become a keg distributor instead and that changing the drinking age would cause other bars like the Patio to close or change business as well.

Most of those in the business feel that changing the drinking age will not solve the problem of drunk driving. Pope says those under 21 will still get alcohol. "They'll just have friends buy it for them and drink it in their cars," he said.

Drinking...Continued

Lynn Franklin
Managing Editor

With the threat of upcoming legislation to raise North Carolina's legal drinking age, the possibility of a change in the college lifestyle is becoming more and more evident.

The Federal Government has threatened to cut highway funding to states without the 21 year old drinking age and North Carolina is one of those states, but not for long if one of two bills proposed by state congressmen pass to become law.

With 57 percent of the students at UNCW being freshmen and sophomores, about half of the student population is under the age of 21. If the legal drinking age is raised to 21, will student life be altered? Most students feel that it will, but just slightly. The general consensus being that students will not be able to frequent the local bars, but consumption of alcohol will not cease. Under age students will find ways to get beer and alcohol.

And though Gov. Jim Martin is not particularly in favor of raising the drinking age, highway funding is on the line, and that doesn't look good for the under 21 college crowd.

Forensics Succeeds

Rick Olsen
Contributor

On February 26th four members of the UNCW Forensic team journeyed to Berry College in Georgia and captured a 3rd place overall sweepstakes and 4th place individual events finish. The 3rd place finish was a joint effort between the Debate team of Virginia Loflin and Max Perkins, and the I.E. team of Virginia and Max as well as Mitch Butts, and Travis Parker.

The Berry Tournament is unique because Debate and I.E. compete at different times. This allowed the small team to perform the double duty necessary for its strong finish.

Mitch Butts showed great individual effort breaking into finals in 6 events and winning second overall speaker. Travis Parker placed 3rd with a Rhetorical Criticism on Smurfs. The Debate team won 3 of its rounds to assure a top placing.

The team now has 26 events qualified for nationals. This could be enough to put them into the top 30 nationally.

During the last weekend of spring break Mitch Butts, Melinda Greene, Rick Olsen and Travis Parker, along with coach Frank Trimble, travelled to George Mason University in Washington D.C. for the last of 3 tournaments held there. The team finished 4th out of 20 teams including Penn State, Chapel Hill, and Stetson. More importantly, this 4th place finish was strong enough when combined with the 1st place finish at an earlier GMU tourney to give the team a 1st place the Flag stolen we incur a loss of approx. $700. Pardon the pun, but we were at our "ropes end" and we wanted to do something to put a stop to this seemingly annual occurrence at our locations near the UNCW campus. As the three Flags we did recover came from the campus, we looked in that direction to hopefully put a stop to this crime which is punishable as a felony by the state and also probably violates some Federal statutes regarding the Flag. I think most would understand this. I called The Seahawk in early Feb. simply to place a $200 reward ad for info leading to the arrest of the persons who stole the Flag and for its return safely. The person taking the ad information began to ask me questions regarding the theft, etc. and I made some personal opinions, etc. and then I was informed that "this would make a good

Cumulative Sweepstakes. This is impressive since the speaking seahawks only went to 2 of the 3 GMU tourneys.

The most important events however, have yet to come. The Carolinas Tournament is in 2 weeks, which includes all of the schools from North and South Carolina. Then, it's on to N.F.A. Nationals—with over 130 schools competing for top bid in this 5 day mecca of public speakers.

While at the time I thought that might be a good idea, I really thought the article was going to talk more about the seriousness of the crime and that some fun-loving students for the sake of a prank (an expensive one at that), could be arrested, found guilty of a felony theft, and seriously jeopardize their academic and future career. In discussing possibilities of why these thefts almost always occur during mid Jan. to early Feb. each year, I mentioned the possibility that pledges of some fraternity might have been involved. The quote as given in The Seahawk, while not exactly as I said, does seem to single out a fraternity as a probable cause. This was not my intent and I sincerely apologize to the "Greek" community for the impression given. As I have no concrete evidence whatsoever of who is behind these thefts, other than there is more than one person involved, they are of college age and appearance, and the thefts happen on an annual basis, it was not fair to speculate about any group or groups without specific knowledge, and again I apologize.

I am also a "Greek"—Delta Tau Delta, Florida State, 1962, and I personally know of the many good deeds that many fraternities have done in local communities such as food baskets, gifts to orphanages, etc. that go completely unnoticed. When I was in school, fraternities too often were the brunt of a "bum rap." I regret, in this instance, that I inadvertently was the one who gave a "bum rap" to the fraternities when they did not deserve it.

Lea Dudley, the women's golf coach at UNCW, is looking forward to a good season this spring. Due to the weather and various player's injuries, the team's fall season was not quite "up to par."

The women's golf team consists of five players in which four of them are seniors: Jackie Cannizzo, N.Y.; Heidi Crossley, Ma.; Terri Migliaccio, N.J.; Leigh Walters, Ohio; and one is a sophomore, Kim Davis, N.C. Having four seniors on the team, Dudley is optimistic about the player's desire to leave behind both team and individual records. In fact, it was only three years ago, 1982, that the women's golf team won the Division III National Championship.

Dudley said that the team's increase in training in speed and flexibility will pay off for better scores this spring. Strength is also an important factor in golf training. With the use of the Nautilus program, in weight-training and weight-lifting, team members increase their strength and endurance. The Nautilus program is used from the first of November through the middle of February, and use of the equipment decreases as outdoor practice increases.

This spring, Wilmington will host the Seahawk Azalea Tournament, April 12, 13, and 14. The tournament will be held at the Echo Farms golf course.

Hawks Set Pace, 11 Wins

Dean Buchan
Staff Writer

When a team is winning it usually wishes that it could play every day of week. The UNCW baseball team did both last week, winning 9 of its 11 games over the 10-day spring break.

A young but experienced pitching staff along with a platooning system that has kept players fresh over the hectic schedule has helped second-year coach Bobby Guthrie enjoy a sparkling 11-3 record, one of the best starts ever by a UNCW team.

The Seahawks went into spring break with a 2-1 record after opening the season with a 3-game series with Old Dominion. The 'Hawks won two of three from Clemson including an 11-2 thumping of the Atlantic Coast Conference school on Friday, March 1.

UNCW went on to beat UNC Charlotte, William & Mary (twice), and Eastern Kentucky twice. Listed below is a game-by-game breakdown of how the 'Hawks did over spring break:

UNCW 11 Clemson 2

The Seahawks crossed the plate eight times in the first two innings in one of their top offensive performances of the year. Junior catcher Eric Hall belted two home runs, and sophomore first baseman Chuck Jones added another round-tripper as the 'Hawks jumped on Tiger pitching for 12 hits. Curtis Hopper went the distance on the mound, scattering six hits.

Clemson 9 UNCW 4

The visiting Tigers jumped on 'Hawks pitching for 13 hits, while the hosts failed to muster the big rally it had the previous game. Freshman, Scott Brady held the hot bat for the losers, going three-for-three and collecting two RBI. Kevin Davidson was the losing pitcher.

UNCW 8 Clemson 5

Brady's first inning grand slam home run sparked the 'Hawks, and Scott Altman held off a furious Tiger ninth-inning rally to improve UNCW to 4-2. Clemson scored three runs in the final frame after being held to just two runs and five hits in seven innings off of winning pitcher Kenny King, who is currently 3-0.

Come out and see the Hawks

UNCW 6 UNCC 3

Gary Hall's three-run homer in the bottom of the 11th gave UNCW the 6-3 win over the visiting 49er's in what has been the most exciting game of the season thus far. UNCC tied the score 3-3 in the top of the fifth, while Keith Moore and Jeff Clark kept UNCC scoreless the remaining six innings before Hall hit his first home run of the year. Sophomore second baseman Mitch Wells went three-for-four in the contest.

William & Mary 6 UNCW 5

In its first-ever ECAC South game, UNCW lost a heart-breaking 6-5 decision to William & Mary. Junior hurler Curtis Hopper kept the Indians hitless in six of the seven innings, but it was a six-run third inning that was UNCW's downfall. Gary Hall got two of UNCW's six hits.

UNCW 7 William & Mary 3

Injury-plagued senior Bobby Bryant, playing in only his second game of the season, went three-for-three with a double and two RBI as the 'Hawks got their first ECAC South win. Bryant, who hurt his hamstring opening day, has only seen part-time action lately because of his injury. Wesley Currin, who came on in relief in the third inning, was the winning pitcher.

UNCW 9 William & Mary 6

UNCW took advantage of eight hits and eight base on balls to take the Tribe 9-6. Starter Kenny King scattered nine hits in eight innings, while Altman held off an Indian ninth-inning rally. Transfer John Catalano went two-for-four with a double for the winners.

UNCW 10 Maryland 9

Maryland scored five runs in the top of the ninth to make what was a rout a close game. UNCW had a big sixth inning, scoring six runs on six hits. At this point the 'Hawks record was 8-3.

UNCW 9 Wake Forest 1

UNCW improved its record to 9-3, including a 4-1 tilt versus Atlantic Coast Conference schools, with the drubbing of Wake Forest. Junior shortstop Bobby Reynolds came out of a five-game batting slump by slapping a solo homer, and later hit a two-run single. Mike Freeman, who came to the mound in relief, was the winning pitcher.

UNCW 3 Eastern Kentucky 2

Calvin Garrett made the most of his two at-bats, scoring two runners with a single and later belting a solo homer for the 'Hawks 10th win of the season. Hopper gave up only five hits in the game.

UNCW 7 Eastern Kentucky 6

Trailing 3-2, UNCW put on its rally caps and exploded for four runs in the sixth inning, then held off another final-inning rally to improve to 11-3 Sunday afternoon. Tommy Griffin, who went 2-for-4, jacked a Sherman Bennett well over 400 feet for a home run. Bobby Reynolds and John Catalano were also 2-for-4.

UNCW was scheduled to play Eastern Kentucky again Monday and Purdue Tuesday, before hosting George Mason this weekend in an ECAC South matchup.

Navy, which won the regular season and tournament titles in the ECAC South and finished with a 24-5 record, will be the ECAC South's lone representative when the NCAA tournament begins this week.

The Midshipmen were scheduled to play highly-touted LSU in the first round. The LSU Bengal Tigers beat UNCW by 23 in December.

East Carolina, regular season and tournament champions in the women's ECAC South, were not selected into the 32-team women's NCAA championship.

In the men's 64-team tournament, while the ECAC South will send just one team, the Big East and Big Ten will send a record six teams each. The Atlantic Coast Conference will send five, but the remaining three teams will join such perennial powers as UCLA, Indiana, Louisville, Houston and Marquette in the NIT.

The UNCW men's team ended its post-season play when it lost 67-64 to George Mason in the opening round of the ECAC South tournament in Williamsburg. The 'Hawks led 27-20 at half, but the Patriots rallied early in the second half to take the lead and the win. In other first-round games, Richmond beat American, Navy whipped East Carolina, and William and Mary topped James Madison. In semifinal action, Navy beat William & Mary and Richmond edged George Mason. In the final it was Navy over American.

AUSTIN NAMED PLAYER OF THE YEAR

UNCW senior center Gwen Austin was named the ECAC South Player of the Year it was announced at the ECAC South women's tournament last week in Richmond.

Austin is UNCW's all-time leading scorer and rebounder, and was also named to the five-member ECAC South All-conference team. Freshman forward Elizabeth Bell was named to the second team.

S.G.A. ELECTION TIME !!

VOTE FOR YOUR STUDENT REPRESENTATIVES!

Hello, my name is Paul Bell, and I'm running for President of Student Government. In the past the presidential race has been a popularity contest, and I feel this is wrong. I am running on a platform of experience and planning i.e. doing things "the right way."

As a management major in business I hope to continue the training by effectively running SGA based on sound management principles of people caring. Being SGA vice-President the last two years has helped me understand the workings of UNCW and has allowed me the opportunity to meet many students and administrators.

The job of president entails more than being the chief executive officer and administrator of SGA. A president has to be able to listen to the students and convey their concerns through the proper channels to get action. He or she also has the responsibility to be professional and represent ALL The STUDENTS. Those who believe they can get something accomplished by making noise and empty threats are very wrong and are cheating those who believe in them.

If change is going to happen on our campus, such as improving entertainment, an escort service, establishing an intercollegiate football team, or getting the radio station back on the air, it will take time, but will happen if we research, plan, and work together.

As president I will need your support to make these things happen along with many others. The president of SGA is a voting member of the University's Board of Trustees. You can be assured I will carry your concerns, hopes and dreams to the board meetings as your representative, if you will only let me know what they are.

I hope to continue the theme that I have carried with me since day one at UNCW, "The students have the right to control their student fees and have a direct impact on all decisions affecting their University."

If you feel the way I do "MAKE A DIFFERENCE AND VOTE ON MARCH 19-20."

Paul W. Bell

The position of Chief Justice for the Student Government Association is becoming increasingly important to SGA as well as the student body. Because of the present barrage of alcohol related laws and the controversy of rape on college campuses, there's a need for a competent Chief Justice to be able to make legislative decisions. I know that I will be able to do the job by assisting the administration on what is the best course of action on the present laws or any proposed laws that affect the college student.

The present national administration's attempt to raise the minimum drinking age to twenty-one is being fought by North Carolina and North Dakota. I, along with North Carolina, agree with fighting that breach of freedom. The opinion of the people it will directly affect the most, college age students, must be communicated to the state government. The SGA of UNCW, along with the SGA's of all other colleges, must communicate this message.

College rape, especially those which occur during dates, is a serious concern for both sexes and students must become more vocal on the issue. I would like to eliminate some of the grey areas on the topic before we are personally confronted with the legal problems involved.

Because of UNCW's continual growth, there are more legal problems involving the student body with a greater diversity. The office of Chief Justice of the SGA has been played down as a do-nothing position in the past. I hope to make it an important one.

I have worked with the administration on problems facing fraternities on this campus for two years as the Interfraternity Council treasurer. With the increase of legal issues, the administration will need a steady and dependable source of input from student's side, I know I can do that job!

Brad Allen

rently helping to form the I.F.C. judicial board which will give me a better understanding of the parliamentary procedures the SGA adheres to. My main goal in office, if elected, is to keep an open mind and conduct business in a fair and orderly fashion.

Richard Hahn

I am James Moore and I am running for the office of SGA president. My campaign will be based on a no frills-no false promises platform.

As a student I know that we have many issues that concern us that are not being addressed by the administration at UNCW, but if elected and with your support, I will try to get the administration to understand and recognize our problems.

My only promise is that if elected I will do my very best to improve student life for all students and to support any significant student problem to the fullest extent of my capabilities. I believe in the saying "anything worth having is worth fighting for," and I will fight a winning battle for anything that helps student overall.

If you want your SGA president to work for you instead of the administration, then support the "go getters" during elections. My approach to student government is also shared by Lynn Ward my running mate, SGA vice-Presidential candidate. For our approach to be effective we need your support during the elections and throughout the year if elected.

James Moore

My record speaks for itself.

Earlier this year I campaigned for your support in electing me as your class senator. I believe that I have fulfilled my responsibilities to the fullest. Now, I am asking for your support for my election as sophomore senator.

I believe that a candidate's record should speak for itself. Therefore, I am presenting my accomplishments for this year in the Student Government. I am chairman of the Senate Research Committee, which was established by my motion to the senate. The committee is responsible for researching issues that are concerns of the SGA and student body. We have investigated the reasons for the reduction of fall break, the possibility of constructing bike paths on campus, and the security on campus.

In addition, I personally presented the proposal to buy four additional typewriters for the library's typing room. They are now available to all students.

I believe my record speaks for itself. You need someone who is going to WORK for you. With your vote on election day, I can continue working for you.

Tim Robinson

To be senior class president will be an important position to hold. I'm Edward Troublefield (E.T.) to most who know me. I've served as freshman, sophomore and junior class president of my respected classes.

As rising seniors we have special problems and needs. Graduation will be one of them. We want graduation to be something to remember.

I feel that I am a cut away from the regular view that one has as a senator. I am not afraid to stand out, go against the grain and be different.

We in SGA are in control of about $180,000 of student fees. You want those fees to be used wisely.

I serve as chair of the SGA Food Service, Intramural and Judicial committees and members of two others.

During the past year I helped the club football team get money for the playoffs when most of the SGA wouldn't help them, and went out to raise money to help them. I voted for lights on the basketball courts, cable for each room in Galloway and discount movie tickets.

I've also proposed plans for a clubhouse (for partying and studying) and a SGA owned laundry room that operates cheaper than 75¢ wash.

I voted against spending $32,200 in one night for risers. I was the only one to vote against it. Seniors, make the right choice--Ed Troublefield for senior class president. Also get out and vote. I also endorse Lynn Ward for SGA vice-president and Joe Keffer for Attorney General.

Ed Troublefield

My name is Lynn Ward, and I am running for vice-President of SGA. I have been a member of student government for the last two years--as the president of my class. Students are the most important part of the university, and must voice their concern vocally. A recent example is the intramural situation. There is a rumor to move intramurals out of Athletics and into Student Affairs. This would be harmful to both the program and the students. But unless someone speaks out, it will happen. Look what happens to Fall break next year!

Another of my concerns deals with University equipment. For example, SGA has two windsurfers which I feel should be available to individual students. To get usage

My favorite thing to bring to an SGA meeting is a smile. Good attitudes always seem to bring positive results, even if the results aren't in your favor. My name is Jenny Cato and I have been one of your Freshman Class Senators for the past two semesters. I have worked hard to make decisions that I feel will benefit the students.

I also represent UNCW's student government in the monthly UNC-ASG (University of North Carolina Association of Governments) meetings. In these meetings we discuss common problems which involve all 16 universities in North Carolina (system). For instance, many clubs and organizations hold parties where alcohol is being served, yet a large percent of the student body cannot participate because they are still minors. In one of your UNC-ASG meetings we passed a resolution with many possible solutions to this problem. Copies were given to various people of high authority to be taken into consideration. We convene at a different university each month.

This is just one of the many problems we challenge. I'd like to continue to represent UNCW's student government in this organization and others, and I feel that I am qualified to do a good job. You can help by voting for me, Jenny Cato, to be your Sophomore class president for 1985-86.

of one, you must go through a club. This is a big hassle for a simple problem. I want to develop a way in which students can check out this equipment. I also would like to closely monitor SGA spending. This is your money we are spending, it should be for the things you want. I pledge to work hard and keep you informed. I would appreciate your vote on election day.

I also support James Moore for SGA President and Ed Troublefield for Senior class President. I see our present student leaders as a branch of the administration, a level above students. SGA is the students. Vote for students. Vote for James, Ed, and myself on election day.

Lynn Ward

My name is Chris Cole and I want to be your senior class vice-president.

For those of you who don't know what the duties of the senior class vice-president are, they fall into two broad areas: first, to assist the class president as he plans our graduation; and second, to represent the senior class in the student senate.

To meet my responsibilities in the first area, I plan to make myself available at scheduled times in the SGA office for your opinions and concerns. I hope to be able to be a moderating influence in those plans: avoiding both unnecessary pomp and childish high jinks.

In the senate, I would have several high goals:

- 1) to support the clubs monetarily and administratively, while holding them accountable in fund-raising and expenditures;
- 2) to oppose the hold that some special interests (particularly Greeks) have on the senate members;
- 3) to represent the silent groups on campus, particularly the evangelical Christian students; and
- 4) to keep the senate from continuing as a rubber stamp for a small group of vocal senators.

At the time I am writing this, I don't know if I have an opponent, but if I do, I hope you weigh your vote carefully, and cast it responsibly.

Chris Cole

Why do you want me for SGA V.P.? E.D.D.I. is the answer: Experience, Drive, Determination, and Interest. In years past I have gained a multitude of experience the Executive office of Vice President needs. In High School I held the office of Senator, Vice President of SGA and President, as well as Senior class president. This established in me a desire to continue in Student Government because the impact it can have. Before I became involved in SGA there were times I admit where I wanted to waste away in the apathy with others. Yet I realized if I give up, can I blame others? That's why I continued to try and make a difference.

In college now I've been a senator and Sophomore class president now I wish to put my experience to good use as Vice President of SGA. I believe I can be an asset to the executive office because of E.D.D.I. and my communication abilities.

To me communication is the ultimate tool we have to our advantage. As humans this tool with language makes us unique. If only we learned to use it more effectively, so much could be changed. That's my goal if elected V.P. to change things with communication. I hope to motivate others, discover where the problems are and make things happen. I can't promise miracles, but I do hope to cause some important changes for example the football committee I'm now chairing is looking into the possibility of a football program, be it a team in the years to come or a more extensive club football or intramural program for now. The point is setting a basis for the years to come, making a start and going about it the right way as to yield positive results. That's what I want-positive results and I think I'm the person to incur these results.

As I said once before, UNCW is a young and growing institution. We can have an impact if we communicate. I don't really believe we as students are as much apathetic as we are unaware of our possibilities and potentials. I ask you to vote for me so I can be your channel of communication working with E.D.D.I. and you.

As for my long term goals, I'd like to see more social gatherings, a variety in menus on campus, extensive teacher evaluations, publicized, less bureaucracy, community involvement, more student voice, traditions and identity with our university. We can be as good if not better than other universities. Yet we have to make the changes now. A few people working together can make all the difference.

Give me the chance as your SGA V.P. to have an impact. Don't vote for someone as a favor, vote because you think they can make a difference and genuinely care to. I believe I can be that person.

Daniella Sullivan

Hi, I am Bill Sprenkle, a senior, majoring in Business Management. During the Fall semester, I attended every Senate meeting—not as a Senator, but as an interested student. I began working with the SGA by being a member of the Finance Committee and the Constitution Committee. The committee has worked long and hard on a new student constitution and the proposed rough draft will be before the Senate soon. Now, I would like your support in electing me to the Senate as a Representative-at large.

Bill Sprenkle

Hi. My name is Joe Keffer and I am running for the position of Student Government Association Attorney General. As Attorney General I want to establish a more active Judicial System to better represent your interest before the SGA and school administration.

I am currently an active member of the SGA serving as a Senator and also as Hi! My name is Jeff Malinski. I am running for the position of Vice President. Presently I hold the office of Attorney General for SGA. This is my first year in student government and I enjoy working for the students. Over the past year, I have served on the Constitution Committee. This committee has written a new constitution which was represented to the student senate last week. I was appointed as Chairperson of the Campus Judicial Board by the President of SGA, and I have traveled across the state and country to different workshops and conferences. The last conference I attended was held at Texas A&M University where 57 other universities attended. We traded ideas and programs to each other that we thought might benefit the students of our schools. If I am elected, I would like to see the students of UNCW have free legal service. Other universities have this program and it works well. This might sound impossible but all it takes is involvement from the SGA and student body. I would also like to see the equipment of clubs and organizations be improved. Student Government has a warehouse full of unused supplies and equipment that can be sold to upgrade the equipment being used now. An example of this is the football equipment. These ideas can happen. All it takes is involvement and that's what I plan on doing. The answer lies in your hands. Vote Jeff Malinski for Vice President on March 19th and 20th.

Jeff Malinski

Parliamentarian. I answer questions of parliamentary procedure, on how to introduce legislation or individual conduct during a meeting—when someone may be out of order. In a similar way, as Attorney General I would interpret the SGA constitution and student policy manual. I would also sit on the campus Judicial board which reviews student cases so that I could represent you before the school courts.

As students we demand fair, realistic representation to meet our needs on campus. With your support on election day we will strengthen the increasing solidarity of the students at UNCW. As a Senator I would ask you to support Paul Bell for President, Jeff Malinski-Vice President, Brad Allen as Chief Justice and I thank you for VOTING JOE KEEFER ATTORNEY GENERAL.

Joe Keffer

School Kids Record Review

Twigg

Phil Collins has achieved superstar status in the past couple of years with his work with Genesis, his production of various artists, and his budding solo career. In a burst of renewed activity; producing and assisting Philip Bailey and a solo LP titled "No Jacket Required" makes you wonder about Genesis—the band that took off from cult status after the enigmatic Peter Gabriel left—forcing Phil Collins into the spotlight. Long known for the keyboard work of Tony Banks (not to belittle the impressive bottom heavy technique of Collins), Genesis came more into the pop mainstream with "Abacab" than ever before as the band began to rely more heavily on Collins' songwriting. Releasing his first LP "Face Value" more as an exorcism of the pain and loneliness following his divorce, Collins surprisingly hit pay dirt with "In the Air Tonight," a song of isolation effectively contrasting his sparse drum sound with blue eyed soul. Subsequently, another popular Genesis LP followed along with a massive tour. Since that time Collins has continued to record more in the upbeat tradition of "Abacab" as his solo career has begun to outshine in popularity the work of his band.

Phillip Bailey is the former falsetto voice of Earth Wind and Fire. "Chinese Wall," produced by Collins is a slick r&b soul production that showcases Bailey's sensitivity. Meant as a crossover LP with its emphasis on varying styles, "Chinese Wall" works on many levels. The duet with Collins, "Easy Lover" has been a huge hit on both the black and pop charts. Before that the infectious "Photographic Memory" was a disco hit. Though Bailey's voice sometimes is too thin to hold center stage, the production work of Collins sustains the power of this recording.

"No Jacket Required" may yet be the most popular of Collins' efforts. Moving further away from the sparse melancholy of "In the Air Tonight" (granted "One More Night" is an exception), Collins has continued to borrow the structures of Genesis. Playing bass, keyboards, drums, and touring guitarist Daryl Stuermer, Phil has created an upbeat mix of horns, voice and guitar with that signature backbeat as contrast. The effect is as dramatic as always. Phil Collins is now at his creative, multi-faceted peak. The lingering question remains—with all his superior efforts, how will he continue to find time for Genesis? "Doesn't Anybody Stay Together Anymore?"

Next A Rolling Stone Alone

Dr. James Sabella, pictured above in Panama, will take five UNCW students with him to Panama in mid-May-until August

Foreign Trip Planned

Dr. James Sabella is looking for five students to accompany him on a research project to Panama in May.

The project, which will be centered in the coastal province of Bocas del Toro, will deal with the impact a new road (the first one that connects with the land mass) will have on the isolated community.

Students participating will live-in with local families and will receive living expenses, also included will be free airfare and a chance to earn six credit hours. A working knowledge of the Spanish language would be beneficial.

Sabella says the summer long study is open to students in any field of study.

"It's a good opportunity to gain some field experience in a foreign land," he says.

Interested persons should contact Dr. Sabella in the Social Sciences building or call 395-3421.

Coffee House

In a successful effort to promote interaction and fellowship among the various Christian organizations on campus, Ashar, a student singing group, sponsored a coffee house in cooperation with the University Program Board.

On Friday, February 22, room 100 filled almost to capacity to hear the dynamic Gospel Choir, Chamber Singers, and Ashar, as well as numerous solos performed by students. The atmosphere of entertainment and fun was enhanced by having munchies. The coffee house lasted from 7:00 to 10:30 with over 35 people remaining to join hands at its conclusion.

Because of the success, several students will be hosting another coffee house on Saturday, March 23, from 7:00 to 10:30, in room 100. The atmosphere will be the same and feature more solos and student ensembles for entertainment. All students are invited to enjoy an evening of fun, food, and contemporary Christian music.

Capture the Flag

"What a day for a game of capture the flag." For the students of the pepsi generation, UNCW presents campus wide excitement Saturday March 16th, 12 a.m. on Brooks Field. For those who are not sure of how the game is played here are a few of the rules and details. The teams will be divided equally, each having a color flag. There will be a divided line between the two teams in which to stand safely behind. There is an unlimited number of people to each team. The object is to capture the other team's flag without getting tagged by an opposing member. The team that wins goes against another. The Rocky Horror picture show will follow the afternoon's fun that evening.

Tanganyika's union with Zanzibar to form the current Tanzania, responsibility for the village was transferred to the local government which could not cope. The villagers were not used to providing for themselves and conditions in Kindwitwi deteriorated rapidly.

Lamburn organized supplies and medical care for the village and started building their self-respect. Today the village grows much of its own food, with each family now having its own shamba (vegetable garden). Some households do other work, such as making beds from local materials or crafting utensils. The village also has workshops making school clothes for the children and another which makes sandals from car tires.

Slowly conditions have improved. In 1970, an Australian organization "Force 10," provided money for a piped water supply to standpipes in the village. Since 1979, the development of a close association with the International School of Tanganyika Ltd. has been fruitful both in material terms and in helping the villagers leave behind the stigma of being outcasts.

"At all times it is both the vitality and the simple saintly example of Canon Lamburn which are the keys to the constructive changes taking place," wrote one person who nominated Lamburn for the Albert Scheitzer Prize in Humanities.

still in the planning. There is talk of a throughway from Racine Drive to Eastwood Road, and another that will connect Randolph Drive to Hooker Road. Both of these will ease the burden on South College Road, and should relieve some of the growing pangs that the Port city is experiencing.

Poor pay and shrinking enrollment are driving PhDs away from college teaching careers and into more lucrative fields, a current study shows, and the trend could mean there'll be fewer talented professors in classes in the next decade.

In a survey of 38 colleges, Howard R. Bowen and Jack Schuster, education professors at California's Claremont Graduate School, found the deteriorating higher education careers.

The result, they say, may be a shortage of good college teachers.

"The nagging worries and decreased job security facing professors today are persuading the brightest PhD recipients to seek employment in other fields," Bowen told participants at the recent joint convention of the American Council on Education and the National Association of State Universities and Land Grant Colleges in Denver.

While current faculties are "the best equipped for the job we've ever had," Bowen notes, "the flight of current people in higher education and of young people choosing careers will mean more education openings than can be filled."

There will be as many as 500,000 college teaching positions open in the next 25 years, Bowen says. "And the numbers could be even greater in the next 15 years if conditions in higher education continue to deteriorate."

"The academic community must begin now to compete," he adds. "Recruitment of new faculty is the most important task of higher education."

To entice top quality PhDs into higher education, colleges need to offer competitive salaries, incentives and working conditions, Bowen said in a recent telephone interview.

But slipping enrollment could wreck those offers.

"Faculty salaries are controlled by political and economic factors," he says. "Private schools depend on enrollment. So do public schools, but they need their legislatures to offset losses."

"Most colleges are happy with the professor supply and with new recruits," Schuster adds. "But the bubble is about to burst. The application pool is thin below the top."

In addition, new surveys indicate fewer students are choosing college teaching careers.

In 1966, Schuster told the Denver convention, 1.8 percent of college grads considered teaching at the college level. By 1979, only 0.2 percent wanted to teach.

Since then the numbers have stabilized, he says, but the number of top students planning to teach continues to slip.

In the fifties, one in five college faculty members were Phi Beta Kappa. By 1969, only eight percent held the honor.

Schuster therefore concludes that while the vacant teaching positions won't go unfilled, the quality of applicants will go down.

The basic real Schuster maintains, and higher education today can't compete successfully for the best graduates who now have other options.

"If we're correct," Schuster concludes, "in 10 years we'll have a serious problem."

Tryouts for the University Theater's Student Productions will be held March 18 and 19 in Kenan Hall in room 121 at 7:30 p.m. There will be parts for five men and five women. Featured will be two, one-act plays, one by George Bernard Shaw entitled "Dark Lady of the Sonnets" and an original work, "Whatever happened to Marriage," by local theater practitioner and student Virginia Davis. Both plays are delightful comedies which should prove to be both a pleasure and a rewarding challenge to work on. All majors, faculty, and community people are welcome to audition. For more information, contact Paul Sebastian at 395-0046 or Terry Rogers at 395-3403.

Spring Fling, a day of fun activities for on-campus students, will be held March 24 on the athletic field. It begins at noon with a cookout (make sure to bring your meal cards). At 2:00 the competition begins with such events as egg toss, tug of war, water balloon relay, etc. At 5:00, the competition concludes and, while the scores are being tallied, the Residence Life Staff will entertain you with an Air Band Show. The final results of the day will be announced at 6:00, and prizes will be awarded.

All students who plan to seek certification in any area must meet the entrance requirements for the school of education/certification program. These requirements are listed on page 64 of the 1984-85 catalogue. They are: 1) Completion of the University requirements in English and mathematics and a natural science laboratory course with a grade of "C" or better in each course.

2) Completion of Education 200, with a grade of at least C.

3) Completion of a minimum of 44 semester hours with a grade point average of at least 2.0

4) Passing scores on teacher education entry tests specified and mandated by the Board of Education of N.C.

Dr. Terry Theodore, Professor of Drama, does movie, restaurant, and theater reviews for WAAV (980) at 8:10 a.m. on Friday mornings. This week he will review four movies, Into the Night, The Brother From Another Planet, The Aviator, and Sure Thing. On March 22, he will review the play, Butterflies are Free, by the Port City Players at the Ramada Inn. On March 29, he will review the musical, The Boyfriend, by the Thalian Association.

On March 21st at 8:00 p.m. in room 100 in the Union, the University Program Board's Concert Committee will be having Tom Deluca perform. Deluca is a well known hypnotist and comedian. His performances have awed and entertained thousands of college students across the nation, we are proud and pleased to have him at UNCW. We encourage everyone to join us for an exciting evening on the 21st.

Cheerleader tryouts. Orientation will be held on March 25, at 3:30 in Hanover Hall. Professional Judges will be used to decide this year's squad at a subsequent date. Girls and guys invited. For more information, ask for Kitty Parker in the athletic office.

The University Union will celebrate its 2nd annual birthday party in front of the Union on Thursday, March 21. At 12:30 p.m., a birthday cake will be served. Then at 1:00, Flash and Crash will dazzle us with antics to leave any class clown at UNCW to shame. Sponsored by the UPB Special Events and the Union. The rain date is Friday.

Schedule of events for the Schweitzer award:

Wed. March 20-a press conference at 10:30 a.m. (room 212 in Union), lunch with students and faculty at 12:30, informal sessions with students from 2-4 (room 201, 206, 207 Union). Thurs. March 21, informal session with students from 10:30 to 12 noon, Academic Procession and awards ceremony at 8:00 p.m.

A Time For Reflection

George Walker
Editor

Ernest Hemingway, the fascinating 20th century writer, was an adventurer. His bold and pressurized writing style was as clear and precise as a grade school textbook. His talent was unmatched, yet he had the rare ability to not let his ego meddle with his work. He avoided adjectives, adverbs, and other descriptive devices, instead stripping language down to the essentials and letting his readers experience truth.

Hemingway was an outdoorsman who thrived on risk. Bull-fighting, deep-sea fishing and big-game hunting are examples, along with voluntary participation in both World Wars. His existence was nomadic, yet he spent the majority of his time in Idaho and Florida.

I thought of this last week in St. Petersburg, Florida, as I sat hunched in the cool, dry sand watching the sun set.

Earlier in the day, just after The Seahawk had completed the twelve hour trip from Wilmington, an elderly couple from Missouri asked, "What brings you here if you already live on the coast,"

"The evening sun," I answered solemnly.

In St. Petersburg, on the gulf side of Florida, the sun sets over the water. It descends out over the fringes of the ocean, leaving a fiery red maze behind. The dark sea absorbs this light and the output is a remarkable, silvery reflection. For the sentimental or withdrawn viewers, it can reduce you to feel as docile as a rabbit. Hemingway saw this phenomena, and now I had too. I felt privileged, but also mildly depressed. The Seahawk staff had journeyed to Florida on a last minute whim--it was mere luck we had found lodging in this tourist city. I thought about this in the peaceful darkness, wondering how many thousands of experiences I have yet to witness, and how many others I might not ever live to see.

Our days were given to stretching out in the bright sun. Temperature highs drifted between 82-86 degrees, with no cloud cover, whatsoever. Because Florida is far south in the Northern Hemisphere, the sun's rays are extremely direct, making it feel much warmer. We lounged on Redington beach, a private beach, just north of St. Petersburg. White condominiums and cottages line the waterway, separated only by the many Palm trees. The majority of the beachgoers were the delightful elderly who were here to escape the brutal conditions of the north. Incessantly, they walked and walked, letting their bodies adapt to the tropical environment.

They're fiercely tanned skin, snow-white hair and toned bodies defied their age. A very strange sight to see. All across the U.S., the elderly are a hushed-up, tranquil group. In Florida, they are vibrant, positive and eager to feel good. In Florida, they are not relics, but a happy majority.

At night, we read, watched television, milled around town (after the hellacious traffic had died down) and returned to the beach--it being more hospitable than in the day. A cool, comforting breeze is always present, the sounds from the ocean forces you to rely on your audio instead of visual senses--very thought provoking.

One night we had a party, and invited some friends. We grilled steaks on the fifth-floor balcony, careful not to let the heavy smoke seep through the glass door and ignite the sprinkler system. Afterwards, we carried our glasses with us and strayed onto the beach, immediately spotting a scrawny, long-legged bird by the pier. None of us being biology fanatics, about four different species were called. It was that kind of night.

In choosing St. Petersburg, we had opted against the more notorious Ft. Lauderdale. There are less bars, but just as much beach.

Now, a week later, certain images and thoughts linger with me from Florida. The rude, pushy seagulls and dark pelicans, the traffic, the repetitiveness of the music on the radio, the interactions with each other, and Hemingway...

He steeled himself to a life of constant change and chance. In his later years, he settled, and lost this driving force. In 1961, after long bouts of depression, he committed suicide with his hunting rifle. Change is a cleansing agent of the mind. There is no one way of attaining it, but the final product of change isn't that important anyway. It's the constant search that precipitates positive growth. Eleven members of The Seahawk found that out spring break.

Walton Named to Position

News Bureau

R.O. Walton Jr., controller and director of financial services at The University of North Carolina at Wilmington, was named UNCW's vice chancellor for business affairs by the UNC Board of Governors meeting in Chapel Hill this morning (March 8).

Walton has been acting vice chancellor for business affairs since July 15, 1984, following the resignation of Dr. Jairy C. Hunter who assumed the presidency of the Baptist College at Charleston.

As vice chancellor for business affairs, Walton will be responsible for managing the business functions of the university's $25 million annual budget. Under his direction will be the physical plant, financial and auxiliary services, security, personnel and purchasing, in other words, all non-student, non-academic business functions of the institution.

Walton said the biggest challenge in his new position will be "maintaining the campus and the facilities on limited budgets. Space is our most critical problem. Because of the heavy utilization of the buildings, maintaining the facilities is critical."

While UNCW is in the midst of several construction projects, Walton noted that except for doubling the size of Randall Library, nothing else is authorized. "Construction currently underway should be finished by Aug. 1, he said.

Other projects of interest in the business affairs area are the new computerized accounting system which should be on line by July 1 and the computerization of personnel records during fiscal year 85-86. "With computerized accounting, all departments on campus will be able to access their accounting information on their budgets on a daily basis rather than waiting for monthly print-outs," Walton said.

Walton joined UNCW in January 1969 as assistant business manager. He is vice chairman of the Board of Directors of the Wilmington Chapter of the American Red Cross and is a member of the Board of the Cape Fear Council of Boy Scouts. He is also a member of the Wilmington East Rotary Club.

Married to Martha Burton, he is the father of two sons, Tre, a sophomore at UNCW, and Richard, a freshman at N.C. State University.

SGA Purchases Risers for Trask Coliseum

Kim Worley

At cost of more than $32,200.00 the university will be getting a new riser or platform system. It will be maintained under the guidelines of the Student Government Association and is scheduled to arrive in time for graduation exercises in May.

This riser system can be converted to various heights and modified as a concert stage, chorus riser, orchestra pit or runway.

The present system is in bad disrepair according to sources in SGA. It has been repaired as much as possible but the 13-year-old staging system is inadequate for the university and its needs.

The new riser system is 40' x 60' and will be the only one of its kind on the east coast of North Carolina in the university system that will be available to the community and other universities for a fee.

Under SGA guidelines it will be available for campus uses such as graduation and University Program Board concerts at no charge.

The riser system is being charged with generating revenue to cover repairs and future purchases. According to Paul Bell, Vice-president of the SGA any profit would fall under the discretion of the senate as to how it would be used.

According to Bell the new riser system could be a drawing card in attracting performers to this area. Most recently Alabama declined to include the area in their concert tour due in part to the improper staging for their type of show.

"The SGA is a long range planner for the university," said Bell, "This new system will be here for the next 25 years for graduations, concerts, and the possibility of being a money making operation."

The old riser system will be sold through state surplus.

UNCW Revamping Residences

Jeanibeth Kennedy
Contributor

UNC Wilmington a suit-case college? Not if Gail Young and staff have anything to do with it!

UNCW has recently acquired a new staff of people, geared toward sparking enthusiasm and support in all students, as well as being a sounding board for resident students with housing and behavior problems.

This staff, known as the Office of Residence Life, is located in Galloway Hall and is made up of Gail Young, director; Andy Morris, area coordinator of Belk, Galloway, and Graham Hall and Laurin Baker, area coordinator of Hewlett and the apartment complex. For about one year, this staff has been working together planning functions for resident students and off campus students also.

With funding received from the Housing Department, functions are held to entertain, inform and to try and draw students closer together. So far this year there has been a Valentine's Semi-formal and several discussions on topics of the times, such as DWI laws and sexually related problems.

According to Laurin Baker, many more functions are in the works; spring fling, a Rocky Horror night and maybe even a formal might spark some interest and get the students excited about UNCW.

There's a not so silent vandal destroying our library. Noise, confusion and loud talking are making the library totally inappropriate for quiet study.

Noise has always been a problem in the library, but at times it gets worse. Evenings are especially notorious for noise. Commenting on the noise, student Bruce Garris said, "usually at night, it's very noisy, but it's not that bad during the day."

During the last month and a half of school, noise in library seems to increase. Final exams and final papers bring students out to the library by the dozens. Students see friends, even enemies, and can't help but chat for a few minutes. But even normal talking can disturb the students nearby.

Consideration seems to be the key. The staff at the library has stressed this message. There is nothing (with the possible exceptions of issuing tape at the door for student's mouths or soundproofing each table area) the library staff can feasibly do for this problem. Students alone are the key. So remember that next time you are in the library, and quietly jot your friend a note.

By Bob Haywood

On March 24, 1980, Oscar Romero, Archbishop of San Salvador was raising the chalice of Communion wine at the altar of a small chapel in San Salvador when a lone gunman stepped up to the door of the church, fired a shot that struck the Archbishop in the heart and fled. The Archbishop fell to the floor, his blood streaking the white altar cloth. A nun who bent over this dying man heard him say, "May God have mercy on the assassin."

Why was this gentle man killed? He was killed because he loved his people in El Salvador enough to speak out against the injustice and death being perpetrated upon the poor by a U.S. backed Salvadorian government. He sought no political office, no position of leadership. He spoke only out of his love and concern for his people. Appointed in 1977 as a conservative concerned for the spirituality of the Church; within one month of walking among his people he was changed and began to speak out from his pulpit (also broadcast on a local radio station). Each week he would read, one by one, the names of those killed or arrested and the whole congregation would respond after each name "Presente" in affirmation of their faithful solidarity with their dead brothers and sisters.

On February 17, 1980, he wrote then President Carter:

"I am very worried by the news that the United States is studying a way of encouraging El Salvador's arms race by sending military equipment and advisors to 'train three Salvadoran battalions in logistics, communications, and in intelligence.' If this newspaper report is correct, your government's contribution, instead of favoring the cause of justice and peace in El Salvador, will surely increase injustice here and sharpen the repression that has been unleashed against the people's organizations fighting to defend their most fundamental human rights... Salvadoran oligarchy... As a Salvadoran and an archbishop of San Salvador, I have the obligation of seeing to it that faith and justice reign in my country. Therefore, assuming you truly want to defend human rights, I ask you to do two things: *Prohibit all military assistance to the Salvadoran govt. *Guarantee that your government will not intervene, directly, or indirectly, by means of military, economic, diplomatic, or other pressure, to influence the direction of the destiny of the Salvadoran people

We are living through a serious economic and political crisis in our country at this time, but it is beyond doubt that increasingly it is the people itself that is becoming conscientized and organized, and thereby preparing itself to take the initiative and shoulder the responsibility for the future of El Salvador. The people's organizations are the only social force capable of resolving the crisis."

My friends, March 24th is the fifth anniversary of this martyred Christians' death. A few days before that fateful day, the Archbishop said "I am prepared to offer my blood for redemption and resurrection of El Salvador. If God accepts the sacrifice, I hope it will be a seed of liberty and a sign of hope."

God did accept the sacrifice of this man. I find myself unable to do anything other than hear his voice and the voices of other Christians in Central America telling us to get out and stop supporting repression, a repression forced on Nicaraguans these days. I choose to believe the Christian voices speaking out to us from Central America more than the voices than our own US Administration. Oscar Romero spoke only out of love and concern. What other voices do you hear that you believe does the same? We must hear and heed such a one that gave his life in love for his people in opposition to repression in which we are involved.

The Seahawk welcomes four new staff members; Kim Davison, Joe Prussley, Allyson Woodall, and Pam Herring.

I recently obtained an application to qualify for North Carolina residency. Throughout the entire 7 page form, I could not find a single criterion that would accurately indicate my fitness for North Carolina residency. In all fairness, I would like to suggest that the Financial Aid Office issue my residency test. I think that my test would provide a much truer gauge of a person's serious intent to become a "real" North Carolinian. The official application asks trivial questions about minor details such as where I last voted and in which state I have a valid driver's license!

The following is a brief sample of my Residency Test. See if you don't agree that my test would sort out the "fakes" from those of us with serious intent--and with much greater accuracy than the official form!

When ordering from a menu you would choose:

- a. An English Muffin
- b. A Biscuit
- c. A Bagel

- a. Hash Browns
- b. Grits
- c. I'm on diet

Your idea of "dressing up" is:

- a. J.C. Penneys
- b. Your O.P. shorts--no patches
- c. Villager

Your idea of summer employment is:

- a. Sacking groceries at the supermarket
- b. Selling tennis shoes from the back of a van
- c. Walking dogs

When visiting the beach, the most important item to take along is:

- a. A Zip-lock bag
- b. A Surfboard
- c. A Good Book

Guide for scoring:

- a. You are still a Midwesterner at heart
- b. You are either a North Carolina native or a sincere convert
- c. You are obviously from the East

Greek Week

UNCW has come a long way since becoming part of the UNC system 17 years ago. Along with a steady student growth rate, as well as steady campus growth, other programs have grown as well. The fact that the UNCW Athletic Program has climbed to a more respected league (ECAC) is an indication that UNCW has gained respect and has proven itself as being "for real."

Another organization on campus that has proven itself to be secure and growing is the Greek System. We believe it safe to say that most everyone at UNCW feels as though the greek system is here to stay, here to grow, here to be effective contributors to the school community.

Through the efforts of the I.F.C. and Panhellenic Council, along with persisting strength displayed by each chapter, older chapters have remained sturdy and newer ones have risen. Twice as many chapters have formed as have disbanded in the last five years. Greek Week V is of important significance for greeks here. It is a strong breath of reassurance that the tradition of Greek Week has endured five years. More than ever with each Greek Week that passes--the one to follow appears to be "on time as scheduled." And the competitive spirit is alive and thriving within all the groups.

Greek Week V is scheduled to begin on Sunday, March 24th with opening ceremonies to be held in the Student Union Room 100. Set for the agenda are:

Reception for the faculty, staff and alumni advisors
Presentations will be awarded to the Greek Man and Woman of the Year

Presentation will be awarded to the Faculty of the Year Recipient

On Monday the 25th the float that each group builds will be judged for creativity and compliance with this year's theme "The time is right for Greeks." Then the traditional parade around campus will begin at 4:30. Later that evening at 7:30 p.m. the guest speaker for Greek Week V, Mr. David Jaffee will give an educational talk. Mr. Jaffee is the National President of Pi Kappa Phi Fraternity and has been all around the country giving similar speeches.

Then the groups have the opportunity to go ahead in a little fun competition. Events scheduled are:
Volleyball tournament Group sing
Banner Contest Field Events

On the next afternoon the always tough tug-of-war competition begins--with the finals to be held on Friday. All of the events are to take place on the field beside Trask Coliseum. The events conclude on Friday with the finals of each event. At 9:00 p.m. Friday night, Greek Week concludes with the awarding of the trophies at the closing party.

Dear Egbert,

Why can't you get free pictures of you in the newspaper or something so that people can see who you are? I mean, like, is there something wrong with the television reception there or something? You know what would make your column more interesting? Free food, that's what. I would really like to be able to read your column and have free fried chicken or something while I do it.

And another thing, if we could put a man on the moon, why can't we have soft toilet paper here at school? Is modern technology that far behind (get the pun?)?

And one last thing, is there a computer fee like for when you're in the snack bar and they have to make something for you? I mean, is that why everything is so expensive, or is it like little sports cars, do they think that because what you get is really small that it's exclusive or something, like a Porsche or something?

Dear Egbert?

Sometimes I think about things like that.

Signed:

The Guy who likes Gilligan Island reruns

Dear Gilligan,

I mean, or something like that or something. Thanks for the insight!

Dear Egbert,

My problem doesn't really apply to school, but maybe you can help me. My parents have been married for 27 years and now I think they are going to get a divorce. They fight all the time and my father travels, so they never see each other. Ever since I came to college (2 years) they've had these problems. I'm the youngest so I feel like they waited until I moved away to realize how bad it is between them. I can talk to my mother, but she avoids the issue. I hate to go home now because the situation is so bad. But I don't want them to separate, it seems like they could work it out after all these years of being married. How can I make the situation better between them?

Signed:

Breaking up in Durham

Dear Breaking,

This is really a situation that your parents have to work out. You can help though, by being there for both of them. Most of all, try to understand how hard it is for them too. Try to talk to both of them and maybe some solutions or understanding can be established. Remember that you are not the cause of the problem.

I hope everything works out.

Letters may be dropped off at the envelope outside the Seahawk door in room 205E of the union or sent to P.O. Box 3868 UNCW station, 28407.

NCSL to Attend Session

The UNCW delegation to the North Carolina Student Legislature is pushing to make 1984-85 its most successful year yet. We have and continue to gain influence for both ourselves, and our school. Two resolutions that are now under consideration by the North Carolina Legislature are Committees to Regulate Animal Research and a proposal for Government Sponsored Day Care Centers, successfully submitted by Seahawks Mark Signorelli and Thierry Harrison.

March 21-24, we will be attending our annual session where we are submitting bills on an act to prohibit the use of radar detectors in private vehicles, and allowing crime victims to testify at criminal parole hearings. On March 13 we had representatives here from N.C. State, ECU, Catawba, and UNC-G all of whom were attending a candidates forum for the upcoming NCSL state elections. Saturday March 16 we had a doughnut sale with revenue going into our SGA account. Interested persons should attend our 3:30 p.m. Wednesday meetings in room 213 of the Behavioral Sciences Building.

Victor Kiam, the business tycoon who almost singlehandedly saved Remington, came to Business Week and presented a talk on "making it big."

"The Brother From Another Planet" is a strange new film, something akin to "E.T.," "Starman," and "Roots." Like the first two, it's about a being from another planet who lands on Earth and tries to understand our ways. Like the third, it involves the plight of the black man in society, his history of slavery, and his existence now in a slavery of a different sort.

The brother of the title has escaped to Earth from a galaxy where the black man is still a slave. He has the ability to heal wounds and repair machinery with his bare hands, and he can also touch objects like walls and chairs and "feel" all that has happened around them. After crash landing in the immigration center, the brother ends up in Harlem where he becomes a regular of sorts in a local bar. It's here in Harlem that he gets his real education in the state of life on Earth (more specifically, the black communities of the U.S.). He experiences drugs, disillusionment, boredom and destitution. A "rasta" man even takes him on a midnight walk through the city to show him the true souls of his people which seem to find the freedom to come alive only at night—when everyone else is hidden safely within their four walls. Feelings of entrapment, confusion, and despair are often communicated with expressionistic camera shots which work well in the content of the film.

The ideas that "The Brother..." aim at are very strong and admirable in a time when most movies would rather cover the same old mundane topics. Unfortunately, the movie looks like it was made on a shoestring budget, and the acting and writing often seems to reflect that as well. As the brother, Joe Morton does a very good job, and along with two men who play a couple of hilarious white slave drivers from the other planet, he's the only consistently effective actor. This isn't entirely the fault of the actors though, because a lot of the lines they must deliver are pretty off. "The Brother..." is intended to be an offbeat comedy-drama of sorts, and director John Sayles pulls it off from time to time. When it works it's funny and different; when it doesn't, it's just different. I saw this Thursday night at Independence Mall, but I noticed it's gone now. Oh well—maybe it would be better to see it at Long Leaf Mall or late show prices anyway!

On September 24, 1984, at 10:59 a.m. a lone gunman robbed Wellington Lee Shoe Store at 17 South Kerr Avenue. The suspect placed a pair of shoes on the counter, pulled a small silver-colored pistol from his pocket, and demanded money. The robber then placed the money in the shoe box and fled the store.

The suspect got into a light blue pick-up truck with a ladder on the side, which was parked behind Max's Mexican Eatery. The truck was last seen going west on Market Street.

The suspect is described as a black male, 6 feet tall, 175 pounds. He was wearing a blue T-shirt and dark blue pants at the time of the robbery.

Survey Reveals Attitudes

Terri and Rick Amos Campus Crusade for Christ

Thank you to all those who recently participated in the Campus Crusade for Christ spiritual interest survey. The following is a synopsis of the results: Among the 644 respondents, there were 54 percent females and 46 percent males; 36 percent were freshmen, 25 percent sophomores, 19 percent juniors, 17 percent seniors, and 3 percent unclassified. With regard to religious background, there were 38 percent Baptist, 17 percent Methodist, 16 percent Roman Catholic, 11 percent Presbyterian, 4 percent Episcopalian, 2 percent Lutheran, 2 percent Holiness, 1.6 percent non-denominational, .8 percent agnostic, .6 percent Unitarian, 3 percent other faiths and 4 percent with no religious background.

In response to the question, "How important is the spiritual/religious aspect of your life as compared to other aspects such as social, academic, etc.?" respondents were to choose from a 1 to 5 scale with "5" meaning "very important" and "1" meaning "not important." 28 percent answered "5", 25 percent answered "4", 32 percent answered "3", 10 percent answered "2", and 5 percent answered "1".

In response to the question, "Who is Jesus according to your own understanding?" the following answers were recorded: 57 percent God, 19 percent moral teacher, 13 percent prophet, 7 percent not sure, 3.9 percent philosophical idea, and .1 percent myth.

When asked, "Do you have a personal relationship with God?" 70 percent responded "yes", 14 percent responded "no" and 16 percent responded "not sure".

Although this survey is perhaps biased by the respondents interpretation of the questions, we feel that the results are fairly representative of prevailing student opinions.

Thank you once again to all those who participated in the survey. We hope that you enjoyed the cookies!

The Bit Bucket--Quiz Time

Welcome back from break! How many want another week? Month?

Often, the "Bit Bucket" publishes computer related information. But that is not our only goal. We're semi-human and sometimes we get crazy, right Ted? So, when we really let it out, we drop out of sight and solve logic problems-like this one:

FOR MEDICAL PURPOSES Captain Lurk of the Starship "Anyprise", the first space-time expedition to visit both Pluto and Plato, brought aboard 28 bottles of brandy (for medical purposes) which he kept in the ship's "wine cellar", a three-by-three foot storage bin in his quarters. Suspecting that some crew members might try to make off with a bottle or two for "recreation", he arranged them in the bin as shown below, so that nine bottles can be counted on each side. In this way, he felt, he could tell at a glance if any were missing.

During the next party on C deck, the first mate snuck into the storage area and appropriated four of the bottles, then rearranged the ones that remained so that when the captain next checked his cache, he would still count nine bottles on each side of the bin.

A few days later, the navigator decided to pep up a private party using the same technique. He also stole into the secret room and took four bottles, then rearranged the rest so that when the captain next checked, there would still be nine bottles visible on each side of the bin.

How, during their covert operations, did the first mate and navigator each arrange the bottles?

The answer will be in the next bit bucket.

Anti-Rape Services Dwindle

In the spring of 1980, a sophomore woman was raped near Oregon State University's Kerr Library. The next day, 20 Finley Hall volunteers organized an escort service to help women make it across campus safely.

Today, the service is gone. Few people know it ever existed.

About 30 miles north of here, University of Oregon female students, outraged and frightened by a rape on the campus last October, will launch their new escort service in a week or two.

The object, explains Laura Romano of Oregon's Women's Referral and Resource Service, is to make female escorts available and, of course, to prevent future sexual assaults.

But if the experiences of dozens of other campuses over the last year are any indication, Romano's service has only slim chances of survival.

While many campuses, preparing for the increased night traffic of warmer weather, are now forming escort services, the services in general don't work well. Most don't last more than a few months, are usually ignored by campus women, and often don't prevent sexual assaults anyway, campus police around the country say.

"Generally volunteer escort services don't work very well," observes Daniel P. Keller, police chief at the University of Louisville and head of the nationwide Campus Crime Prevention Programs.

"Right after a rape or sexual assault, everyone comes out of the woodwork," he explains. "They want to help, but the incident fades, and they lose interest."

At the nation's biggest campus, Ohio State, three escort services typically go begging for people to escort, despite 62 assaults and ten rapes in the area last fall.

"We get maybe five calls a night," says Cindi Butler, who staffs one of the services.

At the University of Wisconsin's Reuter Hall, which began a service after a 1980 series of sexual assaults, "we get maybe five calls a night," notes Jim Whitland, the program's director.

"We're starting to advertise, make commercials, in hopes that it'll pick up," he says.

The University of Maryland-College Park reported six rapes and 23 assaults in 1983, and campus police expect a variety of escort services didn't improve the 1984 statistics.

UM police Corporal Kathy Atwell says a volunteer service, started in the early seventies, continues, but, "because they're volunteers, and they lack the funding, they're iffy."

"We've had escort services over the years, but, as with everything else you have to work at, people get tired, bored, and the thing falls apart," says operations officer Richard Gould of Oregon State's defunct service.

His department provides an escort service, he adds, "but they (students) have to call. I'd say that we get maybe one call per night, and that's an average."

But OSU, with nearly 3,000 female students living on campus, needs an escort service, Gould maintains. Campus police investigated 10 sexual assaults last year, a figure Gould says is high.

A sense of immunity often keeps students from calling.

"Oh, you hear stories of people being chased across the campus," says freshman Tabatha Somerville. "But it's never happened to me."

"There seems to be a problem with lack of interest in the program," notes Greg Colucci of Kent State's now-folded escort service. "People just don't want to get involved."

Students Becoming Involved in C.A. Issues

The church-sponsored sanctuary movement, aiding refugees fleeing to the U.S. from war-torn Central America, is gaining a potentially powerful new ally: college students.

Although still in the embryonic stage, efforts are burgeoning to establish a campus sanctuary network to help harbor El Salvadoran and Guatemalan refugees in defiance of federal authorities:

At least three university student organizations in California have voted within the past year to establish sanctuaries.

Representatives of 12 other California schools are considering similar steps following a Riverside conference last month to establish the foundation for a campus sanctuary network.

Brown University students, who last fall approved a referendum calling on the university to establish a sanctuary, are working with local churches to set up a sanctuary after university officials failed to respond.

A University of Colorado student organization aiding central American refugees will ask student government leaders later this month to establish a sanctuary.

Combined with the dozen or so campus-affiliated churches that are already part of a 200-member nationwide network of church-sponsored sanctuaries, sanctuary movement leaders are convinced they are beginning to tap a mother lode of resources and support.

"The educational impact alone could be tremendous," says Rev. Herb Schmidt, pastor of the Lutheran Campus Ministry at the University of Arizona, which runs a sanctuary.

"Some of these refugees have literally escaped with their lives and when students hear about that kind of thing, it raises their level of awareness about the whole Central America issue," he says.

A network of campus sanctuaries last operated to protect draft dodgers during Vietnam war.

UC-Riverside graduate student Deborah Allen, who helped organize last month's campus sanctuary conference, is convinced the sentiments that led to the Vietnam War era sanctuaries can be tapped again.

"College students may be a little less progressive now," Allen acknowledges, "but while the progressive students may be a minority, they're a strong minority."

"And students will get involved once they realize they can actually do something concrete to prevent refugees from being deported or killed," she adds.

'NO NUKES'

The effort to establish "nuclear-free zones" won 14 victories on Election Day, but observers say the victories will have little effect on college research and coursework.

Many college officials, moreover, claim individual research policies already effectively ban most nuclear activity on campuses.

"The effects on campuses will be lots less than in the communities," says Max Obuszewski, spokesman for Nuclear Free America, a resource center for nuclear-free zones.

"Many colleges are on state land so a municipal referendum doesn't affect them," he adds. "And many colleges are already nuclear-free due to college bylaws prohibiting classified research."

"It won't affect the present curriculum (at Western Washington University)," agrees Lisa Neulicht, nuclear free-zone chairwoman of Whatcom County, Wash., where 60 percent of the voters approved the referendum.

"They don't do research or assembly of nuclear weapons or production of nuclear energy," she points out.

Voters last Tuesday endorsed referenda banning production, storage research and transportation of nuclear weapons and waste in Napa, Calif., and in 10 Oregon and two Washington counties.

The City of Greensboro is recruiting rising juniors, seniors, graduate students and recent graduates. The College Intern Program is designed to provide a meaningful work experience to supplement academic work for college students interested in government as a potential career. There are 23 internships being offered which may complement a variety of academic and career interests.

Interns will normally be employed from June 5 until July 31 (starting dates and ending dates are negotiable). Interns will work 40 hours per week and will be compensated at a rate of $4.40 per hour.

For further information and an employment application, write City Employment Office, Drawer W-2, Greensboro, North Carolina, 27402 or call (919) 373-2080. Completed applications should be mailed to the above City of Greensboro address. The closing date for accepting applications is March 21, 1985.

Nuclear Research Could Decline

A number of colleges in recent weeks have said they're worried governmental foot dragging could leave them holding a radioactive bag by the end of the year.

Rising costs and the lack of a place in which to dump the low-level radioactive waste they generate in campus research could mean some colleges will have to halt all their nuclear research after January 1st, 1986, some college officials fear.

"We don't want to shut down research," says Charles Bockelman, Yale's deputy provost, "but it's a threat."

About 40 campuses that have some sort of nuclear engineering, nuclear medicine or licensed nuclear research are facing the same threat.

The number of students and faculty members affected may be much larger. Stanford, for example, has some 300 nuclear lab experiments going on at any one time, the Stanford News Service estimates.

Even some biology and chemistry classes that use and need to dispose of some low-level radioactive isotopes could be threatened.

The reason is a new law meant to force states and regions to set up their own radioactive waste dumping grounds, and to stop shipping all their wastes to Nevada, Washington and South Carolina, which host the nation's only large nuke waste dumps.

But if the states and Congress don't start moving more quickly toward creating new dump sites, colleges conducting nuclear research will have no place to dispose of radioactive waste.

"Universities don't have large areas to store waste like nuclear power plants do," explains Sue Gagner, spokeswoman for the Nuclear Regulatory Commission (NRC). "They want to get rid of it as quickly as possible."

But no one has actually established new dumps sites for the schools.

State legislators have yet to find new radioactive waste sites for the universities of Arizona and West Virginia, despite intense lobbying from educators there.

"There's no place where people won't be upset by (having a dump next door). Radioactive waste is a most unwelcome neighbor," Bockelman understates.

In Texas, where the University of Texas system produces 70 percent of the state's low-level radioactive waste, a two-year legislative study has just narrowed the site location to South Texas.

Nationwide, nuclear power plants generate about 60 percent of the waste. College and government labs and industry produce the rest of it, Gagner says.

If the three current dumps in Beatty, Nev., Richmond, Wash., and Barnwell, S.C., do turn away waste from other states, "states without compacts or sites of their own will have no place to go with their radioactive waste," Gagner warns.

"We're concerned about what will happen if these sites are closed to us," Yale's Bockelman says.

"The federal government is trying to set up the regional pacts, but the politicians worry about it," he notes. "Radioactivity is a frightening concept to people."

CONCERNED ALUMNI OF PRINCETON

20 Nassau Street / Princeton, New Jersey 08542 / 609-924-8182

Dear Princeton Alumnus,

In an interview with the Daily Princetonian President Bowen said he hoped to see an end to the selective club system and deplored the all-male clubs.

Recently, Professor Lawrence Stone of the Faculty Committee on Admissions proposed that Princeton admit less alumni children each year. Currently alumni children comprise 14 percent of each entering class, compared with an 11 percent quota for Blacks and Hispanics.

Last Spring, Louis Pyle, director of Princeton's health center, celebrated the fact that 31 out of 33 pregnant students had abortions after receiving counselling from Princeton's sex clinic. Parents were not informed.

In one of the rarest of academic phenomena, Princeton's president has publically attacked a Princeton alumni group.

The dispute between President William Bowen and the Concerned Alumni of Princeton (CAP) also highlights the increasingly visible role that conservative alumni groups are playing on campuses around the country.

The chairman of CAP, which claims to include a third of the university's active alumni, last fall mailed a flyer claiming it was "no longer safe" to donate money to the school because of various campus policies.

"We've previously been needled by lower-level bureaucracy at Princeton, but this is the first time we've gotten this much attention," explains Dinesh D'Souza, editor of the conservatives' alumni magazine.

But Bowen, apparently worried about the flyer's impact on alumni contributions, fired back with his own letter to alumni in December, calling CAP's charges "outrageous."

CAP Chairman David Condit had charged university administrators supposedly:

Plan to admit fewer children of alumni each year.

Are pleased that 31 of the 33 pregnant students who sought counseling at the school's health center decided to have abortions.

Condone homosexuality.

In his four-page response, President Bowen said no administrator has advocated admitting fewer children of alumni.

He did not refute the abortion statistics, but noted the percentage of Princeton undergraduate women who seek pregnancy counseling is well below the percentage for college women as a whole.

He also maintained university administrators have tried to promote "responsible sexuality," and that the existence of a gay alliance club at the school does not mean the university condones homosexuality.

The conservative alumni organization has made similar complaints since it was formed in 1972.

This time, D'Souza says, the group took a less rhetorical approach in its letter to alumni, and concentrated on specific criticisms.

"The facts shook up a lot of alumni," D'Souza says.

The alumni group claims credit for convincing university administrators to stop using tuition revenue to fund student abortions, and to fire the school's football coach.

Specific Training Efficient

Courtesy/College Press Service

Students at McDonald's Hamburger University in Oak Brook, Ill., live in McLodges and earn degrees in Hamburgerology.

But they also work with state-of-the-art technology, endure rigorous training in management, communications and business skills, and can earn up to 18 credits toward a food service management associates degree.

And slowly but surely, a recent report on how much companies spend to re-educate college grads concludes, corporate schools like Hamburger U. are becoming more and more like colleges.

McDonald's is one of some 400 corporations spending millions each year on employee education programs to fill in the gaps left by traditional education, and to provide specialized training for specific jobs.

"The typical college graduate has accrued a degree and a good academic education," explains Donald Conover, spokesman for AT&T's Corporate Education Center in New Jersey.

But students "need a transition from a broad college base to the more specific applications necessary to do a job," he adds.

Corporate courses range from high school basics to specialized operations training, and students include dropouts and PhDs.

"The age of high-tech has moved in rapidly," says Nell Eurich, author of the recent Carnegie Institute study of corporate classrooms. "It's necessary to educate workers in advanced information, to give additional instruction constantly."

"It's an extension of the lifelong learning concept," explains Jim Pavlakis, developer of Chesapeake and Potomac Telephone's corporate education program. "Even if schools are doing a beautiful job, employees need opportunities to avoid job obsolescence."

Nearly 8,000 of C&T's 30,000 employees currently use one of three corporate education plans: in-house or home study courses in specific job training and basic education, or tuition aid, providing access to all schools in the area.

The company expanded its initial tuition aid program 15 years ago to include undereducated and entry level employees, Pavlakis says.

"In 1969, it became a huge program attempting to provide

Explaining the IFC

The Inter-Fraternity Council has been on the campus of UNCW for several years now and with the election of new officers near the end of the fall 1984 semester it is finally gaining order.

The IFC is an organization that is set up to improve and encourage relations between fraternities and is common to most universities with greek organizations.

In an interview with Mark Boggis, President of the IFC, Mark said the IFC has several items on the agenda for this semester. These items are helping out with the Spring Special Olympics; recognition of greeks for scholarship and athletic achievements; organizing the best Greek Week ever; having a spring party for the greeks at the beach; and finishing a constitubasic skill education to help employees qualify for better jobs," he notes. "Then affirmative action pressure convinced us to offer non-traditional job training."

AT&T began corporate education in 1995, Conover says, "accelerating the concept at about the same rate as knowledge accelerated."

This year, the company will log 360,000 student-days of training at three large corporate education centers and 12 regional facilities.

Many are stressing basic skills courses more and more, Carnegie's Eurich contends.

"It's a question of getting basic skills," she says. "Corporations are doing a lot of work in basic instruction, in reading, writing, math, effective listening and speaking."

tion that includes articles on hazing and rush activities.

When asked what the emphasis is for the upcoming fall semester Mark replied "greek unity" and said that he would like to see the greeks doing things for each other and the university. Mark went on to say that the only way to accomplish this goal is to act now by making greeks aware of each others achievements and throwing more parties to get everyone together.

Another important goal of the IFC is to set up a judicial board which would allow greeks to handle their own problems rather than involving the university.

When asked about problems the IFC is having Mark said "getting people interested in what the IFC has to offer." All in all Mark seemed very positive about the future of the IFC at UNCW.

Hospitals Report Heavy Admittance

Todd Harris
Contributor

The flu season has hit the area hard since the middle of January, with area hospitals reporting large numbers of cases being seen and professors seeing higher absenteeism than normal.

According to Tina Howell, an emergency room receptionist at New Hanover Hospital, about 33 percent of the cases in the emergency room since the end of January have been flu related. Miss Howell said, "We have seen about twice as many cases than is normal for this time of year." These cases also involved respiratory problems. She also said that most cases could not be treated in the hospital and most sufferers are told to drink fluids and take aspirin for fever and aches.

However, according to Student Health Services there is not epidemic on campus. Catherine Vangellow, Physicians Assistant, said that she was aware of an outbreak but she said, "If students are sick, they haven't been coming in for treatment." Linda Smith, who is the medic on campus said that there have only been about 25 cases so far. But she said "we don't treat all respiratory problems as the flu." According to Ms. Smith, flu symptoms include a temperature of 100 degrees or more accompanied with muscle and joint aches and a cough.

52 Screen

Fifty-two students at The University of North Carolina at Wilmington were screened for sickle cell anemia Wednesday, Feb. 20, as part of a sickle cell awareness effort. Sickle cell anemia is an inherited blood disorder which primarily affects blacks.

As part of UNCW's observance of Black History Month, the UNCW Chapter of Kappa Alpha Psi Fraternity asked Reco Wallace, director of the Southeastern Sickle Cell Association, to conduct screening and share information with students.

In addition to the screening, approximately 100 students viewed films about the disease.

Ralph Parker, director of minority affairs at UNCW, said that he knows of no UNCW students who currently have sickle cell anemia, but there have been some in the past.

Students Target for Tests, Drug Use Up

Amy Williams
Contributor

College students are target areas for such things as pizza taste tests, credit card companies seeking new applicants, and student government surveys. In the last ten years though, college students have also been targeted as the group whose use of drugs has increased significantly.

According to the National Institute on Drug Abuse, as of 1982, "illicit use of drugs other than marijuana is concentrated among young adults age 18 to 25." This study showed that of this age group, 28 percent have or are now using cocaine, 21 percent have experimented with such hallucinogens as "PCP" and LSD, while 28 percent have used some type of prescription or "psychotherapeutic" drug in order to achieve a high.

Although these statistics are alarming, there is an agency in New Hanover County which is helping students, as well as other drug abusers, combat their problems. This agency is the Cape Fear Substance Abuse Center, a United Way Agency, located at 801 Princess Street.

CFSAC was established in 1970 as the New Hanover Drug Abuse Committee. This committee of concerned parents and teachers was organized by Dr. William Phillips with support from the Junior League of Wilmington. Its primary goal was providing prevention/education services for the Cape Fear region. In January of 1971, NHDAC set up Crisis Line, a 24 hour crisis intervention program. Demand for a crisis service at this time was tremendous, and within the first 24 hours, Crisis Line had received some 600 calls.

Presently, approximately 600 contacts are recorded each month by the intervention center. In 1974, Crisis Line merged with Open House, a 24 hour telephone and walk-in counseling service designed for adolescents. Crisis Line/Open House is currently located at 419 Chestnut Street.

In July 1980, the New Hanover Drug Abuse Committee changed its name to the Cape Fear Substance Abuse Center, and now also serves the two surrounding counties of Pender and Brunswick.

Along with its primary prevention and drug education, crisis intervention and emergency shelters, and drug treatment and drug education, crisis intervention and emergency shelters, and drug treatment and evaluation services, CFSAC also supports such programs as the Rape Task Force, which provides crisis intervention services to victims of sexual assault and their families, TASC or Treatment Alternatives to Street Crimes, which serves as the bridge between the criminal justice system and the drug treatment community, and the Maytag-Cycle II program, which helps prison inmates become better able to rejoin society after they are paroled. CFSAC is also involved in the Willie M program currently under discussion here in New Hanover County.

All these services are available to the general public and fees are assessed according to ability to pay.

Along with these other services, according to Dana M. Freer, Prevention/Education Coordinator for CFSAC, on campus workshops concerning drugs and their effects could also be provided if enough student interest and administrative approval were generated.

Presently, student and teacher workshops for both public and private school systems in New Hanover, Pender and Brunswick Counties are conducted upon request. However, former counselor David Turpin, and current coordinator Dana Freer have visited various classes at UNCW and have provided students with current information in the area of drugs and abuse.

Students interested in more information about the center are urged to contact the center at (919) 343-0145.

In New Hanover County, the number for Crisis Line is (919) 763-3695. The toll free number for Crisis Line is 1-800-672-2903.

CFSAC cares about the Cape Fear region and UNCW students.

Hawks Still Blazing

Dean Buchan
Staff Writer

UNCW, playing against highly-regarded competition, has won 11 straight games. Last week the Seahawks swept a three-game series with ECAC South foe George Mason, knocked off Purdue of the Big Ten Conference, and beat Eastern Kentucky, a team that qualified for the NCAA tournament last year.

UNCW, now 16-3 overall and 5-1 in conference play, must now be considered for a national ranking, and certainly will be if its torrid pace of victories continues.

Pitching has been one of the Seahawk strong points. It took seven Hawk hurlers in Tuesday's win over Purdue, but in the weekend series against George Mason, three UNCW pitchers went the distance on the mound. Sophomore fireballer Kenny King is 5-0, while reliever Wesley Currin is also unbeaten at 3-0.

Key games coming up for the Seahawks include a single game at previously nationally ranked North Carolina on Monday and a visit to N.C. State on Sunday. Currently the Seahawks have the best record in the state, though ECU, Campbell, State and Carolina are all having good seasons.

UNCW 13 Eastern Kentucky 6

Chuck Jones hit a home run and collected 4 RBI's, while pitcher Kenny King got his fourth straight win without a loss, as the Seahawks beat the Colonels 13-6, sweeping the three-game series. Last season ECU won the Ohio Valley Conference title and played in the NCAA regional before being eliminated by North Carolina.

after nine innings. The Boiler-makers of the Big Ten scored once in the tenth to lead 8-7.

Center fielder Calvin Garret tied the score at 8-8 with his second home run of the game.

Purdue scored again in the 11th to lead 9-8, setting the stage for a thrilling finish. With the bases loaded, Tommy Griffin belted a two-run double for the 'Hawk's 13th win of the year. UNCW used seven pitchers in the game with Wesley Currin getting the win.

UNCW 9 George Mason 4

In the first game of a key ECAC South series with the Patriots, John Catalano went three-for-four, and Gary Hall hit his second homer of the season to lead UNCW to the 9-4 victory. Curtis Hopper went the distance in the first game of Friday's doubleheader to improve his record to 3-2.

UNCW 8 George Mason 5

In the second game of Friday's doubleheader, Tim Langmeyer hit a two-out, bases loaded triple to break open a close game and help the 'Hawks win their fourth straight conference game. Keith Moore got his first victory on the hill for UNCW.

UNCW 6 George Mason 4

Freshman Scott Brady's hot bat helped UNCW gain the 6-4 victory, sweeping the Patriots and improving UNCW's ECAC South record to 5-1. After leading 4-0, GMU tied the score 4-4 in the fifth. Two innings later, Brady hit a two-out, bases loaded double. Brady homered earlier in the game and had four RBI's on the day.

"Georgetown to Win"

Dean Buchan
Staff Writer

Georgetown, 32-2 and a winner of 14 straight, is the odds-on favorite to win the NCAA basketball championship next weekend in Lexington, Ky. In fact, as the 64-team tournament field dwindles, some basketball experts say Georgetown is a shoe-in to become the first team to repeat as national champions since UCLA's dynasty ended in 1973.

But UNCW basketball coaches, players and fans aren't so sure that Coach John Thompson's Hoyas are unbeatable.

"They (Georgetown) are capable of being beaten," said UNCW coach Mel Gibson, "but whoever does it must somehow counter their unbelievable quickness."

Georgetown, which lost only to St. John's at home and Syracuse on the road, is playing in the Eastern Regional this week in Providence, R.I. Joining the Hoyas are Loyola, Illinois, and ACC champion Georgia Tech.

"I think Georgetown is really well. That would be a capable of being beat," said UNCW assistant coach Jim Tribett, "however, I don't think they will be beat, not the way they're playing right now."

Others had similar thoughts. "Georgetown will win the whole thing but I feel Memphis State could knock them off," said Seahawk center Brian Rowsom.

"Memphis State, if they reach the final four, will beat Georgetown and win the title," said Paul Newman, a Seahawk forward.

Bob Roller, UNCW Sports Information Director: "Georgetown can be beaten by a Big East team other than St. John's. Georgetown has got St. John's number."

Rusty Morgan, UNCW senior: "Several people are capable of beating Georgetown; UNC, State, or Georgia Tech."

Richie Livingston, UNCW senior: "Georgia Tech could beat them. I like their inside power with John Salley and Yvon Joseph."

good game."

Graham Hatcher, UNCW Professor: "They can be beat, St. John's and Syracuse have proven that. However, it would take a phenomenal performance."

Natalie Brown, a UNCW junior: "I think St. John's could beat them. Don't ask me why. Women's intuition I guess."

Meanwhile, others are convinced that 1985 is the year of the Hoya:

"Georgetown won't get beat, no way," said sophomore swingman George Durham of the Hawks.

"I agree they (Georgetown) are playing too well right now not to win the whole thing," echoed UNCW point guard Bobby Jo Springer.

"I don't think anyone can beat them," UNCW assistant coach Bobby Martin said, "they have the chemistry and know what it takes to win."

Marc Ellington, UNCW diving coach: "No question Georgetown will win it. I'd bet the ranch on it."

UNCW Receives Biology Grant

News Bureau

Marine biotechnology is the underlying thrust of a research project at the University of North Carolina at Wilmington that is examining how bacteria in North Carolina estuarine sites adapt to their polluted environments.

UNCW has been awarded a $9,878 grant by the U.S. Department of Commerce through the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration (NOAA) Sea Grant Program, plus an additional $5,322 supplied by the UNC Sea Grant Program. The project is directed by Ronald K. Sizemore, associate professor at UNCW's biology department. Along with graduate student Stan Sherman, they are evaluating "Plasmid Incidence and Multiplicity in Marine Vibrios as an Indicator of Estuarine Pollution."

The purpose of the research is to study how bacteria transfer plasmids, or extra genes, from one cell to another and thus change the genetic potential of the cell. For example, in the case of one strain of gonorrhea, the virus picked up as plasmid that soon allowed it to become immune to penicillin.

Sizemore is especially interested in vibrios, a very important genus of marine bacteria, which contain species capable of causing human diseases in crab, shrimp and fish. "We think vibrios are adapting to pollutants by picking up extra plasmids," Sizemore said. "We are testing this theory through use of the grant to see if this adaption is the occurrence of natural genetic engineering."

Election Results From Last Week

Current SGA vice-president Paul Bell will assume the presidency after a landslide victory over James Moore last week. Bell, who has served under president Eric Squires for two consecutive years, will take office April 1.

The highlight of the election was the battle between Lynn Ward and Daniella Sullivan for the vice-president's position, with Sullivan winning 303-302. Six recounts were needed. See related story, page

Election Squabbles Arise

Lynn Franklin
Managing Editor

The recent Student Government elections have been the cause of a great deal of controversy. Several candidates have filed formal complaints about illegal campaign procedures.

The complaints were filed by Lynn Ward, who ran for SGA Vice President, and Ed Troublefield, who ran for Senior Class President. The problems arose from several candidates campaign posters, the early closing of the polling places, and the vote counting procedures.

There was an objection to several poster sizes and the locations the campaign posters could be placed.

The Candidate Election Procedure rules state that posters can not be placed on any "campus run bulletin board".

Daryl McNair, Chairman of the Election Board, says that the posters that were in question belonged to Daniella Sullivan who was Ward's opponent for Vice President. "I checked the posters and they were not in violation of the rules because they were placed on bulletin boards run by the cafeteria and communications club", said McNair.

"Any bulletin board on campus is a campus bulletin board," said Ward. "The cafeteria and the communications club just rented them out," he said.

Troublefield objected to posters placed on walls by his opponent, Tim Dellinger. The posters were illegal and were removed. The Election Board felt that although the posters

Ed Troublefield and Lynn Ward are appealing their defeats in last week's elections after citing wide disregard of campaign rules. See story at left.

UNCW Faculty Bypasses Chance

It wasn't so much what they did, it's what they didn't do that has cast a dark cloud on the competency of the faculty of UNCW.

A recent news release distributed by the development office stated that the presence of Donald Henderson and Father Canon Robin Lamburn, who were winners of the Schweitzer award, "would give students and faculty the chance to meet and mingle with great models to live by."

The chance to mingle was indeed given, as each of these men scheduled several hours on Wednesday and Thursday for this purpose. Henderson, who helped eradicate smallpox from the world, and Lamburn, who has sacrificed fifty-five years to help lepers in Africa, received a moderate number of visits. But sadly, only a couple of these visits were from the faculty.

On Thursday night, at the award's ceremony, the results were similar. Dr. Shinn, who helped coordinate the event, and Dr. James Sabella, who attended, were among the exceptions.

"This is an embarrassment," said senior Joel Smith. "Two incredible men like this come to our campus and the academic community doesn't show much of an interest."

The event, which included a number of international guests, was a success only because of the efforts of university personnel like Mimi Cunningham and Delores Kirk.

And the faculty? Let the record show they passed up the opportunity to meet two legends, and in effect left behind apathetic traces in their ambition to improve and learn.

Living on-campus has a lot of advantages...no bills, no rent and no long walks to school. But this semi-paradise has one major drawback--Room Inspections!

My mom LOVES the idea! Her eyes lit up with excitement and glee when I wearily told her of my first experience last year. I'm not a neatnik by the wildest stretch of the imagination, and she's glad someone's keeping me in line.

This year, though, it's gotten worse! I have so much more clutter, and room inspections keep getting more frequent!! And more Sneaky!!

We used to be warned about a week ahead of time...and believe me, I could use all the warning I got!! This time they put signs up on Monday--"Room Inspections Wednesday, Thursday, Friday." YIKES!! Two days?! NO Way!!

My room's full to bursting with all my stuff! I have too many books, which I cram into the cubbyholes of my desk. This leaves no room for my plethora of textbooks, so I shove them under my bed, along with two suitcases, a photo album, cross-stitch stuff, assorted shoes I can't fit into the closet because my laundry basket takes up too much room, old tests, and anything else that can't be readily classified or fit somewhere else!

My desk is cluttered by my make-up mirror, a bulletin board, too much make-up and assorted decorative articles. This means I do my homework on my bed--convenient because my school books are under it, remember?

Anyway, it all boils down to too much stuff and not enough room!! And now, not even enough TIME!!! Sadly, I don't have the inclination either!

Letter to the Editor

Editor,

I am writing in regard to the movies which students were able to view in the resident halls in the past. It is my understanding that an average of nine movies were shown in the halls each week, and now, due to some ridiculous $3,000 license needed to show these movies, we are no longer privileged to have this activity. I am writing this to encourage other students who would like to have these movies returned to the resident halls and the new programming building next year to write to the seahawk and/or sign the petitions that will be available in the cafeteria this week. We need students to show concern for this matter so we may obtain funding from SGA to bring back the good old movies.

Debora Forsythe

Editor,

I am interested in seeing the movies made available for residents halls again. What ever happened to them? With the prices of movies these days, who wouldn't want the movies returned to the resident halls?

Bette Jo Howard

Editor,

Hello again, I am Bill Sprenkle and I want to thank you for taking the time to vote and especially those fellow students that supported me to put me in the SGA senate. I'll do my best to remember that I am your representative to the senate and work for what is good for the UNCW student body as a whole. Please feel free to approach me with a school issue or opinion whenever you see me, I welcome the input. The senate generally meets every Thursday at 6 p.m. on the first floor of the cafeteria, I hope to see you there. My UNCW P.O. Box is number 5292.

Stillpoint

By Bob Haywood

What has happened to our dreamers, our visionaries; those whose description of how the world might be stirs us and helps us break out of our self-serving plans into a world with wider horizons and greater possibilities than we have from our own small vantage point.

Left to our own devices, it seems that many of us dream small and self-serving dreams of financial success and pleasure in a life world confined to a family, a few friends, a job.

Left in the hands of our nation's leaders, we are being presented with a mean-spirited vision of a nation protected on all sides by nuclear weapons reaching out and scooping up more and more of the world's resources to keep our own internal consumer process operating. That process helps the middle and upper classes become more so, and those on the lower rungs of our society and the world's society move lower still.

Dreams and visions of how life might be, was meant to be, are not frivolous appendages to the reality of our day to day life. They can be a powerful force that pull us into our future with a strong sense of direction and, in addition, motivate us to take the risks of moving in new directions in our personal and spiritual development.

Our forefathers were pulled across the wild Atlantic, at least, some of them, by dreams of freedom and a life filled with unlimited possibilities. Hebrews in the Old Testament were pulled out of slavery and into a lonely wilderness by the vision of a "Promised Land" and the possibility of being a blessing to other nations. For me, the vision of the Kingdom of God keeps pulling me through and beyond some smaller and more self-serving dreams. It is a vision of a world of Shalom, of peace where love and concern for the welfare of others as well as our own is the dominant force.

What is your vision, your dreams, not just for yourself, but for all of us. What do you believe in? Think about it! Write it out! Get a grasp on it; for there is power to be had, power for living day by day that comes from the sense of purpose and direction created by our dreams. Become visionaries for your own sake and for the sake of all of us.

Dear Egbert?

Dear Egbert,

I have a problem. It has to do with my boyfriend (who I will call Jay). Well, actually Jay's parents. They pamper him to death. Everytime we go to his house for the weekend it's the same old story: "Jay, can we do this for you? Jay, can we do that for you?" In the meantime, they treat me like a rival. I get the feeling they think I'm going to take him away. What can I do?

Signed:
The Outsider

Dear Outsider,

What to do? Talk to Jay about it. If that is not possible, or gets nowhere, subtly include yourself in the situation over the weekend. You can do this by offering to help, or initiating a conversation, with their interests in mind. Most of all, do not cut yourself off or this will seem threatening to them. If you make yourself part of the family, they will treat you like part of the family.

Dear Egbert,

I agree with your advice to Elfman Mangrove III. However, I hope you'll let me add my own advice.

I think Elfman should gather enough courage to get to know the "chic" he likes. She might turn out to be a special girlfriend. She might turn out to be a good friend. Or like you say, they might not have anything in common. But if he doesn't get to know her, he might think for years about what might have been.

For many years I, like Elfman, was scared of women. And for many years I looked back to women I liked, but was too scared to get to know. Then I got enough guts to get to know a very friendly lady. While we didn't become boyfriend and girlfriend, I did find the best friend I've known in years. We got to be even better friends after she met another man whom she considers her special boyfriend. My friend once told me that I could never have too many friends. She really follows her own advice!

I've partially overcome my shyness by hoping I'll find another good friend as nice as her. And I've developed a new attitude towards women: Let's start as friends. Elfman might try adopting that attitude. It'll take a lot of pressure off him.

Best Wishes,
Marathon Man

Dear Marathon,

I hope Elfman will take your advice. It sure takes a special person, like you!

Egbert needs letters. Bring them by the Seahawk office in room 205E union or send them to P.O. Box 3868.

were placed illegally they had no effect on Troublefield's campaign.

Another complaint was about campaign materials being taped to a sidewalk. The flyers, which were part of current SGA Vice President Paul Bell's campaign, were still in question at the time they were put out. "Daryl went to the Dean to ask about them but I decided it was too much trouble and took them up before any decision had been made," Bell said. The Candidate Election Procedure Rules state that "No sign shall be permitted on or protrude into any public right-of-way, street or passageway." "The flyers were ruled to be in violation, said Bell, but by that time they had been removed". Another problem arose with the polling hours.

CAMP SEA GULL CAMP SEAFARER

SUMMER JOB OPENINGS FOR CAMP COUNSELORS at Camp Sea Gull (boys) and Camp Seafarer (girls). Serving as a camp counselor is a challenging and rewarding opportunity to work with young people, ages 7-16. Sea Gull and Seafarer are health and character development camps located on the coast of North Carolina and feature sailing, motorboating, and seamanship, plus many usual camping activities including a wide variety of major sports. Qualifications include a genuine interest in young people, ability to instruct in one phase of the camps' programs, and excellent references. For further information and application, please write a brief resume' of training and experience in area(s) skilled to Don Cheek, Director, Camps Sea Gull/Seafarer, P.O. Box 10976, Raleigh, North Carolina 27605.

Committee Convenes

The Search Committee charged with finding a new President for The University of North Carolina and its Advisory Committee will be meeting on the campus of Fayetteville State University in Fayetteville on Tuesday, April 9, 1985, at 7:30 p.m. The meeting will be in Butler Little Theater.

This meeting is part of a series of hearings that the Search Committee and Advisory Committee are conducting on various campuses across the State to give the citizenry of North Carolina--particularly those who have a special interest in the University--an opportunity to say where they think the statewide University should go in the years ahead and what kind of leadership should be sought for those years.

Everyone who is interested is cordially invited to the meeting in Fayetteville. Persons wishing to speak at the meeting are requested to call the Office of the Chancellor at Fayetteville (919,486-1141) by Friday, April 5. The exact amount of time to be allowed each speaker will depend upon the number of persons who request to be heard. Wherever possible, it is desirable that an organization or their group within the University or the community designate a single person as spokesman for the group.

Genovese to Speak

Eugene Genovese and Elizabeth Fox-Genovese, two distinguished professors of history from New York, will speak on "The Mind of the Master Class" as guest lecturers at UNCW at 7 p.m., Monday, April 1, in Bryan Auditorium. The lecture is an examination of the world view of slaveholders of both North and South America.

Sponsored by the UNCW history department and the UNCW Historical Society, the program is open free of charge to students, faculty, staff, and the public.

A member of the history faculty of the University of Rochester, Eugene Genovese is the author of several influential books on the history of the Old South and slavery. Among them are "The Political Economy of Slavery," which is a path-breaking interpretation of the causes of the Civil War, and "Roll, Jordan Roll," an analysis of slave life in the antebellum South.

In recent years he has been conducting comparative studies which contrast slaveholding society in the United States with those in Latin America and the Caribbean.

Elizabeth Fox-Genovese, a member of the history faculty at the State University of New York at Binghamton, has written "The Fruits of Merchant Capital."

Fox-Genovese has been instrumental in organizing a number of major programs designed to encourage the inclusion of women's history in the standard American history survey course at colleges across the country.

Genovese and Fox-Genovese are both currently fellows at the National Humanities Center at Research Triangle Park.

Petition. The diagram above serves double duty: Use it again for this puzzle, ignoring the numbers. Now it represents a new apartment building with eight apartments-four at the sides and four at the corners.

The housing director has received complaints from some tenants in the building. Apparently twice as many people have a southward view (toward a garbage dump) as look east (toward a sheet metal factory). Those who have a view look South. The lucky tenants with a northly view (toward the park) are only half as many as look East, toward the sheet-metal factory.

There are 20 tenants in the building, all told, and there is at least one in each apartment. How many people occupy each apartment?

The answer will appear in next week's Bit Bucket.

Drink Machines Can Frustrate

Popson
Contributor

Many students on campus race to the drink and snack machines to find that they only work about half the time.

The worst problems seem to be with the snack machines in Morton Hall, the snack and drink machines in King Hall and the Social Science building.

Students blame the machines for taking their money.

One of the most common problems with the snack machines is the food products get caught in the coils or the tramp doors. Students find this annoying but seldom try to get their money back.

Lee Paige, an education major, said the machine in King Hall should be replaced within two weeks.

Another person is annoyed besides the students. The vendor for the snack machines said Tuesday the problem is not the machines themselves. She pointed out that machines take a lot of abuse from students. "I find everything from bent coins to pennies in these machines." She said foreign coins have even been crammed into the machines.

It would be nice to see these machines working properly, it is an inconvenience to all involved. If the machine takes your money it would be nice to let the company know about it. If students are at fault this problem can be easily solved by using the proper coins.

Thanks to the unity displayed by the entire greek society and the efforts of greek life coordinator Ellen Servetnick, Greek Week V '85 was a huge success! All participants--winners as well as losers, displayed exuberant sportsmanship throughout the greek games. (Results of Greek Week winners were not available at presstime, but will be printed in the next issue of the continuing saga of "Behind the Greek Columns.")

Everyone who attended the WWIL Super Tour '85 in conjunction with Alpha Phi Alpha fraternity said it was jamm'n. One of the spectators Larry Russell said "The band was bad, real bad." The bands for the evening included: S.O.S., Nualnce with Vikkie Love, Rock Master Scott, The Dynamic Three and Whodini, who sang their smash hit "The Freaks Come Out at Night." We hope everyone who attended the concert felt as Larry did.

the parings were set-up giving a first round bye to regular season champions Delta Tau Delta and to the runners-up Pi Kappa Phi. In opening-round action the Tau Kappa Epsilon fraternity played a great game but came up short by two points to the Sigma Alpha Epsilon group. In other first round action the Chi Phi's soundly defeated the Kappa Sigma fraternity by twenty points. The upset of the year then occurred when the SAE's beat the undefeated Delts in a barn-burner of a game. In other semi-final match-up the Pi Kapps won over the Chi Phis 55-44. So the stage was set for the finals to begin at 4:30. In an unusually low scoring first-half, the Pi Kapps held the lead 14-10, and twenty minutes later, after going to the line eight times in the last two minutes of the game, the Pi Kapps held on the win 33-31. Trophies were awarded at the opening ceremonies of Greek Week. Everyone enjoyed refreshments provided--six-foot subs from Subway and tea and brownies from ARA, and had a good time playing ball.

On behalf of the entire Union staff, thank you for choosing the Union as the site of your campus service project for Greek Week V.

Our windows just sparkle! You did such a good job. From what I observed, Greek Week V is off to a very good start. It seems to be accomplishing its purpose to spread the word on campus that "the time is right for Greeks."

Good luck, and thank you again for a most welcome gift of time and elbow grease.

His world, from our view, is without luxury and without self pleasure.

No modern conveniences exist in the small, hot East African village of Kindwitwi, in Tanzania. Since leaving London in 1930 he has been in this third world nation--the last 20 years with lepers. By centering himself in a leper colony, he has made himself the only source of confidence these people have ever known.

During this time, he has had to overcome a racial barrier and a superstitious myth. The people of Tanzania believe that lepers are cursed by God, and force them to live in seclusion apart from the "normal" citizens. In time, even the lepers believe they are cursed, and make life hell for themselves. Enter Father Canon Robin Lamburn, who has stepped in and made all the difference. By making farmers and craftsmen out of the lepers, he has given them a sense of worth. For this, he is the winner of the 1985 Albert Schweitzer prize of humanities.

And his reaction, in Tanzania, upon hearing of his nomination? "I am most grateful for this generous award," said the 4'6", 81 year old Lamburn. "Especially for my small and unworthy services."

Lamburn's most dominant trait is his great humility. He shuns questions about himself and his motivations, instead speaking of a cure that has been discovered for leprosy, and the people who live with him. All of his abundant energy, which allows him to walk six miles a day and manage the village, is thrust away from himself. In this case, self-denial acts to enhance the lepers.

Dr. Aleck Che-Mponda is on the International Selection Committee and a history professor in Tanzania. Che-Mponda nominated Lamburn, saying "when I was named to the committee, my first thought was to choose a black man who had made an impact on Africa. But at a birthday party in the village I met this man, and heard about his great life in the leper colony, and decided to do some research..."

Che-Mponda learned that, after studying theology at Oxford in the 1920s, Lamburn heeded the call to help the poor and afflicted. His resolve, Che-Mponda notes, could not be swayed.

"When Tanzania received its independence from Britain (1961), almost all of the European missionaries left, but Lamburn stayed. His love and compassion transcends skin color or nationality. He's true to his cause."

Dr. Hugh Anderson of Scotland, who ultimately chooses the Schweitzer winner, says "Here you have a man who turned his back on civilization, not for the glory, but to help. He is a true student of Jesus."

Lamburn's demeanor is one of a happy, jovial man. He has no remorse in leaving the modern world of high rises and microwaves for one of jungles, wild animals and extreme heat.

Why? "The people need me," he answers. "And God's love."

Lamburn's strategy of dealing with the lepers has been to repress sympathy and make them self-sufficient. His caring example, plus the fact that his stay has spanned three generations, has earned him a fatherly acceptance. Each of the lepers tends to a vegetable garden, and are taught domestic skills like converting rubber tires into sandals.

In Kindwitwi, man and beast share the land. "We have to move out of our corrugated huts and sleep by our gardens during the harvest season or the monkeys and tigers will get the food," Lamburn says, donning a mild British accent.

"Don't get me wrong, there is a mail system (once a check from Austria took six months to get there and was outdated) and roads, and in the neighboring lands, vehicles, but it is very natural here."

At most any time of day, Lamburn can stroll to the river and see hippos, and warns guests to wear shoes to guard against hookworms. The staple of their plant growth is rice. All of the villagers fish with ease, "Oh, the rivers are filled with them (fish)."

Albert Schweitzer, the great musician, scientist, and philosopher, once remarked that "there is such a thing as being too detached."

He was explaining how man must go his own way, yet has to work within a framework of his neighbors to achieve. Father Lamburn is a prime example of this, having discarded worldly ways to become a distant individual within a deprived uncared-for group. In this way, he mimics Gandhi, the savior who also left Britain to help a colonial nation.

Leprosy is a disease, contrary to common belief, that seldom causes death and is difficult to spread (if medicine is taken). Two types exist, one that afflicts the skin, the other bones. Both can be neutralized by a common drug, but to Lamburn's frustration, another more expensive drug that could wipe out leprosy is not marketed in the third world nations.

Because leprosy can appear in mild, hidden forms, many try to avoid a drop in status by not seeking help. Lamburn sadly tells of one teenager who tried to convince him he had a sore shoulder instead of the dreaded disease. "I could see the fear in his eyes," Lamburn remembers.

This is the kind of embroidered people Lamburn has chosen to isolate himself with. And he shows no regrets, only a loving peace that touches everyone he meets.

Last week he came to UNCW (only the second day in 20 years he has left Tanzania) and offered a short acceptance speech at the awards ceremony. Lamburn eagerly joins in casual conversation and laughs a lot in small crowds, but when he speaks to large crowds he turns solemn and speaks with purpose. At the awards ceremony, he rose up and spoke words that were both simple and moving.

"The reason this award is given is because people care, and the reason you are here tonight is because you care."

The same can be said of Father Canon Robin Lamburn, a caring man.

Whoa... "Tuff Turf"? I have to admit I was a little bit skeptical about this one, but I was by myself and didn't feel up to such unsettling films as "Friday the 13th part V (II)", "Mask" (what does he look like?), or most horrifying of all, "Porky's Revenge".

As it turned out, this wasn't half as bad as I thought it might be, but I thought it might be real bad, so that still doesn't make it that good!

"Tuff Turf" is another teenage identity crisis movie that embodies all the rebellion, frustration and misguided passions inherent in teen life. We're smacked upside the head with a lot of big ideas--the importance of individual knowledge, freedom, and expression; the importance of family, friendship and love. The hero of the film embodies this need for self-identity, as he stands out so sharply against the rest of the high school crowd.

In fact, he seems to be the only individual in this whole group of underaged look-alikes. They're all involved in a kind of communal rite of passage that defies uniqueness and incites violent reactions.

Sounds pretty heavy duty, right? Well, it is...sometimes. One of the strange things about this movie is that in the midst of all of this intense drama, some bad comedy and "flashdance" type exercise make their way onto the screen; overblown violence and gushy sentimentality rear their ugly heads as well. Music is an important means of expression for most young people, and the movie's soundtrack captures that raw energy in some neat, punkish songs, but please...no more out of place dancing across the table top!

Director Fritz Kiersch has made a film that looks like it might have been better. Several interesting camera shots which capture feelings of isolation and nonconformity support that belief. The often heavy-handed, yet existent theme supports that belief. Unfortunately, we'll never really know what this might have been like, because the "god" of teenage movies was the back yelling things like, "Make them dance! Make them dance!"

Now showing at Cinema 6.

School Kids Record Review

Twigg

Like flies on flypaper it would be nice to say something about Mick Jagger's solo LP that would stick. She's the Boss is so intentionally slick in production and keyed in to Jagger's obvious strengths this record almost escapes scrutiny.

It's ironic to note that actually this is nothing new for Mick. No doubt rock's greatest all-time vocalist (that's right McCartney wimped out!) has had fun over the years showing us varying intensities of sleaziness while secretly coveting the magazine Town and Country. (Just name one person you know who reads this.)

Actually with She's the Boss we get the basics, Stone's party songs with Jagger's amazingly controlled rasp out front. Hiring the best session people-- reggae's deepest bottom of Robbie Shakespeare and Sly Dunbar, adding guitar sizzle from Jeff Beck (rock's greatest guitarist--yes Eric Clapton has wimped out!) and Pete Townshend; incorporating the whole with the keyboards of Herbie Hancock.

These folks do play but under somewhat controlled conditions making sure Mick delivers the goods vocally. The intended impact of the disc is not far removed from a fellow colleague--the man of a thousand hands, Peter Wolf!

With most superstars a solo LP can offer opportunity to express a more personal, creative direction apart from the band. With Jagger there has never been much need to express anything of a real intrinsic value, thus with the songwriting of this LP She's the Boss becomes a Stone's record minus the Rolling Stone. Because the guitar of Keith Richard's is lacking, obvious rough texture has been replaced by quicksilver funk, R&B, and dance leads.

In fact, it has been mentioned that for this session Mick had to lock up drunken, party crasher Keith who wanted to play on his solo. After twisting off the interior door knob so Keith wouldn't hurt himself--it was overheard Keith screaming spasmodically that Mick was selling out the Stones for an extra record contract. There was no telling how long it took Keith to kick the door down but the sessions came out real good with at least two or three great Stone's toons, oops Mick tunes, being layed down.

Hansel and Gretel, and Cinderella are treated with often hilarious results.

Typically, that treatment is nonclassical and very modern. The quiet, subdued coloring of a simple set nicely creates an atmosphere through which the eight actresses move.

Their paint-splashed shirts and clown-white faces stand out sharply against the sterile background. As they twist and contort their bodies through the intervals between each fairy tale, an emotional feeling is conveyed rather than something more concrete.

That's good, because poetry often lends itself to a "feeling" in addition to, or rather than a particular statement. And if "feeling" necessarily implies the involvement of the audience, the audience is forced into further involvement when the actresses jump out at them or speak directly to them. (Never sit in the front row!)

Humor runs rampant throughout the adaptation, and it usually works quite well. People are "persistent as Jehovah's Witnesses" and fear death before seeing Brooklyn. The narrator of the tale, an old witch, (well played by Gini Bollinger), embodies the perversely funny, hyperactive performance apparent in all of the actresses. The seven players look alike, and their interpretations of various roles seem to call for group recognition rather than individual recognition.

Sarah Burton, the director of "Transformations" can be credited with creating an interesting and often successful adaptation. My curiosity is certainly up, and I'll be watching for the next Reader's Theatre Production.

Bill Raises Controversy

Nebraska Cornhusker football makes money, and State Senator Ernie Chambers thinks the University of Nebraska players should share the profits.

Chambers submitted a bill to the state legislature in January that would make UN-Lincoln football players state employees, and pay them salaries to play the game for four years.

But college football spokesmen say Chambers' generous plan would transform the "Huskers into professional athletes, and disqualify them from National Collegiate Athletic Association (NCAA) and Big Eight competition.

"Football players are given little incentive to be scholars, and few persons care how they perform academically as long as eligibility is maintained," the bill states.

Players are "entitled to some tangible return for the strenuous work they perform and the revenue they generate for the benefit of the university," it says.

"Most athletes' primary purpose for going to school is the pursuit of a diploma," argues Tom Yeager, NCAA spokesman. "And most schools take exception to the hired-hand status of athletes."

"It's a false idea that students come to a school just to play athletics," agrees Lonny Rose, the University of Kansas' assistant athletic director.

"Students are students, whether athletes or non-athletes," he adds. "To classify them as employees of the university or the state is inappropriate."

Not only inappropriate, some say, but against NCAA rules.

While Chambers was unavailable for comment, his bill specifies "Nothing in this section shall be construed to make such a person a professional athlete."

But, such "pay for play" legislation violates NCAA amateur status rules.

"If an institution can't comply with NCAA legislation, and the other members don't want to change the legislation, it becomes a question of could that institution continue to exist within the NCAA," Yeager explains.

The legislation would give some student athletes an unfair advantage over others, adds Syracuse Athletic Director John Croughamel.

"If you change the rules for some, you must change them for all," he insists. "It's important that we strongly adhere to a code of amateur athletics at the college level."

Croughamel claims he understands Chambers' belief that student athletics "are not paid or compensated in a comparative way," but "what value is their college degree? It's not just room and board. It's what it prepares them to do upon graduation."

While the bill's passage could open a Pandora's Box for college athletic departments and organizations, the fans would lose one of the hardest-fought rivalries in college football.

"I don't know if the bill would make the Cornhuskers professionals," comments Wade Walker, Oklahoma's athletic director. "But there are limitations on who you can play in the NCAA, and we wouldn't be able to play them."

Nebraska officials could be the bill's biggest opponents.

When Chambers submitted the legislation last month, UN-L assistant football coach Michael Corgan called it "illegal as hell. It's a violation of NCAA rules."

"If those people were declared employees of the athletic department and received pay, they would be declared ineligible and there wouldn't be any football team. You can't play for pay," added assistant athletic director Donald Bryant.

"Nebraska may be close to number one in football," Chambers countered, "but Nebraska may be close to number nothing in understanding this bill. The irony will be when some other state beats Nebraska in implementing an idea that originated in Nebraska."

But the bill has little chance of passing, the NCAA's Yeager believes. Chambers has introduced similar legislation, unsuccessfully, several times.

"It makes great press," Yeager concedes. "But nothing much is happening with it."

If the bill passes, it could prove expensive. Nebraska again had one of the most successful recruiting efforts on last week's national letter-of-intent day, the National High School Recruiting Service in Houston reports.

"But the senator must have a low opinion of UN-L basketball players," Yeager laughs. "He doesn't include them."

Enrollment Declines

For the second year in a row, fewer students want to go on to law school, even though over 90 percent of law school graduates find jobs within six months after they graduate, two new studies reveal.

Applications to the nation's 173 American Bar Association (ABA) accredited law schools have dropped 12 percent over the last two years, according to a soon-to-be-released study by the Law School Admissions Council (LSAC).

After a modest increase between 1981 and 1982—from 71,026 to 72,946—law applications have plunged to a low of 64,078 this year, the study shows.

The law schools got 10 percent fewer applications than they did in 1983.

Changing demographics, rising tuition costs, a perceived glut of lawyers in the job market and a shift in student interest to engineering and other high tech, high paying majors are responsible for the decline, speculates Bruce Zimmer, LSAC's executive director.

"There was an explosive growth of lawyers in the seventies," adds ABA President William Falsgraf. "But government cutbacks and the economy have slowed that growth somewhat."

Consequently, "students hear that the bloom is off the rose in law and they switch to other fields."

Soaring tuition costs—top law schools now cost up to $10,000 a year—coupled with a decrease in the amount of financial aid available to students also have driven some students away from law, he says.

"Costs are higher than ever, and are something we need to control as much as possible," Falsgraf warns. "We are particularly concerned that rising tuition will tend to decrease the number of minorities entering law school."

But despite the 12 percent drop in applications over the last two years, Falsgraf says most law schools still can't take all the students who apply and their enrollments remain level.

And the number of law school grads who found jobs within six months of graduation held steady at 90.6 percent this year, another new study points out.

"We've been doing studies on the placement rate for law graduates for the last 10 years, and it's always been about 90 percent," says Colleen Moore of the National Association for Law Placement (NALP).

"Even as government and other markets slow down, lawyers are finding new areas to go into, so placement rate for new lawyers is holding level," she says.

Animal Research Draws Fire From Activists

Courtesy/College Press

In one of the more ominous wrinkles of the growing campus animal rights movement, a death threat recently forced a University of California-San Diego professor to cancel a surgery class.

Alarmed university administrators, who claim the threat is the fourth against UCSD faculty members in recent months, have assigned bodyguards to Dr. A.R. Moossa, the professor who had to cancel the class in which students learn surgical procedures using anesthetized dogs.

Seeking to minimize the impact of the threats and disruptions, Moossa and administrators are withholding comment about the incidents.

But prominent animal rights activists disclaim the threats, and contend the movement to protect animals involved in research experiments, which has spread rapidly around the nation in the last three years, is not turning to violence against people.

"Everything we've done is peaceful," insists Alex Pacheco, chairman of People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals (PETA), one of the nation's largest animal rights groups.

"Humans are animals, too," he says, "and no animal or human should be harmed."

PETA members nevertheless celebrated the cancellation of the surgery class.

"We challenge the belief that we can use, kill or cut up animals because we want to," Pacheco explains.

"The situation is getting more drastic all the time," he observes. "We need to take off the gloves and hit as hard as we can. It's not a game."

The activists argue it's necessary because their opponents took off the gloves long ago.

"It's a mistake to think animal rights activists don't get their share of intimidation," adds Gary Francione, University of Pennsylvania law professor and animal rights proponent.

"We just learn to live with it," he says. "You can't let it upset you."

Francione belongs to a committee investigating animal experiments at the university's Head Injuries Lab.

Administrators deny PETA's claim that lab violates state and federal animal research laws.

They charge the activists themselves acted unethically when they stole a videotape of lab experiments to make a film condemning animal research.

But such tensions are rising on many campuses.

Activists from the radical Animal Liberation Front raided San Diego's City of Hope Hospital in December, freeing nearly 100 animals and seizing copies of research files.

The stolen files showed that more than 50 percent of the hospital's lab animals died "before they were supposed to," PETA's Pacheco says. "They died from things like negligence, bleeding, overdoses and choking to death."

In Arizona, five Animal Rights Coalition members were convicted in January of criminal trespassing during a University Medical Center sit-in. University of Arizona officials, however, gave in to activists' demands for an animal rights representative on the school's animal-care committee.

Cal-Berkeley animal rights proponents have provoked two recent United States Department of Agriculture (USDA) investigations of animal care labs.

The USDA and the National Institute of Health, overseers of animal-use research, want stricter, more costly lab standards, and a broadened role for campus animal care committees.

Activists claim Berkeley's facilities are inadequate.

Maryland University Cancels Searches

University of Maryland officials now have stopped searching students as they emerge from campus cafeterias, figuring students have learned not to steal silverware.

"We curtailed the stealing," reports Matthew Sheriff, director of food services at the College Park campus, where students have lifted about 15,000 glasses and 25,000 pieces of silverware and stolen countless sandwiches since fall term started.

"We wanted to make students aware they couldn't take food out," he explains.

The way he did it, however, was to have campus officials search students for food and utensils as they

At the University of Pennsylvania, where Jacobs is dining services director, computerized records help "students know that if they steal something, we'll find out about it pretty quick," Jacobs says.

But food and utensil theft is getting to be so bad that schools nationwide are relying less on student honor codes and more on stiff fines to control it, he notes.

Jacobs questions whether searches help, however, saying they're inconsistent with college efforts to get students to behave like adults by treating them as adults.

Maryland's Sheriff says the policy permitting him to search students' bags and packages has been "on the left the cafeterias.

"It's an invasion of my personal privacy," freshman Steve Broadman told The Diamondback, the student newspaper, after his book bag was searched. "From what I know about the law, I think it's illegal."

The searches may be "on shaky ground," agrees campus legal aid director William Salmond.

Most colleges figure students will steal food and supplies equivalent to three to seven percent of sales, says Don Jacobs, president-elect of the National Association of College and University Food Services.

And most control theft by using computerized records to monitor purchases and inventories, Jacobs adds.

books" for a long time, but never instituted until now.

"(Sheriff) didn't want people taking out sandwiches and apples" because a percentage of their profit is from people who pay for a meal plan and then don't eat," Skinner says.

Two weeks ago, the University of Texas announced its food service was in debt because too many students actually were using their campus meal tickets.

Sheriff says the problem at Maryland was that the theft rate had increased.

He has suspended the searches because the theft problem is "now under control."

"We curtailed the stealing. We wanted to make students aware they can't take food out," Sheriff adds.

"I hope we don't have to do it again," Sheriff said.

Skinner, The Diamondback's assistant managing editor, believes the "public outcry," not the easing of theft, convinced Sheriff to stop the searches.

"A lot of people were upset about it," she says.

DOCTOR, I REALIZE THAT TRANSPLANTING ORGANS FROM OTHER SPECIES CAN BE SUCCESSFUL SOMETIMES.

Women's Soccer Sets Schedule

After a short fall season, the UNCW women's soccer club is back in action and we'd like your support. With a full roster now, we will be taking on such clubs as The Pioneer Club of UNC-Chapel Hill and NC State. In our division, we will be facing the teams from Camp Lejeune and Morehead City.

Our season began in February, when on the 24th, we shut out the Morehead City Sandies 9-0.

The high scorer of the game was Jennifer Wilson (club president) with 4 goals. Behind her was Cherie Bontz with 3 and bringing the final score to 9, were Kim Kopka (club vice-president) and Kathy Goodwin, each with 1 goal. The goal keepers, who posted the shut out, were Martha Davis and Andrea Arenovski (club secretary).

With our new coach, Gary Wirth, we are looking forward to a successful season and possibly a trip to the finals. If you'd like to come out and cheer us on, we'd appreciate it! We played a home game on Brook's Field Saturday, March 20, against Chapel Hill's Pioneer Club, and on Sunday, 21st, we played the NC State Club. This weekend, UNCW's women will travel to Morehead City Saturday, and on Sunday we will match up with Camp Lejeune. The scores will be posted in the next issue of the Seahawk. The last home game before the semi-finals will be Sunday, April 14, so everyone come out and cheer us on! See you on the side lines!

The polling places closed about one and a half hours early on Wednesday, March 19. The early closing caused several candidates to feel that they lost some important votes.

Lynn Ward lost by only one vote to Daniella Sullivan. Ward feels that the extra voting time would have made a difference in the outcome of his campaign.

McNair, who was in charge of the ballot boxes, said that there was no way to open the polls with no people to run them. "I went all around campus the Friday beforehand and begged people to sign-up to help. I asked the Senate as well as the Greeks." "There was simply not enough help," he said.

Students were allowed to vote until 5 p.m. on either voting day though. The SGA office accepted several votes the afternoon of the 19th before 5 p.m.

Ward objects to this because he says that few students were aware that they could still vote and the voters who did vote later were brought up there by Sullivan.

Ward also has objections to Sullivan being declared the winner when she did not have a clear majority of the votes. Ward feels that with only one vote difference a run-off would be in order. According to Ward, all votes, including illegal ones such as write-ins for Mickey Mouse, should be counted in determining the majority.

According to the Election Board, which met on Monday, March 25, to rule on the complaints, only those write-in votes for eligible candidates can be counted.

Mr. Troublefield's complaints were also dismissed at this meeting.

McNair admits that the rules governing the elections are too general. He also feels that no matter what the rules were that there would be problems with interpretations.

Ward and Troublefield plan to pursue their cases in the Student Supreme Court.

Group Offers Gift

News Bureau

Students and faculty at The University of North Carolina at Wilmington this year will benefit from gifts totaling more than $6,500 provided by the Friends of UNCW.

Organized in 1963 to help what was then Wilmington College, the Friends of UNCW are area citizens who work to improve the quality of education at UNCW in a variety of ways. Including gifts presented for the 84-85 academic year, support to the university from the Friends totals more than $100,000.

As in the past, gifts from the Friends go to promote and support educational, scientific and charitable projects on behalf of UNCW. Gifts are made to all areas of the university--academic affairs, students affairs, and business affairs as well as to the library.

Among the most interesting gifts will be $390 to UNCW Campus Police for the purchase of an ALCO-Sensor II. The hand-held, battery-operated chemical analysis device is used to test a person's breath to determine if there is alcohol in the blood stream.

Chief of Campus Police Joe Johnson said the device will be used for two purposes at UNCW--educational and for law enforcement. The Campus Police will work with the division of student affairs to conduct drinking experiments.

"We will have students do physical tests, before, during, and after consuming alcohol and record the results for them to see," Johnson said.

He said the Campus Police might also take it to parties and perform random tests. In a law enforcement environment, the device will assist an officer in deciding if he has probable cause to arrest a motorist for driving while impaired.

Funds to the academic area will be divided among chemical and physical sciences, earth sciences, English, history and the library. The chemistry and physical sciences department will receive video equipment. Earth sciences will purchase two glass display cases with their gift. A video cassette recorder and television and motion picture projector will be purchased by the English department. Speakers will be provided for Bryan Auditorium, which is used by the history department, English department, and many public events.

Janice Kingoff, president of the Friends, also noted that funds are being allocated for a major gift to Randall Library when expansion is completed.

"This year, we are putting aside $1,500 into a fund that will be part of a larger gift. When the expanded library is finished, we would like to give an impressive gift," she said.

Continuing a recent focus the Friends have on improving student life, they will gain support the University Union by furnishing a slide projector, international flags representative of countries of UNCW students, and soliciting another piano for the large meeting room.

Kingoff noted that the Friends hope for a donation of a piano for the Union. "With people moving into condominiums and their children growing up and leaving home, there are nice pianos around that people would possibly like to donate to the university if they only knew of the need. The Friends will be seeking such a donation," she said.

In 1984, the Friends gave the Union a wide screen television set and provided art display panels in the lounge and study areas of the Union. Some of this year's gift funds will also be spent on the art display panels.

The Office of Minority Affairs will benefit from funds to support a guest lecturer during Black History Month.

Bonnie Culbreth was chairman of the 1984-85 committee.

History Week

Nancy Slovik
Contributor

This year's National Women's History Week, March 25-29, proved to be a great success at UNCW. Sponsored by the UNCW Faculty Women's Network and the Division of Student Affairs, the week involved a series of dramas, speakers, films, and discussions revolving around the theme "Women, Money and Exploitation."

"I think the week has been great," commented Dr. Kathleen Berkeley, a member of the Faculty Women's Network. "I just came back to my office because I had to get to a class, but discussion was still going on after our last program ended--that was 40 minutes ago!"

That program, a film and discussion panel on sexist imagery in advertising, was attended by over 50 people. Other events also attracted full crowds. The "Phyllis Donawho Show" attracted an audience of 75 and the film "Come Back to the Five and Dime, Jimmy Dean, Jimmy Dean" drew 100 people.

Community members, students, and faculty members attended the week long series of events. Several instructors also brought their classes to some programs. Student participation in discussions following each event was very good, Dr. Berkeley felt.

When asked if she thought many women were educated and enlightened as a result of the programs, Dr. Berkeley said she would alter her answer to say a lot of people were educated and enlightened since about one-quarter of the audiences during the week were male. "It's important to raise the consciousness of everybody. It takes the awareness of both sexes for progress to be made."

This year's week long series of events is the first time in four years there has been more than a one day agenda on campus celebrating National Women's History Week.

The UNCW faculty Women's Network hopes to improve upon this year's success by bringing in speakers from beyond Wilmington next year. In order to do this they will need to apply for a grant for more funds. Two possible sources of grant money are the NC Humanities Council and the Z. Smith Reynolds Foundation, each of which funds educational programs.

In the past the Faculty Women's Network received funds from Dean Plyer's office and organizations such as the Historical Society, YWCA, and Business Women's Organization.

Business Week

Terri Cozias
Contributor

"Business Week was a huge success," exclaims Dr. Lee Sherman, chairman of the event. "We knew it was an ambitious endeavor beforehand and would take a lot of participation from the students."

This year the Cameron School of Business took on a few new strategies to draw attention. First of all, tickets were made up to avoid overcrowding and to eliminate confusion. A certain number were made up for each lecture. To create more involvement of students, the business fraternities were asked to administer, distribute and collect tickets. Sigma Alpha Beta administered and Phi Beta Lambda and the National Association of Accounting shared responsibility of distributing and collecting these tickets. The American Marketing Association participated by serving refreshments which were donated. Dennis Anderson, head of the McDonald's franchises here in Wilmington supplied breakfast on both days of lectures. The Coke Company donated Cokes for the students and lecturers in the afternoon sessions.

Sherman explains that the Aargh. Well, they finally did it. Somehow I suppose it was inevitable.

Last week the State House of Representatives voted to raise the legal drinking age to 21. The law will take effect on September 1, 1986. The legislature did find it in their hearts to give 19-20 year olds a break. They decided we will only have to pay a fine--$25--for being caught with alcohol and it will not go on our records. How thoughtful. Do these guys really feel that this is going to be a deterrent obviously not, or they wouldn't have put such a loose restriction on it. I for one will find a way to get around this. People have asked why I've made such a fuss about this since I didn't drink. Well, folks, who wants to go to Sports World on a Friday or Saturday night? How 'bout the mall? Oh well. Thanks State Legislature. You've really done me a big favor. I'm sure that you've stopped everyone under 21 from driving drunk. I wonder if you've stopped anyone. I ask because a young friend of mine was recently pulled for drunk driving. He was only 17. Get the picture?

The world needs disposable clothes. I know it's impractical, wanton and foolhardy, but life would be SO much easier without the fuss and bother of doing laundry.

Laundry commercials spend millions of dollars and thousands of seconds exhorting housewives to use their product for "fresh, clean-smelling clothes." The hired model-cum-housewives on the commercials derive such PLEASURE from the freshly-sorted loads, inhaling deeply the sweet, clean smell, smoothing lovingly their family's clothes, working valiantly to remove assorted stains. The products work well in the ads, and the clothes are never wrinkled, never bleeding, never faded.

When I do laundry it doesn't work that way.

TV never shows a housewife carting her laundry down four flights of stairs in a shredded plastic basket that threatens to deposit all her unmentionables near the entrance to the guy's floor. She never has to balance this delicate load on her knee while fumbling for her car keys, nor does she cram too much laundry into her too-small car for the trip to a coin laundromat. SHE owns a washer and a dryer. I go to the coin laundry.

All these laundries look the same, although with varying degrees of cleanliness. The dryers are over there, built into the walls and the washers are arranged in rows in the center. They put the hard, plastic, hospital waiting-room chairs far, far away from the place where your laundry shall be done.

Doing the laundry actually starts at home, with a decision, when you run out of clean outfits and begin recycling bits and pieces, but the technical aspect is performed at the laundromat.

Struggling in, I aim for an unoccupied row of washers and begin to sort; whites, darks, colors. This is the hard part, and requires careful vigilance. That red sock you throw into the underwear pile may prove your undoing, or at least, dye your dainties a not-so-fashionable shade of mottled red-pink. A pair of not-as-faded-as-you-thought jeans can spoil a whole load of bright yellows, peaches, pinks, greens with spots of indigo

Reading the labels can confuse you. Machine wash warm-tumble dry low, wash separately cold water, lay flat to dry, and the killer--DRY CLEAN ONLY--leap out at me while I merrily sort my mess. I worry about my clothes while they wash. ("Did I accidentally put the white 100 percent cotton, machine wash, cold, sweater in with the bright, plaid, perma-press, machine wash, warm pants?") But manufacturers just want you to be extra careful so that they won't be liable for accidents. Now I take the labels with a grain of salt (or detergent, whichever) and wash carefree. Use your own judgement, but you can't go wrong with machine-wash-warm-tumble-dry-low. At least that's what Mom told me. My clothes shrink, fade and stretch, even if I follow directions.

Adding detergent is another worrying hassle. The directions on the package expect you to measure the stuff in cups, half cups and quarter cups. Who carries a measuring cup with them to the laundromat? It's all you can do to get you and your clothes there. I do like Mom and just shake some detergent in. Peer into the bowels of the machine. Do you have some all over your clothes? Then close the lid and plug in your quarters. Pray.

Money. That's another problem. Scrounging quarters is a pain in the neck alleviated only by dollar-changing machines in the laundry itself. If you underestimate the number of loads, you have to change more dollars. If you overestimate, you sound like Santa's eight tiny reindeer with three dollars worth of quarters jingling with discarded pennies, dimes and nickles in your pockets. Either way, these laundries charge far too much to do a few simple loads of wash.

That's why we need disposable clothes. One wearing, then--phoom!--into the trashcan! No fuss, no muss, no hassle. Life would be so much easier, and less cases of housewife/student high blood pressure would be reported to the AMA. Laundry brings no pleasure, but disposable clothes--SHEER HEAVEN!!!

Stillpoint

By Bob Haywood

Passion Week and Easter. This is another of those times when my attempts to write for our pluralistic campus gives way before the awesome events of the Christian story.

Beneath the obvious story related to the events of Jesus' last week culminating in crucifixion and resurrection, events in themselves powerful and significant to those who have come to a deep and abiding faith in God through Christ; beneath those historical events lies the who struggle between forces of light and the forces of darkness.

As we emerge from the wintery landscape of the past few months into spring-time's shimmering blue and bursting green, we all feel anticipation for times of sunlight and happiness. We're ready for a resurgence of life and new possibilities from whatever direction they come. We like the feeling of being high whether it is a spiritual high or some peak experience that leads to the renewal of our excitement of being alive. I think

It is useful to remember that the spiritual high of Easter and the peak experience attendant to the resurrection are preceded by an experience in the darkness of Gethsemane and trial and crucifixion. All the power of Easter is rooted in the shadowy loneliness of the struggle of a man deciding whether he can endure the consequences of the path his belief and values led him on. It was and is in the Valley of the Shadow of loneliness and struggle and death that the power of Easter is rooted. Even in our natural experience of the seasons, the colder and bleaker our winter is, the brighter and more exciting is our spring.

All of us enjoy and yearn for days filled with happiness, sunshine; blue-sky days. But I am absolutely and unshakably convinced that all that we ever achieve or gain in our life that brings to us deep sense of meaning and soul-rooted joy comes after a time of winter in our lives. We are shaped by the soul work that takes place in the shadows and valleys of our life. We are shaped by the soul work that takes place in the shadows and valleys of our life. We are shaped and fashioned in the dark times when relationships end or change, when illness interrupts and forces us to give up control, and so on.

A part of the power of Easter is the realization and belief that death is not the end but a transition to another whole dimension of our life. All of us go through hard struggles, wintery times when relationships, self-concepts, plans for our future come to an end. Such endings, such dyings are painful; no doubt about it. But as surely as springtime follows winter, so Easter shows us that life follows any kind of dying.

Easter is not just something Christians "believe in". It is a powerful statement about the continuity of life that stands over against our perspective that death is the end of life. The struggles and dyings of our life are the winters in which our springtime joys and hopes are rooted and nourished and Easter holds for us the promise of victory.

NCSL Attends Session

Joe Pressley
Staff Writer

The University of North Carolina at Wilmington delegation of the North Carolina Student Legislature attended the 48th Annual Session March 20-24 at the old state capital building in Raleigh, N.C. on Thursday of that week. Governor Jim Martin and Lieutenant Governor Bob Jordan spoke to a joint session of the House and Senate of NCSL. Both congratulated NCSL on their growing strength and influence on issues of concern to the students of North Carolina. UNCW was represented by 16 members at the Annual Session.

"This was a very special session for UNCW" says Delegation Chairperson, Sandy Lawson. "We have been more unified than ever before and have become a major influence in NCSL." During the awards presentation Saturday evening at the banquet, Miss Lawson accepted the Most Improved Delegation on behalf of UNCW. Sunday afternoon during Final Plenary, the newly elected Governor of NCSL appointed Mark Signorelli State Treasurer for the 1985-86 year. The appointment was approved by acclamation and is the first state office appointment held by a UNCW member of the NCSL.

Charles Gavins' bill concerning An Act To Amend The General Statute 15A-1371 To Allow Crime Victims To Give Testimony At Parole Commission Hearings passed on Friday in the House by a vote of 42-35 and in the Senate 16-6. Mark Signorelli's bill concerning An Act To Prohibit The Use of Devices On Motor Vehicles To Detect Radar passed in the House by a vote of 55-33 and in the Senate 13-9. All bills passed by the House and Senate are sent to the NCSL Governor for signature and seal and mandated to the North Carolina General Assembly for consideration.

UNCW's delegation of NCSL will host the April Interim Council on the 12-14 in Bryon Auditorium. Students are invited to attend as it promises to be an exciting weekend of debate. Delegation Chairperson, Sandy Lawson urges anyone interested in NCSL to contact her at 395-6830 or attend our weekly Wednesday meetings at 3:30 in the Behavioral Science Building, Room 215.

Greek Week V has come and gone and all who participated had a great time. After week long competition and much hard work, the Kappa Sigma Fraternity emerged victoriously from the pack. Points were awarded for attendance to the first educational session, with a tie for first place by the Alpha Lambda Omega and Alpha Delta Pi. The Delta Zetas were also awarded first place for their philanthropy service project and the spirit award. The Delts received four first place awards for: the three legged race, the float competition, and the pyramid building contest, and the banner competition. The Kappa Sigmas won only two events (the balloon race and sack race) but placed high in every event to win with 228.5 total points.

At the awards ceremony the AD Pi's sang their song that won the singing competition. The song emphasized the theme of greek which was "greek unity." The AD Pi's did a cute jingle about each individual group and sounded very harmonious. Trophies were awarded to Pi Kappa Phi for winning the volleyball tournament and the mens tug-of-war competition (which did not count for overall point totals). The Pi Kapps also won the egg toss competition.

Then it was time for the overall trophies to be awarded. Finishing overall were the Kappa Sigmas with 228.5, followed by the Delta Zetas with 214.5. Third place was won by the Delts with 191.5. Closely behind were the AD Pi's with 181.5, followed by SAE with 169.5. The "new kids in town" (ALO's) came in sixth place with 161 total points. Pi Kappa Phi was seventh with 148 followed by the TKE with 113. Chi Phi withdrew from Greek Week and did not place in the final totals. All groups had fun and are looking forward to next year!

Striking It Rich

"We're obviously very pleased," understates William Powell.

He has reason to be. Powell's fraternity, the Texax A&M chapter of Sigma Chi, just had its own oil well become a producer.

An oil company proposed drilling some 150 yards from the fraternity house last school year, and a Houston firm, INEXCO, eventually bought the drilling rights. INEXCO struck oil in the well the first week of September.

No one at INEXCO or Sigma Chi is certain how much the well will be worth, though it currently is producing about 483 barrels of oil a day. At current prices, it could be worth a gross amount of $13,000 a day.

Proceeds, of course, would be split among INEXCO, middlemen, Sigma Chi Headquarters and the campus Sigma Chi Corporation, which owns the land on which the well was drilled.

"It's not like we're instant millionaires," notes Andy Beaky, the house's former treasurer. "We'll get royalties each month, but that will go toward building a new house." In the meantime, the oil strike and well have other uses for Sigma Chi members.

"During rush it was a great topic of interest," Beaky reports. "At night parties, we put lights all over it for fun."

Dear Egbert?

Dear Egbert,

I have a problem. My boyfriend goes to another school far away and I don't get to see him that often. He has two roommates living off campus and both of them are girls! When I found out I got really jealous and didn't like the idea at all. He says their relationship is only plutonic and that I have nothing to worry about. I trust him because I know he cares a lot about me, but can I trust the two girls he lives with? When I call him on the phone, they are really rude and don't give me any respect. Should I just ignore them or should I try and do something about it? I think they are trying to scare me away. What should I do?

Signed:

Strictly Plutonic

Dear Plutonic,

What ever happened to "Innocent until proven guilty?" This applies to the girls as well as your boyfriend. Check your attitude towards them--this could be the cause of disrespect and rudeness on their part. Try discussing your feelings with your boyfriend, but first give them all the benefit of the doubt.

Dear Egbert,

I have a friend who is gay. He is the most charming, fun-loving guy you'll ever meet. I just like him a lot. The problem is, he doesn't know that I or any of our friends know that he is gay. We sort of found out by mistake. The thing is, we don't care--we love him just the same.

Lately he has been keeping busy and, I assume, hanging around with other friends and he keeps it real secretive as to his whereabouts. We love to party with him and are willing to accept his status.

How can I tell him that it doesn't matter about his sexual preference? We want him to remain our friend, but since he has not told any of us himself, I hate to bring it up. I don't want to reveal my source (how we found out), but I want him to know I understand. What to do? What to do?

Signed:

Girl with a GAY friend

Dear Girl,

I would approach this as a problem in your friendship rather than just his sexuality. There is probably a reason he has not confided in you. There is also the possibility that your source was mistaken. In any case, I would not confront him with it--it may do more harm than good. Do let him know that you feel your friendship is slowing and that you are still there as a caring friend. He'll tell you when he is ready.

Dear Egbert,

I have genital herpes. If you know anything about the disease, you know that it is only contagious in the outbreak stage. It was detected six months ago and since it went away, I've had no other outbreaks. I understand that some victims have no recurrence.

My problem is that I have a new boyfriend. The relationship has become sexual and I haven't told him a thing. I do like him a lot, but I don't think he is the man I'm going to spend the rest of my life with.

I don't know what to do. I have been carrying around this dark secret for months because herpes is such a misunderstood disease. The only people who know are my family doctor and me.

I can't even tell my best friend because I can't even say the word--herpes.

I know I'm running a risk by having a sexual relationship, but as long as I'm not having an outbreak, he's not going to become infected. I may lose him if I tell him and I may lose him if I don't.

Egbert, should I run the risk of telling him, chance losing him and scare myself out of ever forming another relationship? I would hope for understanding, but since the relationship is fairly new, I just don't know. How should I tell him? How can I tell him?

(edited version of letter)

Signed:

Helpless Herp

Dear Helpless,

I certainly do sympathize with your dilemma and I think it is something that you need to talk over with someone--someone who can refer you to help (such as groups) and who deals with problems like this. This someone is at Crisis Line -763-3695. PLEASE call them--it will help! In the meantime, I wouldn't tell your boyfriend until you've established more trust. Again, please call Crisis Line.

Forensics Ready For Nationals

Rick Olsen
Contributor

Domination is not too strong a word for the UNCW Forensic Team performance three weeks ago at UNC-Charlotte. The ten person team took on all comers in North and South Carolina to become the Carolina Forensic Association Champions.

"The dominance of the squad," said coach Frank Trimble, "was due to several factors above and beyond commitment and hard work. Balance was the key this season."

The team had at least two, (and up to six), individuals in the final round of each event at the CFA tournament. This flood brought about a 331 to 133 victory over Columbia Bible College in Individual Events.

"This was an appropriate climax to our regular season which has been the most successful in UNCW's history," added Trimble.

This success will pay off in the upcoming National Forensic Association tournament at Marshall University in Huntington, West Virginia. With 37 events eligible to compete, Trimble and the team are optimistic about a top ten finish. Their present rank is Forty-one.

A summary of the team's record is truly impressive. They maintained a record of 130 and 14 against such teams as Stetson in Florida, Chapel Hill, The University of Alabama at Birmingham, as well as Penn State and George Mason.

"A strong showing debate," noted Trimble, "allowed us to capture many overall sweepstakes during the season and at the Championship."

This has been due entirely to the work of Trish McHenry, Max Perkins and coach, Ray Blackburn.

CFA Championship competition is nothing new to the team. UNCW has been victorious five of the last six years, losing last year to Appalachian State.

"The team," said president, Mitch Butts, "really wanted to get the trophy back. Forensics is educational, but it is also competitive."

The prospects for a strong team next year are extremely high. Only one member, Virginia Loflin, is graduating. She finished in style receiving 6th overall speaker at CFA. Two other speakers received excellence awards; Rick Olsen earned second speaker, while Mitch Butts was recognized as top speaker in the States. Both competed in nine events in finals.

Another reason for the bright future is the quality of new members. Melinda Greene and Tina Hester both had several events in finals, including a dramatic duo which took first. Max Perkins has been strong in debate as well as limited preperation events and Rhetorical Criticism. Rebecca Dodd has done well in interpretation events and humorous,

After Dinner Speaking. Travis Parker has been competitive all year and now competes in 6 events. Wendy Crowson and Mitch Butts are the only members that will be seniors next year.

All the attention and effort will now be focused on word by word refinement of the speeches and sharpening of delivery for the national competition and a possible top ten finish.

Florida Suspends Fraternity After Handbook Sold

Courtesy/College Press Service

University of Florida officials have suspended a fraternity and are likely to probe all the fraternity "little sister" programs on campus after one house started selling a raunchy handbook to students.

The handbook names certain female students, and recommends how many beers it takes to persuade them to engage in sexual intercourse.

Put out by the Beta Theta Pi house and offered for $2 a copy, the book also outlines the sexual escapades of members.

The fraternity says that the book was intended as a joke. University administrators aren't amused.

"Whether it was meant as a joke or as a National Lampoon, we don't find it funny," says assistant student affairs dean Thomas Dougan.

"It is extremely inappropriate."

The booklet also calls some students "sand niggers and pointy heads," and makes anti-semitic references to others.

In a prepared statement, the fraternity president said the handbook is not an official publication of and is not condoned by the fraternity.

The handbook is "in poor taste," says Thomas Beyer of the national Beta Theta Pi organization.

National fraternity officials can't recall seeing similar handbooks at other schools.

But the head of a group monitoring fraternity hazing practices says she has been told of "dozens and dozens" of similar publications.

"I'm hearing more and more of this type of thing," says Eileen Stevens of Sayville, N.Y., who founded the committee to Halt Useless College Killings after her son was killed in a fraternity initiation ritual.

But, Stevens says, this is the first time one has been sold publicly.

"In most cases, these things never see the light of day because the girls are embarrassed, the members don't talk about it publicly and there is a secretive shroud covering what goes on at individual chapters," she says.

In this case, Florida suspended Beta Theta Pi for the remainder of 1985, and its "little sister" program for an indefinite period.

The university also may review all such programs at the school.

"Little sister" programs try to involve female students in activities of a fraternity. Most often the females are not sorority members.

But the Fraternity Executives Association says "little sister" programs are "not desirable" because they distract members from fraternity goals.

Stevens says the programs frequently lead to coercion of female members who do not do what fraternity members ask of them.

One UF "little sister" told the student newspaper she is treated like a maid.

Dean of Student Affairs James Scott is to decide within the week whether to launch the campus-wide probe of "little sister" groups.

Computers-A Hot Item

CPS

With secrecy befitting arms negotiations, folks from Apple Computers are negotiating to sell computers through the University of Colorado's bookstore.

Apple and CU officials won't comment on the talks, which one source says should make Apple products much cheaper for CU students soon.

"One doesn't comment on negotiations when one's negotiating," says bookstore director Bill Minney.

More importantly, neither side wants to re-ignite a spreading nationwide war between colleges getting into the computer business and the retail computer shops that serve college towns.

The struggle for the student dollar already has produced a number of state bills to stop certain colleges from selling computers and may, some lawyers say, end up in the U.S. Supreme Court.

Texas, Indiana and Illinois lawmakers proposed bills this season to stop colleges from offering discount computers to students. Last month, a Madison, Wis., computer store dropped a lawsuit charging the University of Wisconsin was competing illegally against local computer shops by offering the machines at discounts.

The increasing pace of proposed legislation--none of it has passed as yet; only Washington state now expressly forbids campuses to compete with local retailers--and threat of more lawsuits are convincing some campuses like Colorado to keep their computer discount plans quiet.

"There's just no way we can compete for student business with the CU bookstore," laments a Boulder computer store salesman.

"The college is definitely going to get the university kids," he explains. "It's not fair, but what are we going to do? If we had the kind of money to buy large amounts of stock, we'd be okay. As it is, we get by."

"I'll tell you what it sounds like," added Computer Works, Inc. store manager Lecale Bowers when told of the secret talks between Apple and CU. "It sounds like more competition from the college."

Colleges, of course, can afford to sell computers more cheaply to students than local stores because of agreements that let colleges buy the machines from the manufacturers at special low prices.

And manufacturers say they're just doing business.

"The reason the universities can sell the computers so cheaply is that the percentage of discount is determined by the number of machines they buy," an IBM spokesman says.

"We don't set the prices for our dealers," he adds. "The retailer is free to sell for whatever he wants. The universities simply buy more computers."

"At the absolute minimum, the bookstore's selling the (IBM) PC at a 30 percent discount," points out Mike Dobson of Boulder's Computerland.

IBM, Apple, Zenith and other computer manufacturers all began selling discount computers to colleges in 1983, and the programs have grown exponentially each year.

Now hundreds of campuses--the entire Kansas system, Plymouth State, New Orleans, Tufts, Southern Louisiana, Indiana, Arizona State and Michigan State, to name a few--have turned their bookstores into computer discount centers.

Med Students Under the Squeeze

CPS

A student graduating from medical school this year will probably already be some $26,400 in debt, a new study by the Association of American Medical Colleges (AAMC) says.

Based on its findings, the AAMC warns that skyrocketing tuition, along with financial aid cutbacks, may soon keep all but the children of the rich from attending medical school.

The concern over med student debts closely parallels college financial aid experts' fears that all students are falling dangerously far into debt to finance their college educations.

Officials say the recent restructuring of federal financial aid programs has forced many students to rely on loans, rather than grants, to pay for college.

And while the debt problem threatens all college students, medical students are becoming especially vulnerable, according to the AAMC study.

Tuition has doubled or tripled at most medical schools in recent years, already locking out many middle and lower-class students, according to the study, which was conducted by a panel of 18 medical school deans.

This year, the average medical school graduate left school with more than $26,400 in debts, the study shows, a 10.8 percent increase over last year.

Over 30 percent of the new doctors, moreover, graduated $30,000 or more in debt, compared with only 25 percent last year.

Over eight percent--one out of every 12--left school owing more than $50,000.

"If this trend continues," the study says, "many students may be denied the opportunity to study medicine. A medical education may become an opportunity restricted to the affluent."

Only 12 percent of this year's med students graduated without debt, compared to 14 percent in 1983.

Minority students particularly are being locked out of the medical field by soaring tuitions and dwindling scholarship funds, AAMC officials say.

Since 1974, the report points out, the number of minority students attending medical schools has stalled at 8.3 percent of total enrollment.

Many lower-income and minority students who would otherwise enter medical school are opting for less-costly business, chemistry, and biology degrees that will bring them high-paying jobs without a huge debt obligation, the medical deans report.

And cutbacks in federal student aid for med students promises to exacerbate the debt problem, says AAMC spokesman Robert Boerner.

The main scholarship program for medical students, the National Health Services Corps (NHSC) awards, "is being cut radically and virtually phased out by the Reagan administration," Boerner says.

Under the VolcanoJoan Travis Critic

Someone has finally managed to bring the elusive Malcolm Lowrey novel, "Under the Volcano," to the big screen. Many directors considered an attempt, but the project continually fell to the wayside. John Huston emerges the victor with this powerful, if somewhat slow-paced adaptation.

The film opens appropriately with twisting, dancing skeletons. The place is Cuernavaca, Mexico, and the day is important--the Day of the Dead. According to Mexican tradition, the dead are permitted to live again on this day. Throughout the city, people dance about in skeleton costumes; they place food and flowers about the graves of the dead; and in general, they create a very macabre, carnival like atmosphere. Walking and stumbling through this darkness is a former British consul, a man who seems as dead as the corpses the people are resurrecting. Director John Huston indicates this "death" with several carefully selected signs--the consul's dark glasses mirror the decorated skulls in the streets; his drunken speeches serve only to bring on self-ridicule, and his personal and political relationships and ideas seem to be in complete disarray.

Interestingly enough, it's the man's relationship with his wife that seems to bring him the most pain. She was involved with another man and eventually divorced the consul. But, by the time the movie opens, she is returning to her husband. Her reasons for coming back to him suggest a painful, uncontrollable love made all the more painful and dark because he can't completely accept her. He constantly reminds her of her indiscretion and drowns himself more and more in drink. Their relationship perhaps finds a parallel in that of "Withering Heights" Heathcliff and Catherine. It's a love that can no longer exist in this world, and it sends its performers on a downward path toward death.

"Under the Volcano" is an interesting and intricate film. Albert Finney puts forth a truly powerful performance as the alcoholic, sexually frustrated consul who rambles through the hot Mexican streets, thus living out the idea that Hell is his habitat. His is a world in which there are no more dreams, and in which love can never be enough. John Huston's film is very dark and emotionally packed. He speaks through symbols--images of a pregnant volcano, seedy whores and bloodthirsty cut-throats and decorated skulls--images of the last gasps of a life lost long before. The movie tends to drag in parts, and that might keep a lot of people from liking it. But the overall impact of a man who feels something in his heart that he can no longer perform with his hands is very strong, and manages to speak to inevitable mortality within us all. It also triggers the hope that the dead really do live again, beyond the physical rebirth of the Day of the Dead. Now showing--Cinema 6.

School Kids Record Review

One doesn't hear the word 'cracker' much anymore. It was used more than 10 years ago when the Big East dominated politics and economics, not just basketball. With the emergence of the New South--this term of non-endorsement has surfaced only briefly. Some people say Jimmy Carter was a 'cracker.'

What is a 'cracker'? Have you ever been to the Atlanta airport? A cut and dried definition is harder to come by than listening to the way someone talks, noticing posture and facial expression, or examining skin tone. This deliberately vague depiction offers an advantage to the defractor. In the final analysis 'cracker' is closer to a racial prejudice than anything else--it aims at the heart of a rural lifestyle.

Tom Petty understands this only too well. When Long After Dark was reviewed by the Eastern Establishment, Tom was coronated voice of the cracker. It had something to do with that whine of his. On Southern Accents Petty celebrates the land of his birth: "got my own way of talking, the Yankees call it dumb--where I come from." The scope and concept of Southern Accents is certainly its strong point. When Petty writes about the South in 'Rebels,' the title tune 'Southern Accents,' or the country sleaze blues of 'Spike' the LP soars with conviction. The Heartbreaker band is still intact and these guys can really play especially guitarist Mike Campbell and keyboardist, Benmont Tench.

The problem that creates a paradox in Southern Accents is the fact that Petty does not follow through with his concept of the rural South. There ain't nothing wrong with hearing a guitar again in the single 'Don't Come Round Here Anymore, but that other Dave Stewart collaboration 'It Ain't Nothin' to Me' is closer to dance boogie. It's as though Petty tinkered just a pinch too much with the musical sophistication instead of going straight ahead. The urgency and power of a Damn the Torpedoes is not evident on Southern Accents but a newfound musical growth and experimentation is. A little good and bad in everything...in everyone.

UNCW baseball coach Bobby Guthrie will look back on the 1985 season as two seasons within one.

The first season saw Guthrie's Seahawks jump out to a sparkling 22-5 record, knocking off teams like Clemson, Old Dominion, and Purdue. The second season wasn't as enjoyable for the 'Hawks, losing 11 out of their next 14 games.

Now what Guthrie is hoping for is a third season--a post-season. And for the first time since becoming a division one team, the Seahawks are in excellent shape to win the ECAC South and receive a bid to the ECAC tournament in Greenville.

Despite the mid-season slump, UNCW has compiled a 9-2 conference record, one game better than 8-3 ECU, two games better than a red-hot George Mason team. Possibly the biggest game of the 55-game UNCW schedule is a single game at ECU next week.

UNCW's last victory was a 9-2 league victory at Richmond Saturday. Starter Kenny King turned in one of his top performances of the year, striking out 13 (including eight in the first three innings), and giving up only one earned run. The Jacksonville sophomore was clocked as high as 91 m.p.h. Eric Hall, Gary Hall and Bobby Bryant each hit home runs in the game. Richmond dropped to 5-8 in the league.

The winner of the ECAC South will join the winners of the ECAC North and ECAC Metro Atlantic, and one at-large team in the ECAC Tournament in Greenville.

Infirm Info

Kathy Chimink

The Student's Health Service, located in the Main Lobby of Dorm '79 on campus, consists of the following staff members: Catherine Vangellow-nurse practitioner, Ginja Colclough-physician assistant, Judy Hendren-nurse (LPN), and Linda Smith-medical assistant. It is opened between 8:30 am and 5:00 pm to enrolled students taking 6 or more credited hours per semester. The service provides treatment and diagnosis for medical problems such as cold, ear aches, cough, infections, rashes, etc.... Allergy injections and birth control and health counselling can be obtained from SHS. Only certain non-prescription drugs are available at the center but the practitioner or physician assistant will write prescriptions when possible. SHS also performs the following laboratory tests: blood counts, urinalyses, tests to diagnose sexually transmitted diseases, throat cultures, mono and pregnancy test.

If a student is confronted with an illness which is not covered in the scope of SHS, the staff will give referrals of specialist from the Wilmington Health Associates who also handle student emergency when SHS is closed.

Because of the growing student body, SHS is also expanding and plans to move the Health Service to the Student Union next year are underway.

Infirm Info is tool for reaching out to students who have questions about health issues. In future issues the column will be set up as an open forum where students can anonymously state their concerns. Question boxes will be located in the Student Health Service Lobby and in the Seahawk's Office. The column will also contain related article and facts which affect mostly college students. So keep a lookout for this new informative column!

Intramurals Ends

Todd Harris
Contributor

For basketball fans the season is over with the ending of the NCAA tournament.

The UNCW intramural basketball season ended on a bad note and nearly was not completed at all due to the loss of three basketballs that were just purchased at the beginning of the season.

According to Lynn Ward, a senior who was the commissioner for basketball intramurals, the balls were taken on different nights during the season and that after the third one was taken the season was threatened to be cancelled.

Lea Dudley, who is director of intramurals on campus had memos posted saying that games would not continue until all the balls were returned.

Ward said "the memos were only posted to get the point across" and that the same thing happened a couple of years ago. He further stated that only one of the balls was returned, but the games were allowed to continue. He feels that the ball that was returned was in response to the memo. The memo also stated that if a ball was returned, no questions would be asked.

The balls were put out in both Hanover gym and Trask on game nights according to Ward and that there was only one person in charge of looking out for things. He said that the game officials were expected to return the balls after the games each night but "many were new and didn't think about it." Ward also stated that one person can not cover both gyms.

Danny Isbell, a freshman who was head official during the season said that he never saw any of the balls being taken but he is "80 percent sure it was one of the teams." Ward agreed saying that it is likely that they were taken when a team member could not find anyone to return them to after a game.

Union Hard to Keep Clean

Carolyn Wilkinson
Contributor

Our university student union is a beautiful building, yet there is an aspect of its beauty that we, as students may seldom consider. Its cleanliness and maintenance provide a full time job for Ruth Grady, James Brooks, and George Laughlin.

George Laughlin, housekeeping assistant number 1, is the first shift housekeeper. He works from 8:00 to 4:30, Monday through Friday. His overall responsibilities are "to see that the union is kept in a clean, neat fashion that is appealing to the visitor's eye." For example, the steps we tramp up and down all day are scrubbed by hand to remove dirt and spills. Another responsibility is to keep carpets free of spots and spills, and George points out that there is a lot of carpeted floor space in the union. All the windows in the building are kept clean also, and there are a vast number of windows in the spacious buildings.

When asked if he prefers the day shift or the night shift, Laughlin says "It's a toss up. I like night shift for getting things done and chores accomplished. I like days for my personal convenience," he chuckles.

Laughlin has been working at the union for two years--since it opened. "In the beginning, there was a lot of vandalism. When the union first opened, we had several break-ins. There was vandalism to the game room. The jukebox and video games were robbed a few times. Security checks have increased now and vandalism has decreased some. I think it's ridiculous the way some students treat the building and its furnishings. They abuse them by writing with ink on the upholstery and spitting tobacco juice in the carpet. In the toilets, we have the graffiti artists. Some of the things they write and the drawings they do would surprise you. It's hard to believe modern day, intelligent college students come up with such profane, gross thoughts.

Laughlin includes that he generally has good working relationships and gets along with his supervisors the majority of the time. He doesn't like getting paid only once a month.

Laughlin gets along well with the students. "I try to wear a smile. It's a pleasure working here and I really like meeting the people."

Foreign Student Enrollment Slides

The number of foreign students attending U.S. colleges rose by less than one percent last year, the smallest increase in recent decades, the annual census of the foreign student population by the Institute of International Education (IIE) has found.

The report, released last week, also discovered large decreases in the numbers of students from oil countries like Iran, Nigeria and Venezuela, which since the mid-seventies have accounted for the biggest percentage of foreigners studying on American campuses.

To compensate, campuses recruited more students from Asian countries.

"In a nutshell, (Asian countries) are more prosperous," explains Carl Herrin of the National Association of Foreign Student Affairs (NAFSA) in Washington, D.C. "Since they are more prosperous, they want things like a U.S. education."

Moreover, Asian students who used to go to England are choosing to come here instead, he adds.

"The cost of a program in England is four-to-six times more expensive (than in the U.S.)," Herrin says.

Total foreign student enrollment went up less than one percent last year, compared to the regular 10 percent annual increases of the late seventies and early eighties.

The most dramatic declines were among students from oil countries. The Iranian student population, for example, fell 60 percent, to 20,260. The Nigerian contingent also fell off precipitously.

"Because of the oil glut, income in those countries is down," Herrin says.

Alfred Julian, the IIE's research assistant is more circumspect. "All we do is gather the data," he says while declining to speculate on the reasons why some countries are sending fewer students here.

Asian student enrollment, however, increased a total of 10.5 percent in 1983-84. Taiwan sent the largest block of students, some 21,960.

Malaysia's contingent went up by nearly 24 percent from 1982-83 to 1983-84, the report found.

California registered almost 14 percent of all the foreigners studying in the U.S. last year, followed by Texas and Florida.

Cars Take Backseat to Pedestrians

Effective immediately, The University of North Carolina at Wilmington is legally a "pedestrian campus" which means that pedestrians in crosswalks have the right of way. Appropriate signs have been erected at the entrances to campus and at the approximately 20 crosswalks painted on campus streets.

Joe Johnson, chief of UNCW campus police, explained that this came about as a result of a recommendation from the UNCW Faculty Senate to Chancellor William H. Wagoner. In turn, the UNCW Board of Trustees at their last meeting authorized the university to pursue this through the Council of State.

"Now that the signs have been erected, the campus police are in an education phase," Johnson said. "There will be a period when we will be issuing warning notices. After a certain time, we will issue citations for violators to appear in district court for failure to yield right of way to a pedestrian in a crosswalk."

Traffic is increasing on the campus, with more than 6500 in the university community as well as a number of people in the Wilmington area who use the university streets to shorten distances or for site-seeing or other reasons.

"We have had no serious accidents recently involving pedestrians, but we're trying to control an ever increasing problem," Johnson said. "If we can educate our university community and the Wilmington community, maybe we can avoid some serious accidents."

In addition to making this failure to yield right of way to pedestrians in crosswalks a misdemeanor, Johnson said the new regulations include specific restrictions on pedestrians. "We have initiated a jaywalking ordinance requiring pedestrians to use crosswalks when they are available."

"We are also requiring that any joggers or runners must run facing traffic if they are using the streets and they must run single file. This was done because of various groups that run together, most notably ROTC and physical education classes," Johnson said. "Our next step will be in providing additional safety for bicyclists."

Fasten seat Belt signs have also been erected at exits of parking lots and streets leading off campus. These are designed to increase motorist awareness of this safety precaution.

More and more college freshmen are enrolling in remedial education courses designed to teach them what they should already know, according to a new report by the U.S. Department of Education.

One out of every four entering freshmen, for instance, takes at least one remedial mathematics class, says the survey of over 500 colleges and universities compiled by the department's National Center for Education Statistics.

More than one of every five students also take remedial writing courses, the study shows, while 16 percent take reading review courses.

"It's just a sign of the times," laments Elaine El-Khawas, vice president for policy analysis and research with the American Council on Education.

"It's a very disturbing reality that so many students are not adequately prepared for college," she says, attributing the problem to "a decade of loose high school graduation standards."

Mona Franklin
Managing Editor

In this installment, I had planned to talk about mutilation of books. I was going to reprimand, scold and downright chew out those people who refuse to exercise common courtesy and insist on tearing and cutting out articles in the journals and magazines. These people do not care how much they might inconvenience and hurt the others who might need that article. And not only that, it costs money! Even one torn page could cost several $$ to replace. Then you have to consider the time and effort it takes to replace it.

But I won't talk (write) about that. Instead, I must address another burning issue (no, not book burning).

It's the three shelves of mess some students leave when they

And it's getting worse. Among the 500 institutions surveyed, nearly two-thirds offer more remedial courses now than they did in 1978.

One-third of the schools offer the same number of remedial courses as six years ago, while only four percent have cut the number of review courses they provide.

The report suggests many four-year colleges' plans to shift remedial education to junior and two-year colleges have failed.

The University of California System, for instance, two years ago planned to redirect some 2,400 students to nearby community colleges by 1986.

Likewise, Ohio State began admitting only freshmen who had four years of English, three years of math, science, social science and foreign language, and planned to send those not qualified to two-year colleges.

"The reality is that, as good as the policy sounds to shift remedial courses to two-year colleges, it simply has not worked," El-Khawas observes.

"Students who want to get a four-year degree will go to a four-year institution which offers remedial courses rather than attend a junior college for two years and then have to move to a four-year school," she says.

Although two-year schools are offering more remedial courses, the majority of four-year colleges have increased their remedial course offerings as well.

Public colleges have the highest number of entering students in so-called catch-up courses, the study says.

Private school students, on the other hand, took the fewest number of catch-up classes. Only 15 percent took remedial classes in math, 12 percent in writing, and nine percent in reading.

Addressing long-standing concerns by some educators that the nation's high schools are not adequately preparing students for college, the report cautions the increased popularity in remedial courses could also be linked to lower college entrance requirements and tougher courses in general.

try to find the one article they need, or the bologna sandwich they left there last week.

Let's face it, I'm a patient person. Perhaps I'm even a bit compulsive. (When I go to pick strawberries in one of those U-Pick fields, I usually end up pulling weeds.) But I can only stand so much.

And then it happens. I get uncontrollably mad! I turn green--no, make that purple, I'll be original--and grow at least three times in size. I growl, and throw things and just generally become a BPH--Bad Person Hulk. And you'd better believe I'm not going to be pleasant to those punks who messed up those library shelves.

So why? Why not, when you reach something or look for something, be neat and careful.

If you know your alphabet, why not return those books you use to the shelf?? If not, then stack the books neatly on the end of the shelf from which you selected them, and then at least we library staffers won't have too much work to do.

And for heaven's sake, don't make a mess when you're looking for something. Keep the shelf neat, and if you take a book or pamphlet out, be sure those around it stay neat, straight and don't adorn the floor!

It only takes a fewseconds to do as I've requested, and it can save the staff maybe hours of work!!

And it can save me from a fate worse than green (or is that purple?).

Don't believe me? Then next time you're in the library, walk by the fourth or fifth row of documents and look at the "ceiling". I won't say who did that, but I'm sure it wasn't a pretty (purple) site!

So be neat!!!

(So Don, what do you think of this one?)

Federal Gov't Spends Unwisely

Richard A. Viguere
Guest Columnist

Come spring, and the sun shines and flowers bloom and, once again, our thoughts inevitably turn to taxes.

Ah! What a blessing it is to live in a country where the average person has earned enough money to pay his taxes for the year by May 1, provided he hasn't spent anything on food or clothing or other luxuries.

And how blessed we are to have a federal government that spends our money so wisely!

Who among us would have the wisdom to pay people not to grow food, as the federal government does? Who would be smart enough to subsidize tobacco growers, so they can produce more tobacco, and then ban cigarette advertising from television, so that fewer people will smoke? Without competent, professional bureaucrats running our government, would we have the compassion to tax the working poor in order to give Social Security to millionaires? Would we tax steelworkers and truckdrivers in order to provide subsidized loans for rich kids at Harvard? Would we have import restrictions that add $1,500 to the price of a new car at a time when the average auto worker makes more money than the average auto buyer? Would we take money from poor people in rural areas and small towns in order to provide revenue sharing for Hunter's Creek, Texas (annual per capita income: 39,913), Bloomfield Hills, Michigan (37,808), and Kenilworth, Illinois ($33,432)?

The answer, clearly, is No. Only a wise and benevolent government can teach us that these things, which appear to violate common sense, are really in our own best interest.

Think of the worthwhile and useful programs we would have to do without, if the budget cutters had their way. Agricultural subsidies, 70 percent of which go to the 250,000 largest farms... The Export-Import Bank, which spends 70 percent of its budget to benefit seven large corporations... The Small Business Administration, which helps mushroom processors and people who transact business with Mexicans and fishermen whose currents shift adversely

(in all, the SBA helps a whopping one percent of all the small business in America)... Urban Development Action Grants, which enable cities to bid against each other in offering bribes to companies (Jersey City and New York, for example, have spent $50 million in UDAG money to lure businesses away from each other).

What would we do without Amtrak, which loses $35 every time a passenger gets on board one of its trains? (On some routes, it would be cheaper to give people free airline tickets.) Then there are subsidies for mass transit systems like the subway in one of America's wealthiest communities, Washington, D.C.; its subsidy is so high that the taxpayer would save money by giving every passenger free cab fare. And there are the Interstate Commerce Commission certificate requirements which create a shared monopoly in the trucking business, raising prices on everything from frozen pizzas, maple syrup, and dried fig paste, to fermented manure.

Meanwhile, there's the Overseas Private Investment Corporation, which insures business assets against expropriation and thereby encourages companies to move jobs overseas. And in International Monetary Fund, which pays big international banks for making stupid loans to Third World and communist countries.

There's $1.9 billion in energy research grants to the big oil companies. Plus $3.5 million a day in subsidies for inland waterways. And the cargo preference law, the Davis-Bacon Act, and featherbedding regulations all designed to enable big unions to pick the pockets of people without the victims even knowing it.

Where would we be without government regulations setting up cartels for--and raising the prices of--navel oranges, peanuts, hops, cranberries, spearmint oil, and Florida celery? How could we survive if farmers were allowed to sell dairy products at lower prices, instead of letting milk and cheese rot in government warehouses?

Think about it. The federal government spends between $6,000 and $7,000 a year per family of four on schemes to take money from one person and give it to another. That's just counting items that appear in the federal budget. The cost of regulation is not included, despite the fact that bureaucratic controls limit competition and raises the price of trucking, navel oranges, government construction, yogurt, communications satellites, first class mail, taxi licenses, and ten thousand other things. (For example, according to Greg Fossedal of THE WALL STREET JOURNAL, the requirement that half of all government-financed shipments go on U.S. vessels cost the Food for Peace program $100 million in 1981--"money that could have gone to the starving in Ethiopia.")

Today, average Americans are paying tax rates that only rich people were paying 20 years ago. The federal government takes an average of 25 percent of a person's pay, with local and state government taking another 15 earning enough money to pay Uncle Sam--more than for food, housing, and utilities combined.

Stillpoint

By Bob Haywood

One of the distinctive characteristics of that species that we call human which sets us apart from other animals is our ability to be reflective, stand outside of ourselves mentally and see how we are living and feeling in our world. Because of such a gift, the gift of self-awareness, we can then make modifications in ourselves and sometimes even in our environment, hopefully changes that will allow us to fulfill more and more from our potential.

All of us are facing the ending of this semester. That ending means different things to different people. For some it is simply the ending of one semester and a brief or lengthy break 'till the beginning of the next semester. For some it is the end of our college years and marks a transition time between our way of living and thinking at the university and whatever life we build for ourselves after graduation. Whatever else it is, the end of school is time of transition. And the majority of us tend to focus our minds and energy on our future, making plans for whatever is to come next.

I want to put in a plug for cast an eye inward and backward during this transition. I believe it is helpful and useful to utilize our gift of self-awareness and reflection to assess our thoughts and feelings about how we have been and what we have done in the segment of our life just finished. We all have dreams and ideals about how we want to be, but it is our actual behavior that tells us the truth about who we are and what it is we value.

What does the way we spend our time tell us about what we really value? How have we related to the people that we call friends and have those relationships brought us the kind of satisfaction and good feelings for which we yearn? Is there any framework of meaning or purpose that influences what we want and what we do with our time and energy? Who has been in charge of our lives; who do we seek to please? Am I pleased with how I have been and what I have done? If not, why not? If so, then where do I want to go from here?

My belief is that questions like this are worth a few long walks at the beach or a day spent leaning against a tree by a lake or a few evenings in our homes or apartments with the TV off and the phone off the hook. It might even be worth getting some feedback from someone who is close to us that we trust, cares for us, and will speak truth with gentleness.

Through self-awareness we can tap an incredible power deep in the center of our own being to shape who we are and how we respond to whatever life brings to us. But it is a choice. It is up to each of us to take time to reflect and ask ourselves significant questions. I hope this summer can be such a time for you. Namaste!

Graduation Day Nears

As May approaches and many graduating seniors are unsure about life after graduation, one sociology major seems very clear about her future.

Tammy Fish plans to attend graduate school this fall at UNC. She will seek her master's degree in social work and will be concentrating on the medical field. According to Tammy, she has become very interested in working with people. She is currently completing her internship with Hospice, which is a privately funded agency that deals with terminally ill cancer patients. The agency provides psychological support and other accommodations for the patients. Tammy says that through this work she sees the "importance of getting close to people." She has also been involved with prisoners in the past by helping teach classes that will help in social development.

Through Tammy's experience, she says that providing support to people who are facing death has been a great challenge. She says that getting too involved with the patients personally can be traumatic. But she feels that she is getting better adapted at dealing with these circumstances.

Being from Fayetteville, Tammy cites her reason for choosing Carolina as staying "close to home." She also feels that in order to get the job she wants, graduate school is necessary.

preference would be to attend UNC-Chapel Hill.

While anticipating her acceptance from either school, Marcia is considering another alternative. She has already accepted a job this summer, in Key Largo, working as a crew member on a charter system. She is leaving for the Keys around the middle of June and will be working on a dive yacht or fishing yacht. Marcia has always enjoyed sailing and fishing and other water related activities such as water-skiing and scuba-diving. Having this opportunity to work in the Keys, she would not mind postponing Graduate school if not accepted this fall. With her interests and her degree in public relations, Marcia eventually plans to pursue a career in working for a resort.

Marcia Mann, age 21, from Lillington, N.C., will graduate from UNCW this spring. She will be receiving a degree in Communications with an emphasis in public relations. Marcia, who plans to further her education this fall, has applied for the graduate programs at both UNC-G and UNC-Chapel Hill. Her

With today's upheaval in collegiate athletics, the term "student-athlete" is used very loosely.

Hank Harris, a senior from Louisburg, N.C. knows that it takes a special effort to be both a student and an athlete. Harris has played basketball for the Seahawks for the past two years and plans to attend graduate school at UNC following graduation in May. He is seeking a master's degree in counseling.

According to Harris, he is interested in working with juveniles and first offenders through counseling. He has gained some experience by doing his internship at the New Hanover City Prison. He says that he knows what it is like to be a corrections officer. His duties at the prison include checking out prisoners for work release, which puts him in direct contact with the offenders. Harris says that he feels getting involved with young offenders will be very rewarding.

Harris transferred to UNCW two years ago from Louisburg College, where he also played basketball.

According to Head Coach Mel Gibson, Harris' situation was special in that he did not come here on scholarship. Most players are recruited and receive some scholarship money," Gibson said. "Hank really made a place for himself on the team." Gibson also feels that Harris will do exceptionally well academically and stated that he maintained "around a 3.0 average."

Harris says that there were many times during the season when his schedule seemed too hectic but offered that "budgeting your time" is important.

First Lady Appears

The First Lady of the State of North Carolina, Mrs. Dottie Martin, appeared in a Public Service Announcement for the Cape Fear Substance Abuse Center. Mrs. Martin is concerned with drug abuse in North Carolina and hopes to have an impact on this problem in our state.

This PSA was brought about by the Advanced Public Relations class at UNCW, a class currently working on a public relations campaign for the Cape Fear Substance Abuse Center. The Advanced P.R. class, taught by Dr. Steven Weiss, is working on several projects, all in an effort to gain knowledge about doing actual PR work, as well as providing positive publicity about the many services offered by CFSAC.

Dottie Martin's PSA will be seen on WECT-TV-6. The announcement targets the parents of the Cape Fear region, letting them know that the substance abuse center is available in helping combat drug abuse. This comforting message also informs parents that drug abuse in the family is nothing to struggle alone. "Cape Fear Substance Abuse Center is providing the support our community needs."

Treat yourself to an evening of live theatre May 1 and May 2 at the SRO Theatre in Kenan Hall. One is a short one-act by George Bernard Shaw called THE DARK LADY OF THE SONNETS. The other is an original play by the director Virginia Davis. Both are comedies and should prove to be an enjoyable evening of theatre. Admission is free and we welcome everyone. Curtain is at 8:00 p.m. For more information contact Creative Arts office in Kenan Hall.

Seahawks Battling Slump

Dean Buchan
Staff Writer

Frustration is something the UNC-Wilmington baseball team is learning a lot about these days.

The Seahawks were 22-5 at one point, enjoying the convenience of playing their first 25 games at home. Now UNCW is 27-18-1.

Last weekend in Harrisonburg, Va., the 'Hawks scored 32 runs in their three-game series with James Madison, yet only won one of the three and lost hold of their firm grip on first place in the ECAC South. Frustrating.

Earlier in the week the Seahawks traveled to Rocky Mount to take on a red-hot North Carolina Wesleyan team. UNCW played well, and was tied 5-5 through ten innings, only to have the game called due to darkness. Frustrating.

In the weekend series at JMU, the host Dukes only got five hits, but took advantage six base on balls and one batter by starter Curtis Hopper--a very atypical day for him--as JMU won 9-6.

In the second game of Saturday's double-header, the Seahawks exploded for 16 hits on the way to a 17-5 whipping of JMU. Senior Bobby Bryant rapped two home runs and a double, and teammate Mike Byers added a tape-measure home run for the 'Hawks.

In Sunday's nine-inning game, UNCW led 5-1 through five innings as Bryant added his third home run in two days. But JMU rallied, scored seven runs in the sixth innings, and cruised to a 14-9 win over the 'Hawks.

Batting leaders going into the JMU series for UNCW included: Reggie Redd (.349), Bobby Bryant (.342), John Catalano (.327), Gary Hall (.325), Bobby Reynolds (.325), and Mitch Wells (.302).

Other statistical leaders for UNCW include: RUNS-Reynolds (38), HITS-Reynolds (55), RBI-Gary Hall (36), DOUBLES-Reynolds (15), TRIPLES-Redd (2), HOME RUNS-Hall (8), STOLEN BASES-Mitch Wells (21).

The UNC-Wilmington women's tennis team ended its season Sunday in Williamsburg, Va. in the ECAC South Tournament.

The Lady Seahawks finished fourth out of seven teams. William & Mary and Richmond finished as the top two teams of the tournament.

The UNCW roster includes: Angie Frazier, LeAnn Barkley, Natalie Brown, Jana Sowers, Allison Shoulars, Sarah Uminski and Melissa Tyynismaa.

The Creative Arts Dept. Dance and Music Students are presenting an "Informal Showcase" of original and class choreography with musical interludes. Music students from UNCW music division will be performing these interludes. The Dance portion will be performed by students of the Modern Dance Techniques and Movement Exploration classes. The Modern Dance section has been choreographed by the instructor, Doris Levy, and will feature the music of Bach. This Dance is based on techniques that have been studied in class. The Movement Exploration students will be performing original short solos that have been derived from choreography and improvisation problem solving in class. they will explore diverse themes of movement in a nontechnical fashion with sound accompaniment by original and known composers. The concert will last from 2:00 p.m. to 3:00 p.m. and will be held in Kenan Auditorium. The admission is free and we welcome everyone.

A medieval tale of two lovers placed under a curse by a jealous bishop is the subject of the new movie LadyHawke. The woman must be a hawk by day, the man is a wolf by night, and never the two shall meet. Through the use of a couple of interesting camera shots, some fairly good acting, and a strange musical score by Alan Parsons, Director Richard Donner has created a rather mediocre film.

There have been movies which managed to capture the look and feel of medieval times, most recently "Excalibur," with a reasonable amount of success. The violence, the earthy lighting, the splendid heavy costumes—all of these things often combined to recall an era long past. In LadyHawke these things are all present, but they never really come together to create a realistic illusion—the background is often flat, bathed in a pale yellow light, and the characters often speak in terms that they themselves don't seem to understand. Scenes of transformation and violence are filmed in slow motion—a technique that can easily be effective and just as easily monotonous. In a film that relies so heavily on the inflexibility of time, this mechanical manipulation seems to be a contradiction. But, the real contradiction comes when the medieval characters go racing off into the sunset to the digital sounds of Alan Parsons (Remember "Eye in the Sky"?).

Escapism is a big item nowadays, and the movies have always been a major exponent of this. Fantasy in particular is capable of transporting the viewer to another world, a world that can be good or bad, but a world that maintains some thread of reality. That's what makes the film experience an important one, and I suspect that that's what makes LadyHawke an often boring film. There's nothing new, nothing important, nothing particularly involving. This is of course only my opinion—the person I went with liked the movie a lot!

School Kids Record Review

Prince and The Revolution

Twist

Prince and the Revolution take a ride through the psychedelic '60's with Around the World in a Day. This startling time warp is closer to the Beatles Magical Mystery Tour than anything Prince has done before.

Around the World in a Day sounds like it takes place in a fairground at a downtown bazaar in Cairo. Paisley Park showcases pure psychedelic pop in music and lyric content and has nothing of the dance-funk element associated with Prince's sound.

Condition of the Heart begins with a startling jazz piano motif and does a slowburn against the unimportance of money in the face of one's heartstrings.

The power of this LP lies in its experimentation with new sounds done at Prince's new studio. The grooves are meant to shock and it may be awhile for all this to sink on on impact. The themes are money, lust, temptation, love, fame and God—the lyrics being much more straight ahead than the mystery of Purple Rain. Although there was a time when psychedelia was cool if it sounded weird, the best music of this art form survived only if it had melody. Around the World in a Day will assume the same fate.

Things get clearer on side 2 as the Times' "The Bird" meets the National Anthem on America. "Pop Life" sounds like the only legitimate single in its simplicity. "The Ladder" assumes Purple Rain in tone and dramatics and turns into pure-T gospel. "Temptation" talks about Prince's fascination with lust and sex. The international lover takes over by the end of the LP with a little chit chat with God in the midst of screams and jazz saxophone. Don't worry...Prince asks for forgiveness in death as this initial light fluff becomes buried in total heaviness. "All thanks 2 God."

Softball is the big talk of the town among Greeks. Most Greeks will agree that while the regular season is fun, the real excitement occurs with the annual IFC softball tourney. Many Greeks feel that it is easy for 10 GDI's to pickup a good team with a campus selection exceeding 5,000 students. The Greek fraternities choose from 35-40 select elite men.

One Greek, Bo Butler, put it best when he said, "us Greeks use the regular season as a sort of spring training to prepare for the all-important softball tournament."

The tournament is officially designated to proclaim the Greek champions for 1985. The tournament is scheduled for Sunday, May 5th, beginning at 10:00 a.m. Anyone interested in seeing this fiasco is encouraged to attend. A most valuable player will be selected and awarded an official Bob Eucker T-shirt. Hope to see you in the first row.

All of the fraternities here on campus have worked hard to gain the admiration of the community. Various activities have helped to give the Greek system in Wilmington a good reputation. Maybe some of you are unaware of the charitable work that has been going on. The Delta Tau Delta fraternity has participated in the Crop Walk, Special Olympics and they also went out into the Wilmington area and fixed up orphan homes by painting and rebuilding.

The Sigma Alpha Epsilon fraternity has sponsored a Christian Childrens Fund. They have also participated in the Red Cross Blood Drive on campus and were a big help in cleaning up after the hurricane Diana disaster.

Pi Kappa Phi fraternity has also been active in national fund raisers. They contributed over $1,000 to the Save The Lady campaign (referring to the reconstruction of the Statue of Liberty). The Pi Kappa also worked on project Push where they raised funds for playground units for the severely handicapped.

The Chi Phi fraternity is the only chapter with a house. Although they are the only group with a house, most of the Greeks live off campus and have responsibilities in the community. They have received much publicity for their support of the Seahawk basketball team. They also had a drive to raise funds for Muscular Dystrophy, and contributed over $500 last year.

The Kappa Sigma fraternity went down to Wrightsville Beach and painted the fire hydrants. They also participated in the Special Olympics and had fundraisers campaign for the United Way.

The Tau Kappa Epsilon fraternity is also active with the blood drive on campus and participated in the Crop Walk. They also raised money by rolling an empty keg from Wrightsville Beach to Wilmington, and donated profits to St. Jukes Hospital.

We are proud of all the groups and their accomplishments this year. We need the support of the administration and student body, if we are going to grow and prosper. We feel comfortable in saying the Greek system is alive and thriving and here to stay. We would like to thank our secretaries Cam Moore and Linda Williams for their dilligent help throughout the columns this year. Looking forward to next year's rush and to returning to Behind the Greek Columns. A special congratulations is extended to all Greek members who are graduating May 18. Even though you are leaving college, memories of your Greek life shall never fade

Student Challenges Honor Code

A transfer student successfully has challenged—at least for the moment—one of the nation's last honor systems to require students to snitch on campus cheaters.

Princeton inadvertently has admitted Wade Randlett, 20, despite Randlett's refusal to abide by the school's 92-year-old student honor code.

Though signing a pledge to uphold the code is required for admission to Princeton, Randlett, who transferred from the University of California at Berkeley, objects to the provision requiring students to report cheaters.

"If you had an honor code where there was no clause about turning people in, honor would be much better served," Randlett says.

"Then someone can come through here (Princeton) and say 'I could have cheated. There was nobody to turn me in,'" he says.

Most universities agree. Many schools that have student honor codes have deleted provisions requiring student to turn in cheaters.

"We want to instill a feeling of honor," says Amy Jarmen, academic support director at the College of William and Mary, whose honor code deleted its snitch requirement in the early 1970's.

The University of West Virginia made a similar change. Stanford's honor code requires students only to "take an active part" in stopping cheating.

"It makes more sense to give students a range of options," says Stanford judicial affairs officer Sally Cole.

"Students could, for example, make disapproving noises in class if they saw cheating," she notes. "You can extinguish a lot of behaviors with social pressure. Cheating is one of them."

Cole says a survey found 20 percent of Stanford students say they ignore instances of cheating.

A random sample of schools shows that aside from Princeton, only the U.S. military academics require students to turn in cheaters.

Military cadets do not, however, have to sign pledges to abide by the code in order to gain admission.

Princeton officials decline to comment on the content of the school's honor code, saying that students are responsible for it.

Dean Joan Girgus did, however, call the code "the heart of our existence."

Student members of the honor code committee could not be reached for comment.

They discovered Randlett's refusal to sign the pledge only after Randlett himself told them about it.

Princeton administrators decided to admit Randlett anyway because it was their mistake.

Carson to Speak

Courtesy of
UNCW News Bureau

The University of North Carolina at Wilmington will graduate 833 men and women at 10 a.m., Saturday, May 18, at Trask Coliseum. Commencement speaker for the thirty-sixth graduation program will be Phillip G. Carson, chairman of the University of North Carolina Board of Governors. An attorney in Asheville, Carson was elected chairman of the 32-member board in July, 1984. Prior to his election as chairman, he had served on the board for 12 years. A major responsibility will be chairing the selection committee charged with picking a new president for the UNC system to replace President William C. Friday when he retires in 1986.

Also speaking at commencement will be Senior Class President Lynn Ward of Goldsboro.

Graduates may pick up caps and gowns in the UNCW book store between 8 a.m. and 4 p.m. Monday through Friday. Commencement rehearsal for UNCW graduates in August and December, 1984, and spring 1985 will be held at 10 a.m., Friday May 17, at Hanover Hall. The UNCW Alumni Association will provide refreshments on the lawn outside Hinton James Building immediately following rehearsal. All graduating seniors are invited to attend.

Graduation Plans Discussed

Contributions by the Journalism class

With the graduation of 1985 fast approaching the seniors of UNCW are faced with many alternatives. These choices range from graduate school to professional careers. And those seniors who claim they need a vacation, just take off a few months for rest and relaxation.

Every year many UNCW graduates apply to graduate or law school, feeling they need more education to attain professional careers. On the other hand, many graduates opt for a career as soon as they graduate. Many seniors are offered career opportunities directly after graduation.

For those graduating seniors still undecided about the future, here are some of your fellow senior's plans.

Nancy Slovik, an English major, will graduate from UNCW in May. She plans to attend law school at UNC-Chapel Hill in the fall.

She was also accepted at the University of South Carolina at Columbia and she is on the list of finalists to be reviewed in May for acceptance at Wake Forest University. Slovik has also applied to North Carolina Central University and was accepted there as well.

Physics and Chemistry students leaving UNCW this May and August will be attending a variety of graduate and professional schools in the fall.

Butch King, Vikki Watts, and Kevin Fitzgerald will all be entering Pharmacy School this fall. Butch King and Vikki Watts are both juniors who will enter the School of Pharmacy at Chapel Hill. Vikki hopes to work in a hospital as a doctor of pharmacy while Butch would like to eventually have his own practice. Another pre-pharmacy student at UNCW interested in a community practice is Kevin Fitzgerald. Kevin is a sophomore who will enter the Medical University of South Carolina in Charleston. All three of these students have three years of Pharmacy School ahead of them.

Jeff Mintz and Kathy Norris, seniors finishing their B.A. in Chemistry, will be attending Dental School at Chapel Hill next year. After four years of study Jeff will be able to begin working towards his goal of owning a practice. Kathy wants to specialize in orthodontics and open her own office, too.

Bev Gough graduates from a pre-med program here and enters the University of Alabama at Birmingham this fall. She wants to study optometry now and have her own practice later.

Shermond Thurmond is another student going into optometry. He will attend the Southern College of Optometry in Memphis, Tennessee. Afterwards, he may join the military to gain experience and pay off school loans.

Psychology at best an interesting major. Many people wonder just what can be done with a BA in this field.

Several students who are graduating from UNCW this year with a major in Psychology have found varying uses for their degree.

Tommy Foushee, who just turned 36, is planning to continue his education by going to medical school in the Caribbean. Foushee who plans to attend Ross University says it is hard for someone his age to get into a mainland U.S. medical school which is one reason he chose the Caribbean.

Another psychology major, Richard Loren, hopes to attend West Virginia University in Morgantown for his graduate study. Loren hopes to obtain his Ph.D. and practice clinical psychology. He says he also would like to teach on the college level and hopes to combine both clinical and academic pursuits.

Several other psychology majors who hope to attend graduate schools are: Mary Ann Branstetter, Cindy Bullins, David Farmer, and Susan Pope.

Peggy Eubanks is one of the eight students to be a part of a premier program at East Carolina University. She has always had an interest in the cardiovascular system and has been accepted into the exercise physiology program at ECU. Peggy will also be working in the Human Performance Lab with an assistantship.

Marsha Harrington from Broadway, NC, sees her upcoming summer internship as a challenge. Marsha will be interning at Dorothea Dix Hospital in Raleigh and her main task will be reintegrating the patients to live out in the community again. Marsha, who will be graduating with a bachelor's degree in Therapeutic Recreation, says this internship is different and adds she feels the TR department here at UNCW is fantastic.

Senior Anxieties

Nancy Slovik
Journalism Contributor

Senior year. Supposedly the best year of college life. You're almost done. Only a few courses left to take. Every nice day finds you at the beach. You're just taking it easy while you ride these last few months out.

This is the conception many students have of senior year.

Unfortunately, however, senior year is actually filled with all sorts of unexpected anxieties, uncertainties, and frustrations.

Should I work or go to graduate school? If I apply to graduate school will I get in? If I look for a job will I find one? How far away should I move? What about my relationship with my college sweetheart? Do we leave each other or get married? Will one of us have to sacrifice a job offer or career to follow the other?

So many questions you don't have answers for.

Dr. Edward Reilly, Psychological Counselor, says it all boils down to transition. "Many students don't realize that the stress they feel is related to transition- marriage, graduate school, new jobs. All these things can add up and get to you."

Bob Haywood, campus minister, agrees. "Anxiety is rampant." He says leaving college is one of the natural growth stages that cause stress. Seniors leaving college are much like Freshmen leaving home. In both cases the student leaves a safe, secure environment and enters a new world that is threatening because of its enormity and strangeness to the students experience. Haywood says Freshmen are the largest class experiencing trauma but seniors run a close second in the anxiety they experience about their futures.

One question about the future which concerns seniors is marriage. Society pushes marriage as the next big step after college. Women often feel more stress than men here because society gears them toward seeking a family as well as a career.

Another problem some Seniors have when they come to Haywood is that they simply don't know what to do. The element missing in these students, he says, is a sense of vocation- a sense of calling to do something-anything! Students who have the sense of calling to be a doctor, for example, are better able to get through this year of stress than students who have no specific goals to work towards.

Diane McKinstry, Director of the Student Development Center, says the number one problem she sees seniors experiencing is job-related stress. Many seniors avoid beginning a job search in order to avoid the many anxieties job hunting involves- being denied over and over again and feeling that nothing is being gained after years of effort in college. Also, many seniors getting liberal arts degrees believe they can't do anything marketable, but they don't realize they have acquired the skills to do a broad range of things.

McKinstry encounters seniors who are burned out on school and are simply driving themselves to finish. This lack National Competition. These two words summon tests of skill and ability on a grand scale and that is just what the National Forensic Association Tournament, held at Marshall University in Huntington, West Virginia stood for. The UNC-W team ventured north with high hopes of a top ten finish. This was a indeed high goal since their previous ranking was fourth-first. These hopes came very close to being realized as the Seahawks finished 16th out of 108 of the top schools in the country. Some schools having three times the team members UNC-W possesses.

"I am very pleased with the team's performances," stated Coach Trimble. "The team's accomplishments are significant beyond bringing recognition to the school - they brought recognition to the region as well." This recognition is difficult to earn because the power-houses in Forensics are from the north and midwest and carry strong reputations which makes it difficult for younger, smaller programs to break in.

The five day tournament was long and grueling. There are four preliminary rounds in which anywhere from 100-250 competitors will perform their events against five other competitors in each round. The judges ballots are then tabulated and the top 24 speakers advance to quarter-finals. The top 12 then advance to semi-finals; top six to finals. The Dramatic Duo team of Rick Olsen and Mitch Butts were able to advance to quarters in their event - proving to be one of the top 24 duo teams in the country.

The 16th place ranking was due to a strong showing in the preliminary rounds by Wendy Crowson, Melinda Greene and Tina Hester.

Another significant factor in their finish is their coach. Frank Trimble has done an excellent job of getting versatility from each team member. The team would also like to thank alumni/former teammate Chuck Black for volunteering as a judge. He not only lowered registration costs, but kept them entertained for over 20 hours of van travelling to and from West Virginia.

The team is looking toward next year with even higher hopes. They are also looking for new members. If you have a desire to debate, perform poetry, literature, or sections of plays or write and deliver persuasive informative and humorous speeches please see Frank Trimble upstairs in Kenan Auditorium. [K-205].

While the majority of UNCW students are waiting impatiently for the end of classes and a little vacation, many seniors are making plans to continue their education in graduate school.

In the Math and Computer Science departments, there are several planning to go. One student, Angela Benson, plans to attend East Carolina University. Here at UNCW, she is concentrating in two areas, Management and Computer Science with a business option.

Her hobbies include needlework and she travels extensively.

Another UNCW student planning to attend graduate school is Anita Lister. A Chemistry and Computer Science major, she plans to attend the Chemistry graduate program at Perdue University. After graduate school, she to work in a research lab.

At East Carolina, she plans to study for a Master's in Business, and later hopes to get her doctorate and teach in a university in this area. Angela is excited about starting in May, but studying isn't all she does.

Book Store Changes Planned

Caperton
Journalism Contributor

In the near future, The Student Support Center will help eliminate a few problems for the UNCW campus bookstore.

Our campus bookstore will be moving the latter part of July into the Student Support Center. The new area will expand not only space-wise, but with optional reading, souvenirs, and academic supplies as well.

There will even be a Health and Beauty Aid Department to benefit students.

Working hours will expand also, according to UNCW Bookstore Manager Arnold A. Siko. Instead of the one register that is now used during the academic year, there will be nine registers in use beginning the Fall Semester of 85.

A new Trade Book Department will also be a part of the campus bookstore. It will consist of useful materials that will be available to both students and faculty members.

Even though there will be some improvements made within the bookstore, the rising prices of books, however, will definitely remain. Siko stressed that the bookstore is not responsible for these high prices. They are strictly set by the publishing companies themselves.

The bookstore only receives 20 percent of the sales. This 20 percent, Siko said, helps defray the expenses of running the bookstore and utilities. It also helps to cover the salaries and benefits for personnel and all other costs involved in operating an efficient service to students and faculty.

According to Siko, the bookstore is actually losing money, though many students fail to believe or understand this.

Eight-five percent of the total sales are from textbooks. The remaining 15 percent comes from the T-shirts, sweatshirts and souvenirs sold in the store.

SEAHAWK NEEDS STAFF

Lynn Franklin, Managing Editor

Most students have noticed some changes in The Seahawk this year. The changes in next year's paper, however, will be even more noticeable and allow The Seahawk to cover even more of the activities on campus.

"The new laser printer that will be used next year should make a big difference," said George Walker, current Editor.

Glow-worm

where have you been?

Also the paper will be full size next year instead of tabloid size as this year's paper.

Walker also hopes that next year's staff will be larger. "With only four or five staff members it's hard to put out a paper," he said. "The addition of a second section Journalism class should help by requiring students to spend several hours working on the newspaper," Walker added. This class, however, won't start until the Spring of 1986 which still may leave the staff shorthanded.

Anyone interested in working on The Seahawk next year should contact George Walker by calling 395-3789.

Intrafraternity Council

King
Journalism Contributor

The end of the spring semester is here and the Inter-Fraternity Council of UNCW has come a long way.

The IFC is an organization set up to improve and encourage relations between fraternities and is common to most universities with greek organizations.

Earlier this semester in an interview, IFC President Mark Boggis, talked of several items that were on the agenda for this semester. These items were helping out with the Spring Special Olympics; recognition of greeks for scholarship and athletic achievements; organizing the best Greek Week ever; having a spring party at the beach; and finishing a constitution that includes articles on hazing and rush activities.

Now at the end of the semester these items can be looked back upon and evaluated. The IFC did help out with the Spring Special Olympics, with several fraternity members acting as team coaches. A greek scholarship program is almost finished and a scholarship should be awarded next semester, trophies were also handed out to winning fraternities that participated in IFC intramurals and Greek Week seemed to go over well. A spring beach party for the Greeks didn't come together but is in the works for early September, and the IFC constitution is almost finished but will probably need to go through some changes to suit the fraternities. There was also a Greek semi-formal earlier this semester that appeared to go over well.

This has been a growing semester for the IFC at UNCW and hopefully one that it has learned from.

History Majors Planning Future

Amy Williams
Journalism Contributor

It's that time of year again--graduation, and like every other year, students are filling out job applications and applying to graduate schools.

Students in UNCW's History department are no exception. Julie Davis is only one of the many students interviewed who said they hoped to teach history after receiving their diplomas. Davis also plans to marry in the near future.

Greg Newton, a Burgaw native, says he will be attending the Southeastern Baptist Seminary in Wake Forest, N.C., and hopes to begin his own ministry after completing his studies at the seminary.

While others will be attending graduate school or teaching, 23 year old Darren Wardwell will be pursuing yet another career--a military one. Wardwell, will be entering the U.S.

Army as an officer in the Air Defense Artillery Division at Fort Sill, Texas.

John William Morris III, who completed his degree requirements in December is currently pursuing a Masters Degree in Maritime History and Underwater Research at East Carolina University.

There are only two such programs in the U.S., and the ECU program accepts only 12 people [who are all certified divers along with being college graduate] each year. Morris has also been nominated as a recipient of this year's Hoggard Medal as well. The Medal, which is presented in behalf of the late Dr. John T. Hoggard, is given to the student who, although getting off to a rough start, has gone on to exhibit improvement throughout his or her remaining years at UNCW.

APO: Service Fraternity

Gail Niemeyer
Journalism Contributor

Alpha Phi Omega, APO, is a co-ed fraternity here on campus. It is one of the many fraternities that is a part of the National Service Fraternity Organization. APO's services are directed toward the campus, the community, brotherhood, and the nation. This past year, APO has been involved in various events on UNCW's campus.

This fraternity put together the Pizza War competition to help raise money for the Big Buddy program. Domino's, Show Biz, and That's Amore all participated in the competition, with Domino's pizza coming out on top. B100 radio station sponsored this event bringing music and awarding prizes to the pizza parlors that participated. As a result of this fundraising event, APO was able to donate 1,028 dollars to the Big Buddy program.

of motivation to work academically becomes more of a problem for students who have part-time jobs that have become meaningful to them. Students find themselves torn between jobs and school.

Some students are also frustrated because they have avoided taking a particular course they need and now it isn't offered or is difficult to handle with all their other pressures.

Another aspect of senior anxieties McKinstry sees is the strain on relationships many couples experience. During this year there is often a reevaluation of whether the relationship will continue or not.

Senior year is certainly not all it's reputed to be. The year is a very stressful time for students who have major decisions and transitions to make in the near future.

Chamber Singers Plan Schedule

The UNCW Concert and Chamber Singers are seeking new members from among the student body at UNCW. A busy season of concerts is planned, including concerts on campus, in the Wilmington community, and on tour. The groups are open to qualified students in any major, and the Concert Choir offers a special invitation to members of the faculty and staff to join.

The Concert Choir (Music 086-01) meets for rehearsal on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday at 12:00 to 12:50 p.m. and students earn one academic credit (which is applicable to basic studies in the Creative Arts). Plans for the fall semester include a November 26 concert with the Wilmington Symphony (featuring selections from Gershwin's Porgy and Bess), a December 5 concert with the North Carolina Symphony (selections from Handel's Messiah and the Poulenc Gloria), and the annual Wilmington Symphony "Walk-in" Messiah.

The Chamber Singers (Music 083-01) meet for rehearsal on Tuesday and Thursday from 12:30-1:20 p.m. and students can earn one academic credit. It is a select group of 24 singers (6 persons per part) from the Concert Choir. The Chamber Singers will perform November 8 with guitarist Rob Nathanson at St. John's Museum of Art and on November 11 at the annual convention of the North Carolina Music Educators' Association. Later in the semester, the Chamber Singers will perform in a number of Christmas season programs in the Wilmington area, including several programs on television and radio.

Spring plans include a tour to New Orleans and performances in Wilmington and at UNCW.

Students who are interested in Concert Choir or Chamber Singers should stop at the music office or call Dr. Joe Hickman at 395-3394 for additional information.

CAHILL RECEIVES POSITION OF PROVOST

UNCW NEWS BUREAU

Dr. Charles L. Cahill, Vice Chancellor for Academic Affairs at The University of North Carolina at Wilmington, has been named Provost of the university. In making the announcement, Chancellor William H. Wagoner noted that Charles Cahill is the first Provost for UNCW.

Cahill will continue to function as Vice Chancellor for Academic Affairs, a position he has held since 1971, carrying the title Provost and Vice Chancellor for Academic Affairs.

Cahill came to UNCW in September, 1971, from Oklahoma City University where he served as associate dean of the College of Arts and Sciences and director of research.

A native of El Reno, Oklahoma, Cahill holds the A.B. degree in biochemistry from the University of Oklahoma.

"The title of Provost will be especially beneficial throughout the process of establishing the institution as a Comprehensive Level 1 University," Wagoner said. "It will be the responsibility of the Provost to direct and coordinate the entire process of implementation our long range plans keeping in perspective the primacy of the academic role of the institution during our next stage of program and physical expansion."

In academic terms, the title Provost traditionally means Executive Vice Chancellor or Executive Vice President. The second line officer at UNCW has always been the chief academic officer of the institution, more recently called the Vice Chancellor for Academic Affairs.

Dr. Cahill's new position is really a title change to reflect what he's been doing for the last two or three years, particularly his supervision of educational and research activities," Wagoner said.

UNIVERSITY ANNOUNCES SHUTTLE-BUS SERVICE

UNCW NEWS BUREAU

Over the past few years, there has been an increase in the number of assaults on college campuses. As a result of this, there has been speculation on the part of campus officials and student leaders as to how to protect students from assault on campus. Ideas have ranged from a student run escort service to a university run bus service. However, each of these has problems inherent.

A student run escort service has had the problem of lack of manpower and organization. If a student wished to be escorted, he/she would have to either sign-up in advance and meet the escort at a prescribed time and place or call a central location that would dispatch an escort. The problem with signing up is that it allows no flexibility for the student. The central phone center is difficult to staff, needing at least three people at all times, two to escort and one to man the phones.

The main problem with a university run bus service is economic. For the university to supply bus service would entail bus drivers, buses, maintenance, gas, and insurance. This added expense is generally considered a luxury that cannot be afforded with the present budget.

Given the history of the problem it was necessary to look at it in a new way. Taking the positive aspects of each of the previously proposed solutions we arrive at a viable solution to the problem that is economically sound.

If a student run shuttlebus were to be established with community support to defray the startup expenses, the university would be able to have the service with minimal expense. This service would be administered by the Shuttle Bus Task Force which would be organized under the president of the SGA.

The Shuttle Bus Task Force is a committee that would oversee the implementation and administration of the Shuttle Bus. They would be responsible for drawing up rules, schedules, and any policies necessary to insure the efficient operation of the shuttle.

The task force would be responsible for the day to day running of the shuttle and public relations.

The university would be responsible for securing any insurance necessary for the shuttle bus.

The president of the SGA would oversee the task force and supply funding for fuel needs.

Don Kimball Cheverolet is responsible for supplying an eight person van and any maintenance necessary for that van.

Each of the student groups involved would be responsible for supplying drivers throughout the shift that they were assigned. All assignments would be made early in the semester and must be approved by each participating group.

Initially the route of the shuttle bus would include the dorms, Randall Library, and the terminal clusters located around campus. The bus would run Sunday through Thursday from 6:00pm until 12:00pm and Friday from 6:00pm until 9:00 pm.

The Shuttle bus, as proposed, would be a cost effective way of providing

BY DANIELLE WOODS

Welcome back! It's--you guessed it--school time again. For all you new kids on the block as well as the veterans (and let us not forget the ones on the 6 year plan), let me introduce myself: I am DANIELLE WOODS. NOT Daniela. NOT Daniella. NOT Dannyell. NOT Dingyell. NOT Danelle. NOT even Daniel. But DANIELLE. I'm replacing Stephanie Loftus as the Seasquawk writer due to the fact that she has transferred to UNC-CH.

So as a new staff member I wish to bid everyone hello. HELLO! Beyond saying hello I would like to give the freshmen and new transfer students a preview of what to expect.

DORMS: NOISE-- parties, parties, and more parties...

COURSES: Confusion registration lines, closed sections, and of course wonderful drop/add...

BOOKS: Very, Very, EXPENSIVE!! Ha, you pay thirty dollars for a history book. Then they pay you five dollars for that book and two English books when you sell it back...

PARKING STICKERS: Students and Teachers--forty-six dollars. (And that doesn't even insure a place in which to park) ...

TRAFFIC: Congestion-bumper to bumper with all the new additions on campus.

FINALLY, TICKET HAPPY POLICE: I saw them giving them out on the first day. (MAYBE they were just warnings but really) . You know five dollars really can add up.

Enough of school, lets get to the good stuff like special attractions:

BEACH: really nice in November.

And we have all the latest hang-outs: The Mad Monk, The Palm Room, and, don't forget Nashville East! Places where you can get drunk and pick up members of the opposite sex, two for the price of one.

Then there is the movies---HOORAY for Hollywood Classics like: The return of ET for all those who missed it the first time and the block buster of the year Masters of the Universe. The Secret of the Sword; Starring that blond haired, blue-eyed hunk HE-MAN! (Oh be still my heart) Just kidding!?

Seriously it's not all that B-A-D.

Good luck and see ya!

additional security for the students at the University of North Carolina at Wilmington. With support from all sectors of the campus and community the shuttle bus will no longer be an idea, but will become instead an example of what a university, it's students, and the community can accomplish when working together.

President's Corner

Welcome home fellow Seahawks. For those of you who don't know me, my name is Paul Bell, the Student Government Association President. I hope to continue the tradition of the President's Corner, bi-weekly, to inform you of on campus events and expressing my opinion and yours on issues. I hope to hear back from you with positive or negative comments. We may have room to print your letter and a response as space permits.

I hope to see more students getting involved this year. You freshman out there have really proven yourselves as true Seahawks by your overwhelming enthusiasm during orientation. We hope to get you involved by presenting the third annual SGA CLUB FAIR, Wednesday, September 4. Student Organizations will be there to tell you more about themselves and allow you time to "shop around".

SGA will be trying to get more in touch with you this year at the most basic levels. Look for our suggestion boxes, ask for a representative to come and talk with your group, or come see us personally, in the SGA office in the Union.

Your first opportunity to express your opinion is to Vote in the fall elections, September 9. Get involved to serve others, run for one of the representative-at-large seats on the Senate. You Freshman get your own voice with four class positions; Register September 3-6 in our SGA office.

The New Student Government "People Making Things Happen," that's what we are all about. Until next time, good luck with your first exams.

Paul Bell

Stillpoint

by Bob Haywood

It is in the questions, my friends! It is all in the questions!

Whatever hope of possibility or potential there is, lies not in finding answers, but in discovering the significant questions as they emerge from within ourselves and living with and through them.

All of us beginning this new year at UNCW are going to find ourselves dealing with some significant questions in our life. What am I doing here? What should I major in? How close do I want to get to someone emotionally? What do I really believe in? And the questions go on and on and on. Being here is simply bound to confront you with new and important questions or new versions of old questions. When we find ourselves asking these questions, it is all too common for us to feel anxiety arising as we feel that we must have to answer to whatever question is posed, and have that answer now.

Significant questions (and only we can decide which are significant for us at a given moment) emerge in us not so much to demand answers as to indicate the agenda of our present lives, to show us the cutting edges of our growth. The question "what do I really believe?", is a wonderful invitation to spiritual growth. The question "how do I get along with strange roommates?", is a scary but an exciting invitation to examine our values and to develop our interpersonal skills.

The problem comes because so many of our questions are rooted in fear. We are surrounded by a society, both generally and here at UNCW, that seems to want to set our agenda and determine how we relate to members of the opposite sex, how serious we are about our studies, how critical it is to fit into the group, etc. It is when real or perceived expectations of people, groups, or of organizations set our agenda that we become bound up with fear. The question "should I be here?" will cause some students to pack up and go home, when it is rooted in fear caused by being in a new place away from home, not having many friends and not being clear about career goals.

Fear leads us to ask, "what do I major in?", rather than living with the question, "what do I really want to do in my life?" It is fear that leads us to wonder, "what will happen to our relationship if I don't sleep with him / her?", rather than living with the question, "what kind of relationship do I really want with this person?" See the difference? The difference is fear.

So there's the challenge. First, listen to the questions that come out of your experiences here and learn to see them as invitations to your own growth and becoming. Secondly, turn to whatever relationships you have and to whatever new resources you can find that will enable to translate questions born out of fear into questions that can be lived through. Friends, faculty, student development staff, campus minister, all can be available to provide emotional support for dealing with fear and living into your questions. Faith provides another critical support for staying with the struggle within. So whether it is friends or professionals outside you, or your reliance on God within you, seek whatever support you need. Claim the struggle; name it; live with it and grow into the self directed person you have it within yourself to be.

Bowers Participates In Program

UNCW News Bureau

Mark E. Bowers, a rising senior at UNCW, is one of 85 students participating in ongoing research in Oak Ridge, Tennessee, under the Student Research Participation Program, sponsored by the U.S. Department of Energy's Office of Energy Research.

Bowers, a chemistry major from Charleston, S.C., is working in the Medical and Health Sciences Division at Oak Ridge Associate Universities. His project involves enzymatic release of arachidonic acid from acyl- and ether-linked phospholipids in macrophages.

According to Dr. Alfred Wohlpart, chairman of Oak Ridge Associated Universities' University Programs Division which manages the program, the 10-week appointments have allowed over 2000 students since 1958 to gain "hands-on" experience in a realistic work environment in projects relating to energy production, utilization, conservation, and their social applications.

The Student Research Participation program is one of many programs in which undergraduate and graduate students participate in ongoing research at DOE national laboratories. Opportunities are also available for faculty members. For more information on these programs contact University Programs Division, Oak Ridge Associated Universities, P.O. Box 117, Oak Ridge, TN 37831-0117.

DIVING TANK SPRINGS LEAK

LOUIS DICELLO
STAFF WRITER

The Seahawk swimming program has come to a temporary standstill. This summer fissures were found in the diving tank, and water was seeping into the underlying sand bed. This occurrence prompted state officials to call for the draining at both the swimming and diving pools.

On September 3 local engineers contracted by UNCW will probe the bed of the diving tank to determine if any shifting of the sand bed has occurred.

The swimming pools has been okayed to refill, but because of the problems the swimming coaches must endure in the refilling process, opening of the pool will not occur until later this week.

This situation has not only interrupted the athletic program, but also the academic and free swim program.

The administration realizes the needs of the coaches and students and are doing the best they can in an awkward situation. As allows Coach Allen is an optimist and feels the problem will soon be under control and the programs continued.

GO SEE CP&P

Mona Franklin
Contributor

Attention: If you have a rich uncle or plan to win a million dollars, please disregard this article. But if you don't....

The job for which you are waiting, or the one you need, or the one you'd like could be found right inside the Student Union. Why the Student Union? Because that is where Career Planning & Placement is found.

Career Planning & Placement (CP&P) is often considered a job placement service for seniors only. And this reputation is well-deserved.

When a senior registers with CP&P, this file is kept active for at least one year after he/she graduates, and longer, if necessary. For just the few minutes it takes to fill out a registration card with CP&P, a senior gains a whole staff of job placement workers who will work to help that senior find the best possible job available.

Seniors are often notified of an upcoming job interview or recruiting visit in which they might want to participate. And many times prospective employers or companies will first go to CP&P to help them find applicants. So those seniors registered with CP&P have a definite advantage.

But that's just one facet of Career Planning & Placement. Underclassmen such as freshman, sophomores and juniors can also take advantage of CP&P's services.

They have large listings of both part-time and full-time jobs which can prove useful to all students.

CP&P also offers workshops on resume composition, interviewing, job search skills, job strategies and federal and state employment, plus expanded topics such as values clarification. These workshops are free and open to all students.

And for those already employed, CP&P can help you locate a new job in your field or major, if you so desire. This could prove very helpful in the years to come.

All this and more is waiting for you, students, in your Career Planning & Placement office. So why not go by now, before things get more hectic, and see what Francis Carr, Shirley Yarbrough, Judy Bentley, Catherine Olsen, Frank Vitale, or Sandra Harkins (director of CP&P) can do for you.

SOCCER TEAM EXPECTS WINNING SEASON

DEAN BUCHAN
SPORTS EDITOR

For the UNCW soccer team 1984 was almost as bad as George Orwell said it would be.

The Seahawks, who had only five or less available substitutions last year, suffered its first losing season in 11 years. The Hawks struggled to a 4-113-4 record including a 1-5-1 tilt in the ECAC South (now called the Colonial Athletic Association).

Though pre-season is usually the time for all coaches to be optimistic, UNCW coach Calvin Lane has a good reason for being that way.

Despite losing its top two scorers—Brad Dixon and Kevin Cox—to graduation, the Seahawks have everybody else back. Meanwhile, Lane had a banner recruiting year. 26 names (10 more than last year) dot the Hawk roster this season.

"We had the best recruiting year of the last four seasons," said Lane, who is beginning his 15th season. "It's true that we needed more players, but we added quality as well as quantity."

Back for their senior seasons are Billy Collins, Lee Morgan, and Tom Darden, as well as Alberto Rodriguez, who sat out last season after being one of the Hawks top players in 1983. Other returning lettermen who should see a great deal of playing time are Billy Hughes, goalkeeper Donnie Lewis, and Pat Brown, who led the team in scoring as a freshman in 1983.

JUCO All-American Terry Lovell, a transfer from Prince George (MD) College is one of the newcomers who should help the Hawk effort immediately. Lovell, a versatile player, will probably see action at halfback.

Other newcomers of influence should be freshman David Cresswell from Annandalee, VA, who will play midfielder. Joining him will be two outstanding recruits from the prestigious Blair High School in Silver Springs, MD, Baede Minasse and Kaituta Sikyala. Another player returning to the lineup after a year's absence due to knee surgery will be sophomore Steve Alnutt.

"The one thing we're going to do is fill the shoes of Kevin Cox at the sweeper position," Lane added. "He gave us such outstanding efforts every time out. I feel we'll find that replacement because we've got a lot of competition going on right now in practice because of our added numbers and there is no one with a secure job right now."

With a roster that included quantity and quality, along with a schedule that is not as tough as the past few years, the Seahawks should compile their 10th winning season in the last 12 years.

SEAHAWKS ANNOUNCE TOURNAMENT SCHEDULE

Invitational tournaments at Virginia and Tennessee, along with 14 Colonial Athletic Association games highlight UNCW 1983-86 men's basketball schedule.

The Seahawks open the season at West Point, N.Y. on Nov. 23 when Army open its new basketball facility. One week later the Hawks join Virginia, Towson State and Virginia Commonwealth, for the Virginia Tip-Off Classic in Charlottesville, Virginia. On December 20-21 UNCW will travel to Knoxville for the Volunteer Classic where it will face Baylor in the opening round, and either Tennessee or Furman on the second day.

A round-robin slate with Colonial Athletic Association (formerly the ECAC South) teams begin in January. UNCW's league opponents will be Navy, James Madison, William & Mary, Richmond, George Mason, American, and East Carolina.

Marine Expo Celebrates With Festival

Do you enjoy ocean breezes, fresh seafood, quiet walks along an historic riverbank? New Hanover County, bounded by the Atlantic Ocean and the Inland Waterway on the east, the Cape Fear River on the west and a large freshwater lake in between, is celebrating its geography in a new festival with something for each member of your family.

From September 28-October 6, Marine Expo '85 will present sailing and fun board competitions, seafood cooking demonstrations, workshops, and more. Marine Expo takes a serious look at the tie of the waters to business and industry while highlighting their many recreational possibilities.

The fall fling kicks off with ocean sailboat racing on Sept. 28. Through the weekend ski boats, working boats, sailboats, bass boats and sports fishing boats will be on display at Wrightsville Beach. Dealers will be offering year-end sales on 1985 models and a preview of 1986 models.

The first leg of the First Wrightsville Beach Fun Board Regatta is on September 29th at Banks Channel. Clinics and competitions continue through the week. Advance registration may be made through the Parks and Recreation Dept. or Caribbean Trading Company at Wrightsville Beach.

A special exhibit on the Crusoe Island Dugout Canoe will open at the New Hanover County Museum beginning with a slide/lecture and the unveiling of a dugout made especially for the museum's permanent collection.

The list of recreational events continues with the Wrightsville Beach "Round About" race for anything with sails, sunfish/laser sailing regatta, sand sculpture competition, king mackerel tournament, a community cookout, open house at the NC Underwater Archaeological Lab, fireworks, ship tours, pirate battles and more.

For a complete schedule of events call 1-800-922-7117 (in N.C.), 1-800-222-4757 (out of state).

Club Fair '85

WOODY GUTHRIE
STAFF WRITER

The front yard of the university union was transformed into a carnival like atmosphere Wednesday as the Student Government Association its 3rd Annual Club Fair '85.

Thirty tables were set up along the sidewalk for various clubs to introduce themselves to the student body. Among the clubs were the UNCW radio club, WSEA, that broadcasted during the day. The S.G.A. gave out helium balloons to add to the colorful atmosphere. Also Alpha Phi Omega let go balloons with messages instructing anyone finding them to mail them back from wherever they landed.

Soft drinks and popcorn were free for the event, and hotdogs were on sale during lunchtime.

The day ended with a slow motion football game by the Campus Crusade that was enjoyed by all.

The purpose of the event says Daniela Sullivan, the S.G.A. club fair coordinator, was to have the clubs come out and meet the students and get them involved. She went on to explain that the clubs are funded by the students, so they should participate in them. She was especially pleased with the freshman participation today.

The fair was deemed a success and will be continued next year. So, if you missed this years event, make plans now for the next one.

Drug Problems On Campuses

COLLEGE PRESS SERVICE

A new recreational drug seems to be appearing on college campuses, researchers say.

Use of "magic" mushrooms—natural hallucinogens with effects similar to but milder than LSD—is rising on West Coast, New York City and even on British campuses, say researchers at UCLA and Cal State-Northridge.

But national drug surveys are missing what could be the beginning of a trend by asking the wrong questions and misinterpreting data, the researchers add.

The study, prepared by UCLA student John Thompson, Cal State ethnobotanist William Emboden and UCLA psychologists M. Douglas Anglin and Dennis Fisher, says nearly 15 percent of 1,507 students surveyed at UCLA and Cal State-Northridge admitted to using mushrooms at least once.

A state Substance Abuse Services study showed New York City high school students who had tried hallucinogens, including mushrooms, increased from six percent in 1978 to 10 percent in 1983.

"Our survey proved two things," Fisher noted. "First, mushrooms are the major hallucinogens being used in our sample, not LSD. And second, national drug surveys are asking questions in the wrong way and misreporting the data."

When mushroom users are asked if they have used

LSD or anything similar, "yes" respondents are labeled LSD users in other surveys, he says. Those who don't consider mushroom similar to LSD answer "no" and are recorded as non-users.

"Either way, the answers are misreported," Fisher says.

Most studies, he claims, show hallucinogens use is stable, but don't show use variations for different kinds of hallucinogens.

The California study, which asked specific questions about mushrooms, LSD and other hallucinogens, shows most users have tried mushrooms, but few have taken just LSD, he claims.

It's not the first inkling that hallucinogens are coming back.

In 1983, Drug Enforcement Administration spokesman Franz Hirzy said falling prices were increasing LSD's popularity.

A recent Arizona State study found LSD use had risen at four of five campuses surveyed: North Carolina, Arizona State, SUNY and Penn.

But the National Institute of Drug Abuse (NIDA) is skeptical.

"I haven't heard about increased mushroom use at least on this side of the country," says NIDA Washington, D.C. spokeswoman Dorin Czechowicz. "And I can't say (the California) study is supported by any data in our surveys."

But, so far, mushroom use seems to be confined to small areas on both coasts, Anglin says.

"The mushroom center seems to be established in Washington state," Fisher agrees. "The Pacific Northwest has an ideal wet, humid climate for growth. It's quite likely they grow well there."

The new interest in mushrooms could be cyclical, researcher Anglin explains.

"Don't ask me why, but about every 20 years is a cycle for drugs," he says. "It's like we had nostalgia for the '50s and now the '60s. People who didn't live through those times find them interesting."

Anglin blames "media hype" for generating interest in various drugs, and predicts the extent of mushroom use "depends on the media attention."

"These things have a kind of word-of-mouth attribution that makes them attractive to people who use them," he says. "Usually the experimenters are bright, alert people."

While it's illegal to possess or use mushrooms, the non-hallucinogenic reproductive spores are legal.

If mushrooms' availability enhances their popularity, "it will be interesting to see how fast the trend moves," Anglin says.

But the recent popularity mushrooms probably won't affect use of other drugs like marijuana, cocaine and alcohol, he says. "Coke is in for the rest of the decade."

"Arsenic and Old Lace" was held at beautiful Thaller Hall last week.

Rosenkoetter Appointed As Dean

UNCW NEWS BUREAU

Dr. Marlene M. Rosenkoetter has been appointed dean of the School of Nursing at UNCW. For the past 13 months, she has served as acting dean.

Rosenkoetter joined the faculty of UNCW in September 1981 as associate professor and chairman of the department of nursing, then an associate in arts degree granting program. She was charged with developing the bachelor's degree program in nursing at UNCW system which offers a two-year associate degree program in nursing.

In July, 1984, the School of Nursing was established. The first bachelor's degree program students started classes during summer session 1985. UNCW will award its first BS degrees in nursing in 1987.

With the assistance of a $200,000 gift from the Barnes Hospital, Inc., a smooth transition has been made from the AD program to the BS. The last class to be admitted to the ADN program was in the fall semester 1984, which means the ADN program will be phased out by the end of spring semester 1986.

Rosenkoetter holds a diploma in nursing from Barnes Hospital School of Nursing, the B.A. and M. Ed. degrees from the University of Missouri, the M.S.N. degree from East Carolina University and the Ph.D. from St. Louis University. From 1975-80 she served as Director of the Division of Health Sciences and Coordinator

Health Trend Grows

DEAN BUCHAN
SPORTS EDITOR

There is a healthy trend among college students.

Staying in shape and looking good is a priority for undergraduates, especially here at UNC by the Sea where the sandy shore of Wrightsville Beach is a common stomping ground.

For many, P.E. 101 or jogging around Brooks Field is not enough. That is why many of the area health clubs are catering to the students' needs—physically as well as financially. Such clubs are offering everything from aerobic classes to nautilus to co-ed whirlpools, as well as discount rates to make them even more attractive.

Want to join an area health club? Hurry. Most clubs' rates are semester rates, so the earlier you join, the longer you can enjoy the clubs' facilities.

Here is a breakdown of some of the areas' more popular health clubs, including price, club hours, and the facilities available:

THE WILMINGTON ATHLETIC CLUB—(2026 S. 16th St.) Formerly called Center Court, the Wilmington Athletic Club is a fast-growing, very luxurious club. The WAC offers aerobic classes, a Nautilus and free weight room, eight racquetball courts, a swimming pool, a newly-built gymnasium, locker rooms, steamrooms and saunas, lifecycles and stationary bikes, and towel rental, among other things.

The rate: $75 per semester. "We offer this student rate because we want the students here," said Director Ric Zimmerman. "We offer about the same rate as other area clubs, but we feel we have much more to offer here."

WAC's only drawback is that there are limited hours that students can use the facilities. The club is open from 5:30 AM to 9 PM weekdays, and 8 AM until 9 PM on weekends. Students can use the club at anytime except from 4:30 to 7:30 PM on weekdays, and noon to 5 PM on weekends.

ATLANTIC NAUTILUS—(3520 S. College Rd.) Atlantic Nautilus offers more than just Nautilus. 5,000 lbs. of free weights are available, as well as aerobics, stationary bikes, a whirlpool, sauna, and nutritional guidance is also offered.

The rate: $75 per semester.

"Our rate is only available to college students," according to Carol Pentz. "This deal is just for them."

Atlantic Nautilus is open from 7 AM to 9 PM Monday through Friday, 9 AM to 6 PM on Saturdays, and 1 to 6 PM on Sundays.

STUDIO TEN—(S. 17th St.) For those mainly interested in aerobic workouts. Studio Ten is popular especially among the female college students, who can attend aerobic or exercise workout classes on Monday through Thursday at 9 AM, 3:30, 4:30, 5:30, and 6:30 PM. Classes are also available on Fridays at all the previous times save 6:30 PM, and on Saturdays at 9:30 AM and 4:30 PM, and Sundays from 4 to 6 PM.

Studio Ten has eight instructors, and the afternoon classes are most popular among college students.

SEA*SQUAWK

by Danielle Woods
Staff Writer

Hi again!!
Today's topic of discussion (sounds pretty official, huh?) is about the harassment of customers by the retail persons in some shops.
You know the ones. For instance: You go into a "hoity-toity" clothing store at the Mall. Immediately upon entering you are pounced upon by beady-eyed, sharp-nosed, bi-focal clad harpy who demands, "May I help you?" in a low nasal sound that reminds you of someone from a Peter Lorre film. Then she gives you around and follows you the evil-eye when you touch something. I, myself, have nothing against merchants, because I am in the retail business as well. Therefore, I realize how vital it is to be ready for the customers, however, there are times when you must draw the line, like allowing the person to step through the door before anxiously tackling the individual with your desire to serve.
Does this annoy you as much as it does me? Well, if so, I have devised a plan that will undoubtedly cure that over-zealous service pusher. Interested?
It consists of a step by step instructions that beginners such as yourselves can understand.
*NOTE: I must stress the fact of following the sequence as printed unless otherwise suggested, until you have done it enough times.
1. Go to the Mall with a friend and seek out your potential victim or victims.
2. When you find her (It MUST be a her) gather your wits and go on in. Leave your friend outside, this can be done only on a one to one basis.

3. Make sure she's not busy.
4. Keep a straight face!!!!
5. Browse a bit. (Don't watch her, she's watching you!). When she does approach for the first time ("May I help you?") say no thank you or just browsing or just looking or not at this moment, etc.
6. Continue to browse.
7. When she approaches this time--go in for the kill!
8. Look at her shyly, say "NO" in a whisper. Look at her again, attempt a sad smile if you can. Don't push. Then say, "Maybe you can."
9. Take a deep breath and remember to keep a straight face.
10. (Say all of this breathlessly, hysterically, in a low tone and run it all together.) You see my mom needs a hair transplant, Dad's in jail, the mortgage is past due on the house, Aunt Harriet is obsessed with pickle-sundaes; while watching Jane Fonda on the VCR she stole under hypnosis for multiple personalities, my house has begun to talk, my little sisters have been sucked in by the TV, my youngest brother thinks he's Dracula and insists upon sleeping in a coffin, my other brother thinks he's Big Bird and keeps asking can you tell me how to get to Sesame Street, and I'm not normal, you know, I escaped the institution two days ago, (PAUSE) and my dog died!!!!
11. Then abruptly leave. Send your friend in and have him/her listen to her reaction.
If you do this I assure you, that the pushy peddlers will leave you alone. Then I'll have to find something or someone else to complain about. GOOD LUCK AND HAPPY HUNTING.

Announcements

There has been a change in the location of the intramural office; it is now located upstairs in the back of Hanover Gym.

Flags representing countries of international students attending The University of North Carolina at Wilmington are on display in the University Union Snack Bar.

The fourteen flags along with the U.S. Flag, courtesy of a grant from the Friends of UNCW, and hung by Ira Kersh, include the following countries: Austria, Canada, Colombia, Great Britain, Greece, India, Iran, Japan, Kuwait, Republic of China (Taiwan), Spain, Sweden, Thailand and Venezuela.

The Creative Writing Program of the UNCW English Department is once again sponsoring the University Poetry Contest and the Jessie Rehder Short Story Contest. Contestants may submit up to 3 poems and one short story. Prizes of $50, $30, and $20 will be awarded in each contest. Submissions must be left with the English Department no later than 5 pm Friday October 11.

Atlantis, UNCW's student Literary Magazine is currently accepting submissions for the Fall '85 issue. Poems, short stories, photography and art work may be left in the submissions box at the University Union Information Center. Deadline for submission is Friday October 11, at 5pm. Any student interested in working on the Atlantis staff are encouraged to attend the weekly staff meetings on Tuesdays at 4 pm in Room 205 of the University Union.

Guidelines and application forms for the Younger Scholars Program of the National Endowment for the Humanities are now available for photocopying in the Placement Office. The Program will award up to 100 grants nationally to college and high school students to conduct their own research and writing projects in such fields as history, philosophy, and the study of literature. Applicants must be 21 years of age or under throughout the calendar year in which the application is submitted; or, if they are over 21, they must be full-time college students pursuing an undergraduate degree at the time of application. Individuals who will have received or expect to receive a bachelor's degree by October 1, 1986, are not eligible to apply. The application deadline is November 1, 1985.

Recipients of these awards will receive a stipend of $1,800 and be expected to work full time for nine weeks during the summer of 1986, re-searching and writing a humanities paper under the close supervision of a humanities scholar. Please note that this is not a financial aid program and that no academic credit should be sought for these projects.

Students returning to UNCW this fall have noticed the completion of the Student Support Center. The Center, near the University Union, will house a number of important services for the students. The Student Health and Wellness Center, Student Development, and the Student Bookstore will be located in the facility. Catherine Vangellow, director of the Health Center, is excited with the new health facilities. She stated, "Students will not have to wait as long for medical attention as in the past." The health services are for any student with six or more hours. Vangellow also feels with the new central location, more students will take advantage of the health care services.

The new Student Support Center will have an increased staff as compared to last year. It consists of a physician assistant, two nurse-practitioners, two nurses and a medical assistant. Also, an increase from three to six examining rooms this year will improve care efficiency.

Diane McKinstry, director of Student Development, is pleased to finally be in the new building. She emphasized the central location and feels it will increase student awareness of the services offered. The Development Center has three full-time and five part-time workers, and offers counseling, learning services, disabled student services and testing as its functions.

Counseling can be on any subject or situation the student may feel they need help with. Students can feel free to enter the Center at any time and are taken on a first come first serve basis.

Learning services range from help in career choices to evaluation of one's personality. The learning services will have two resource librarians. One will deal with career information, college catalogs, and other decision making materials. Also included will be four SIGI (Systematic Interactive Guidance Information) plus system terminals. SIGI's function is to inform a student of all aspects of a chosen career.

The second library will be for quiet study, including materials to improve study skills, reading and vocabulary improvement. Two computer terminals and video cassette players will be in this library.

Disabled services are offered for any permanently or temporarily disabled students. The Center can obtain special equipment or help for these students. Also, the center can provide special assistance to students having difficulty with their classes.

Testing is the other service offered by Student Development. Almost all the graduate school exams are offered through the center. Also, the center offers a wide range of tests to help the student, ranging from vocational interests to personality testing.

The Student Bookstore, the last major service in the building has moved from the building next door. The new Bookstore has increased

Stillpoint

by Bob Haywood

Sitting in an open sailboat on a calm sea, one can see for approximately three miles in every direction before his view is limited by the horizon. Thus a circle of some six miles in diameter delineates that sailor's world.

We are all bounded by our horizons and the image takes on added significance when we include all of our life experience as part of our horizon as well as all we can physically see. With the boundaries of our life experience, i.e. our horizon, lies our limited or wide ranging experiences of culture, our life value (often pretty much dictated by our "home town" upbringing), our view of other people and the world, our personal faith system, and, most importantly, our positive or negative view of ourselves and our place in the universe. All this and much more makes up our present world of experience contained within our own personal horizon.

Hopefully, we are aware that there is much more beyond our limited horizon; much more to see, to know, to dream, to be and become. As a matter of fact, there is absolutely nothing in our experience or our world that there is not "more to!"

When our sailor makes land fall and climbs and single mountain in the middle of a tropical island, he finds his horizon expanded tenfold. Such a possibility for any of us who open ourselves to opportunities that change and enlarge our perspective. Being at the University is a great opportunity to climb an island mountain in the quest of larger horizons. Here you are already having and can continue to have new insights and experiences that will broaden your view of every aspect of your personal existence. Here you will learn that your understanding of life's potential is too small; your image of God is too small; your ideas about relationships and the possibilities of marriage are too limited; your view of what is impossible for you in your life is limited only by your willingness to risk; your ideas about people and culture and the earth itself are limited by ignorance. Nothing is safe from change of perspective unless you try to hide out from change, hide out in your old world with its limited horizons.

It is, admittedly, difficult and sometimes scary to move into a new and unknown emotional, intellectual, spiritual, and physical territory. It takes courage and the willingness to risk leaving safe and the known. But it is worth it! The new insights, the new learnings, the new relationships all contribute to a new and larger image of yourself that brings a greater degree of personal satisfaction. It seems that we have an incredible potential imbedded deeply in everyone of us that we have only to realize at this or any point in our lives. Expanding our horizons is, therefore, natural and appropriate for us.

And it is worth venturing into the unknown. I remember three years ago sailing through heavy storm at night at the helm of a 55' sailboat in the Bahamas. I was scared. What if we run aground? What if the mast breaks? What if we run out of fuel? We held course straight into the teeth of a 40 knot wind blowing on the bow and the next morning experienced great satisfaction at the success of weathering the storm and making land fall at exactly the point we wanted to be. Our horizons got bigger; that night and I love it and the memory of it. There are new experiences and the thoughts waiting at every compass point of your horizon. There are waiting in every classroom and textbook, every reading and research assignment, every encounter with a new person, every club and organization at UNCW and even in the silence of your own solitude. Make your landfall wherever you choose. Find your mountain and begin to climb it. However difficult to climb may be, I assure you that the view from the top is worth the trip.

Fraternities Invite Potential Members

The UNC-W Panhellenic Council would like to welcome everyone back to school and invite all females to sign-up for our sorority rush parties. You can sign up in the University Union and the Cafeteria beginning Thursday, August 29, through Monday, September 9, during extended lunch and dinner hours. We would encourage everyone to come out and learn more about college sororities. Joining a sorority can enrich your college days in many ways.

Sororities offer lifelong friendships and sisterhood. They promote high scholarship, personal development of individual members, and leadership abilities.

The sorority rush parties will be Tuesday, September 10, Wednesday, September 11, Thursday, September 12.

For more information on Sorority life, sign-up in the Union or Cafeteria and come to the Orientation meeting on Monday, September 9, at 3:30 or 6:30 in the University Union Room 100.

Michigan Faces Dilemma

COLLEGE PRESS SERVICE

For the second straight year officials of Michigan's 15 state colleges and universities faced the dilemma of: raised tuition and risk losing state funding, or to accept Governor James Blanchard's offer for a bigger slice of the state budget by freezing their tuition rates.

The schools said they needed both more tuition money and more state money to operate.

"We have inadequate resources, even with the generous action of the government," Michigan State President John DiBiaggio complained.

But MSU and the others finally accepted the offer last week, rolling back planned tuition hikes of about nine percent.

"Some have not completed their moves to rescind the tuition increases," says Tom Scott, Blanchard's deputy press secretary. "But all have indicated they will."

Students elsewhere may not be as lucky this academic school year.

A College Board report released last week found it will cost students nationwide much more to go to college this fall.

Tuition and fees will rise eight percent at private four-year colleges, nine percent at public four-year schools, eight percent at two-year private schools and nine percent at public two-year colleges, the College Board found. Tuition alone will increase an average of about seven percent of all schools, says Jack Cox of the National Association of College and University Business Officers (NACUBO).

"Colleges are playing catch-up from the double-digit inflation periods of the seventies," Cox explains.

Administrators say college costs have to keep rising faster than the current inflation rate to raise faculty salaries and pay for increased operating cost and school reforms.

Catching up means increases of 11.9 percent at Miami, 22.7 percent by 1986-87 at Big Bend Community College (Wash.) and 22 percent at the U. of Washington.

Texas tripled its tuition, while Southwest Missouri State's rose 10 percent, Yale's 7.67 percent and Minot State College's (S.D.) 15 percent.

Tough higher education still may be the only industry in America still raising its prices at a rapid rate, some see a slowing.

"The figures show a slowdown (in the rate of increase), and that's a hopeful sign," asserts Bill McNamara of the National Association of Independent Colleges and Universities. "But the question of cost containment is beginning to bother people."

It especially bothers students, who are tired of being "treated like dollar signs" as schools "become more like businesses than learning institutes," says

Colorado State University student Jim DeFede.

"All we're good for is to squeeze as much money out of us as possible."

DeFede led a summer protest of a planned tuition hike by distributing to CSU students applications to cheaper school, writing legislators and staging rallies and class boycotts.

"We ended up with a 10 percent increase anyway," DeFede says. "Tuition has nearly doubled in the past five years."

"They say they need to increase faculty salaries," he adds, "but the best faculty are leaving."

"In the seventies colleges couldn't raise tuition as much as the inflation rate," Cox recalls, "and salaries still aren't where they should be."

Lehigh, South Dakota, Pacific Lutheran, West Georgia College, North Dakota State, Nebraska, Georgia and Penn State, among others, say their tuition hikes are to cover needed faculty salary and benefit increases.

"Most of our 9.1 percent increase is necessary to keep up with faculty compensation," Lehigh Budget Director James Tiesenbrunn says. "We tend to lag behind in salary increases because tuition doesn't tend to rise as quickly as inflation."

Average faculty pay in 1984-85 went up 6.6 percent, or 2.5 percent in inflation, the American Association of University Professors reports.

But "our increase covers a number of needs, including computer equipment, climbing maintenance and

Greeks Excited About New Year

LOUIS DICELLO

The UNCW Greek Community boasts many fine fraternal organizations, one of which is Delta Tau Delta.

The Zeta Tau chapter of Delta Tau Delta (UNCW's chapter) have now been a national fraternity for two years and are well on their way in establishing themselves on a national level.

The Deltas have been very active on campus academically, socially, and athletically. Last year Delta Tau Delta received the highest fraternity GPA award. Socially the Deltas enjoy everything from cookouts and mixers to their very own "Dash In The Suds". As for athletics this fraternity participates in many intramural and weekend sporting events with much comradre and success.

The brothers of Delta Tau Delta are constantly trying to improve themselves in all these areas because the members realize that success in life comes partially from these entities. Sustaining strong relations with the other members of the campus Greek community is also very important to this goal oriented fraternity since they realize a concentrated and combined effort is needed to make the Intra-Fraternity Council a success.

This year the Deltas have held several social events to welcome back the student body and discover new membership. If you are interested in learning more about Delta Tau Delta and what the fraternity has to offer you please contact Tony Young at 256-6040.

Rugby Begins Season

O.K. everybody Seahawk Rugby is back, and we're looking forward to a great fall season. This season looks to be a tough one with scheduled games against the likes of N. C. State (ranked #1 in North Carolina), Campbell, Davidson, and other well known college sides.

Returning ruggers this fall are John Burnette, Tommy Carter, Josh Taylor, Rob Shand, Mike Crupi, Russ Bolluck, Maurice McGuire, David Wightman, Alfred Thompson, Greg Green, Rusty Schenk, Stirling Vorus, Preston Salmon, and Billy Brooks.

We have several newcomers to the club this year, who already look promising and appear to be coming along well. However, we are still looking for new recruits, as we hope to field a "B" side this year. So if you're looking for an exciting sport to play, join the UNCW Rugby Club. We practice on Brooks field at 4:00 p.m. on Tuesdays and Thursdays.

Rugby is a great spectator sport and is always entertaining, so lookout on campus for scheduled games and come support your local SEAHAWK RUGGERS!!

Coach Asks For Participation

A question. What is UNC-W's students favorite activity and athletic pastime? Another question. What varsity sport at UNC-W attracts the smallest turnout and is now struggling to survive?

The answers are running and the Seahawk cross-country team.

Dave Agosta, the new 24-year old coach who replaces veteran coach Bill Atwill in his initial season here, finds it ironic that only 7 men and women have come out for the two Division I teams this fall. Especially when he drives by the campus just before sundown and sees multiples of sweat-drenched runners scurrying around campus.

"I'm disappointed to say the least," says Agosta, adding that alot of potential team members stay away because of myths. "As an example, I had one girl who didn't come out because she thought the race distance was 12 miles (3 for women and 5 for men is the actual distance). Our first priority now is to get some numbers and increase interest."

"We encourage runners of all abilities to come out. I'll work with their schedules. It's not that time-demanding."

Agosta is a 1984 graduate of Bowling Green University in Ohio. His athletic achievement can match or surpass any other coach at UNC-W. He has run a mile in 4:03 and the half mile in 1:48. Now he wants the chance to continue his career while helping others to reach their potential.

It is up to the student body to react to his offer. repair costs and new programs," Tiesenbrunn continues.

"You have to look at what tuition pays for as opposed to what it costs to educate a student," NACUBO's Cox points out. "A seven percent hike is really pretty modest."

They should stay "modest" in the near future, too, he adds. "I don't think there will be big, massive increases unless something in the economy goes haywire."

West Virginia, Oregon, Ohio's Youngstown State and much of New York's State and City university systems, on the other hand, have frozen tuition or kept their increases below the inflation rate.

"Where is the point if tuition increases force out a significant number of students and income to the participating institutions drops?" wonders Richard Hill, Oregon's vice president of academic affairs.

UO hiked tuition only three percent this year, he reports, and plans a freeze in 1986-87.

"The concern for me and for UO is to make public education available to a broad base of the citizenry," he explains. "You can't continue to increase tuition and attract students."

Movie Critic Draws Heat

COLLEGE PRESS SERVICE

Nobody loves a critic, especially one who regularly peppers his reviews of slasher flicks and "B"-grade drive-in movies with ethnic slurs guaranteed to engage the censors.

So the University of Texas won't host the Fourth Annual Joe Bob Briggs Drive-In Movie Film Festival this fall.

"He's pretty controversial with students," says Steve Bearden, film program adviser for UT's Texas Union. "Students were distinctly unhappy and dissatisfied with the prospect of Briggs appearing on campus."

Joe Bob, the red-neck, racist alter-ego of former Dallas Times Herald staff writer John Bloom, offended nearly everyone last spring when he wrote a take-off of USA for Africa's anthem, "We Are the World" entitled "We Are the Weird."

The parody -- labelled "blatantly racist" by ethnic groups -- drew so much flack, the Times Herald and newspapers nationwide dropped Joe Bob's syndicated column.

John Bloom resigned and sold the Joe Bob column to United Press Syndicate.

"The Times Herald did a real disservice when they labelled him a racist," says Bloom's business manager and literary agent Vickie Eisenberg. "He's never had a problem with minority groups during any of his speeches."

But minority student protest helped sway UT's Bearden to reject plans to hold the film festival on the Austin campus.

Bloom and UT began festival negotiations last spring before the "Weird" column appeared.

"Frankly, I was surprised at how people feel about him. There's not much middle ground."

A recent Joe Bob review, for instance, noted the remake of "Where the Boys Are" starred "four bimbos whose philosophy of life is all you need is a bikini and quality contraceptives."

Joe Bob rated the movie "three and a half stars" for displaying "11 breasts, no blood and one beast." "Heads do not roll," he complained.

UT's Black Student Association and other interest groups, wary of such sentiments, wanted to interview Briggs before the college approved the film festival.

"We felt he shouldn't come unless he spoke to us first," says BSU President Kevin Williams. "We were opposed to him coming if he didn't really explain himself to minority students."

"Some take what he says satirically, but others take it seriously," Williams adds. But Eisenberg says Joe Bob's humor isn't a "put down, in fact, Bloom has received many awards for social writing."

And, while he has no campus appearances booked in the near future, she says Joe Bob has performed at a number of schools where "he has always very well received."

She accuses UT of censorship and calls the publicized decision to cancel the film festival for "financial considerations" a lie.

Club Football To Begin Season

LOUIS DICELLO
STAFF WRITER

As fall approaches many people begin thinking about football, and UNCW students are no different.

The club football team began practicing twice-a-day two weeks before school began. Unlike a varsity sport the members and coaches are working on their free time for only the satisfaction of participating in a successful football program. The Student Government has been a strong supporter of the club football team this year, enabling the program to purchase much needed equipment and to defray some traveling expenses. The faculty is becoming more involved with UNCW football showing the support needed in forming a Division III football team.

Over the past two years the club football team has developed into a solid contender with records of 5-5 and 7-3, and two trips to the state playoffs. As each year progresses more people realize that there is a need or want for a football team at UNCW. Large crowds at home games show that the student body and community residents enjoy watching football on a fall afternoon.

The season began this past Sunday at N.C. State. The first home game will be this Saturday at 1:30 pm on Brooks Field. Head Coach Jack Bowman feels that this year the team has the potential of being even more successful than last year. As offensive-coordinator, Sott Dickens states, "We (the coaches) are out here only because we enjoy coaching a group of young men who consistently give 110%. This team will be a winner because the team works together; I like calling it a feeling of 'one-ness'."

Most of the players

participated in a high school football program which gave them a solid foundation to work with. Many of these same young men have worked all summer not only on their physical skills, but also preparing the football field. They also spent many hours in the SGA office readying themselves and the team for the fall season. Approximately 25 players and three coaches (including student Dale Sauers as defensive co-ordinator) are forming the core of the team, but if anyone feels that they could contribute to the teams success please contact club president James Earl Jones in the SGA office.

MIKE CROSS TO APPEAR AT RIVERFEST

Musician Mike Cross, a popular attraction in the past at UNC-W, will again appear in concert at Thalian Hall in October

As a special tribute to Wilmington's 1985 Riverfest Celebration, the Thalian Hall Commission is pleased to announce two performances of Mike Cross in Concert on Saturday, October 5 in Historic Thalian Hall—three blocks from the Cape Fear River. This appearance by Mike Cross will be the first in several years in the Eastern North Carolina area. It is fitting that he should be performing in Thalian Hall which was the site of his first live album, "Mike Cross Alive and Kicking", and 4 sell-out performances in January of 1981.

Mike Cross first achieved "hero" status in the Southeast where his dazzling stage performances made him a headline act in major halls and has led almost off-handedly to a series of successful albums. Cross entrances his local audiences with his toe tapping blend of musical styles and stories. As energetic as he is versatile, Cross shows a mastery of country, rhythm and blues, and traditional Southern idioms wrapped around humor with range from venerable mountain yarns to very funny current topics.

Performances are scheduled for 7:00 and 9:30 on Saturday, October 5 in Historic Thalian Hall. Tickets are $10 and $15 and may be purchased by phone with the use of Mastercard or Visa cards, or in person at the Thalian Hall Box Office, Mondays through Saturdays from 10:00 a.m. to 5:30 a.m. For further information call

GILBERT PROPOSES PLAN FOR SHUTTLE BUS

AMY HARRIS
STAFF WRITER

Senior Ken Gilbert was concerned about the safety of UNC-W students who walk the campus at night and decided to do something about it.

"I don't want what happened in Chapel Hill to happen here at UNC-W," Gilbert said, referring to the UNC-CH student, Sharon Stewart, who was kidnapped and murdered August 24, 1985.

In addition, Gilbert says, "I got tired of hearing about proposed plans for escort services which fizzled out after about two weeks." So Ken Gilbert decided to come up with his own plan.

Working with the SGA President, Paul Bell, and other students, Gilbert who came up with a cost effective plan to drive students who usually walk the campus between 6:00 p.m. and midnight; this plan includes the students who are temporarily housed at the Quality Inn until the new dorm is finished. The shuttle bus will be free to all students.

The "Seahawk Express," a white, eight passenger van with gold lettering, will begin moving students across campus the early part of October, depending on the arrival of the new van.

The shuttle bus will begin its route in the parking lot between Hoggard Hall and Trask Coliseum, and then head to the parking lot next to the library and the Chemistry building. The bus will then proceed off campus to the Quality Inn to pick up or drop off more students.

Once back on campus, the bus will stop in the parking lot between the Student Union and the Social and Behavioral Science building, and then finally head to Galloway Hall. The "Seahawk Express" will then go back to the parking lot between Hoggard and Trask and begin its route again.

This shuttle plan proposed by Gilbert and other students is cost effective because it is not a University run system; the University will pay only for the insurance of the van; the remaining costs will be paid by the community and student organizations.

The van itself will be provided by Don Kimball Chevrolet, and the company also plans to all maintenance works and promises to replace the van every year. The SGA will provide the gasoline for the van, and various student organizations will provide the drivers.

The organizations already committed to driving the "Seahawk Express" are: Alpha Phi Omega, Alpha Delta Phi, Delta Sigma Tau, the Gospel Choir, and the Campus Christian Fellowship. The English Club, Sigma Alpha Epsilon, Chi Phi, Campus Crusade are considering the idea of providing shuttle bus drivers. Driving records will be checked and anyone with a DUI or DWI on his or her record will not be considered for a driving position.

"If this system goes over well," Gilbert says, "we might even be able to extend the shuttle bus service to the beach."

JOB MARKET FALLS SHORT FOR GRADUATES

COLLEGE PRESS SERVICE

The job market for 1985 college grads — which many experts hoped would boom this year — "remains better than last year, but falls far short of some of our earlier predictions," the College Placement Council's (CPC) annual year-end Salary Survey has found.

The unexpected downturn — especially for some high tech majors — also convinced some experts that colleges aren't doing enough to guide students through changing demands in the job market.

Last spring college placement officials predicted 1985 would be a banner year for grads looking for their first jobs, breaking the market out of a decade-long slump.

Instead, 1985 has been "an indifferent year," says Judith Kayser, CPC's manager of statistical services. She blames the nation's "listless" economy.

"This probably was a carry over from the recession," she speculates. "So many employers were adversely affected (by the 1980 recession), and the scars haven't been able to shake the cautious attitude."

Overall, companies made 44,479 job offers to new grads this year, up from 42,393 offers in 1984.

Starting salaries rose an average of three to five percent above last year's level, the CPC reports.

But some recently "hot" business and computer science degrees didn't attract many offers, the survey shows.

Computer science majors, who for the past few years have enjoyed abundant job offers and top starting salaries, did only marginally better than their predecessors of 1984.

"From all one reads, computer science is the place to be," Kayser admits.

"But in our survey one of the biggest surprises was the lack of movement in this category," she notes. "There were only a handful more offers than last year — 3,796, up from 3,773 in 1984 — and a 1.8 percent increase in average salary. And most of that was eeked out at the end of the year."

Engineering majors also are enduring a less-than-robust job market.

Petroleum engineering grads continued to attract the highest average salary, $30,996. Chemical engineers were the next most prosperous group, getting average offers of $28,428, followed by electrical engineers, who averaged $27,396.

But the increases generally didn't keep up with the inflation rate.

Engineers also showed disappointing three-to-five percent gains in the number of job offers they got.

Accounting and marketing majors got more offers and four to 19 percent salary percent salary increases.

Masters of business administration grads had the worst spring of all: 20 percent fewer job offers and flat starting salaries.

The abrupt cooling of the hot majors has alarmed some observers, who fret colleges and placement experts are more interested in offering popular degrees than marketable ones.

"Students in high school hear that jobs are good in particular areas, such as computer science, and they flock into colleges to get degrees in those disciplines," explains Henry Levin, a Stanford sociologist and job market expert.

"But soon this bulge of majors fills the demand, and the market tapers back off. Then you're left with hordes of students who jumped on the bandwagon too late, and exit into a glutted field," he says.

Colleges should do more to warn students of the changes, Levin contends.

"It's not all that difficult to project, because there's typically a seven-to-nine year cycle between when a discipline is in demand and when it reaches its fruition," he says.

Liberal arts majors, recently thought to have the worst job prospects of anyone, enjoyed the most improved job market this year, getting four-to-seven percent increases in pay and job offers.

"There seems to be a re-evaluation of the liberal arts (graduate)," says the CPC's Kayser. "These students have analytical and communications skills, and are able to see the big picture. Employers are recognizing this."

"In fact, anyone who can combine a technical discipline with a liberal arts background is the marketable graduate of the future," Stanford's Levin suggests.

"That way you come out with the ability to read and write and communicate clearly — which are always good skills to have — and you can apply that to your particular technical area."

KICKING THE HABIT

Amy Harris
Staff Writer

What is a drug addict? As one addict reveals, "A drug addict is someone who lives to use and uses to live." He also adds, "A recovering drug addict is not a bad person trying to get well; drug addiction is a disease." Who is a drug addict? He could be your friend, roommate, relative, boss, neighbor; he could be you. And where do you go for help? One answer to this question is Narcotics Anonymous (NA) which has a chapter located here in Wilmington.

Narcotics Anonymous is an international organization designed to help those who want to help themselves. Along with local meetings, there are state meetings and even world conventions where 3000 representatives meet from all over the globe.

Although NA meetings are held at local churches, they have no religious affiliation; nor are they connected with any law enforcement agency. It costs nothing to join this group although donations from its members are accepted. At Narcotics Anonymous there are no rules to follow — they only ask for honesty, openness and a willingness to try.

And even though Narcotics Anonymous is an organized group, there is no appointed leader — only a trusted servant who opens the building and appoints a chairperson for each session. Furthermore, the trusted servant and all other persons at NA meetings are either drug addicts or reforming drug addicts; everyone is in the same boat. Members are there to listen, to observe and to share their own feelings and experiences if they choose to do so.

Kicking the habit is a tremendous task for anyone to undertake. If a member loses strength, the group makes no judgements — only offers love, understanding and a shoulder to lean on.

The schedule for Narcotics Anonymous meetings is as follows:

Mon. - Church of the Servant, 4925 Oriole Drive, 8-9 p.m.

Thurs. - St. James Church (Rectory), 3rd and Dock Street, 8-9 p.m.

Fri. - Church of the Servant, 4925 Oriole Drive, 10-11 p.m.

Sat. - Life Center, 2520 Troy Drive, 8-9 p.m.

Sun. - AGAPE, St. James Church (Rectory), 3rd and Dock Street, 8-9 p.m.

CONGRESS TO DECIDE ON CHANGES IN STUDENT AID

COLLEGE PRESS SERVICE

When it returns from its recess this month, Congress seems likely to make minor modifications in the way banks disperse student loans as it takes final action on the federal financial aid budget.

But the seven-month battle by the higher education community to thwart administration proposals for sharp cuts in financial aid climaxed last month when Congress approved a budget resolution calling for $9.7 billion for student aid for the fiscal year beginning Oct. 1.

The resolution translates into modest increases on most federal aid programs, and a modest cut of $800 million over the next three years in the Guaranteed Student Loan (GSL) program.

The resolution was a defeat for the administration, which had sought a $2.3 billion student aid budget for the current fiscal year.

"The cuts will be much less drastic or draconian than what we were facing at one point, but some trimming will be necessary," says Dennis Martin of the National Association of Student Financial Aid Administrators. The resolution requires the GSL program to save $100 million this fiscal year, but Martin thinks it can be done without changing the eligibility requirements for GSL loans.

One likely change, Martin says, is that banks will be required to disperse student loans in two segments during the academic year.

Currently, most students get their federally-guaranteed loan in one lump sum at the beginning of the year.

Issuing loans in two installments will save the federal government interest subsidy funds. Additional savings will result when some students drop out of school in the middle of the academic year.

Martin endorses this proposal. "Anything we can do to cut costs without making fewer students eligible for loans is something that deserves a good look," he says.

Other modifications are likely in the formula used to compute the amount of interest subsidized by the federal government, and in the rules governing the participation of state loan agencies in the program.

Hey guys and gals,
Last week I cracked on the people in retail and their ab... aggressiveness.

This week, however, I'm going to defend them and discuss the treatment they receive from the selfish, wishy-washy, slave driving public.

First of all, I pity the fool who works in the over-demanding, rewardless food service or restaurant industry. Hungry people are the rudest people in the world!! I know because I worked in an Ice Cream parlor for about a year.

Here's some examples of a typical day:

1. You arrive at 9:00 am to prepare to open at 10:00 am (because no other help will be in until 12:00). At 9:30 they start banging down the doors for a lousy cup of coffee!!! At 9:45 a long line appears and you are forced to open early.

2. Three out of five customers will pay for their 30 cent cup of coffee with a 20 dollar bill, especially since you only have $100.00 in change.

3. You settle into your daily routine of making cones, heating hot dogs, setting up tables, stocking cups and serving the customers all at one time. In the meantime the phone rings every two minutes with someone who wants to know your entire menu and the prices.

4. Then some hot-shot teacher brings in their 35 students for a field trip, with no prior notice, of course, and all of these little darlings want home made cones (which have to be made one-by-one). Three of these wonderful little monsters untwist the lids from the ketchup, mustard, salt, and pepper; squirting and dumping the contents on your clean floor. Next thing you know it's time for the lunch crowd. (sigh)

5. At 12:00 your partner in crime arrives and the two of you usually end up making subs for everyone because the customers think they are at the Subway or something.

6. While you are cutting up the tomatoes, another customer yells, "EXCUSE ME, but I've been here for 5 minutes now (heaven forbid). Could I be waited on now?!! You look up and say very politely, "Just a minute I am waiting on another customer at the moment". This of course is not satisfactory to the impatient one and she/he leaves angrily muttering about poor service. AAARGHH!!!!

7. Then there's the dears who ask for straws, spoons, and napkins even though the containers are two inches from their hands. You tell them where to find these items, but they look at you dumbfounded until you just hand them one.

8. None of these people leave tips yet they do remember to trash the floor. "Do you have a trash can?" NOOOO. We enjoy picking up trash off of the ground.

For $3.35 an hour it sucks. Even a dog would get better treatment because of the Humane Society, and a dog could growl at some of the customers to keep them in line.

Other forms of public service are equally exasperating. For example, retail, especially in the department of ladies clothing.

To begin with, the customer is always right (the first law of retail). So when a little old lady comes into the store looking for a navy blue suit, you show her the 15 different styles that you carry. She tries each one on, but, of course, none of them are right. You smile and tell her to shop with you again, although you're hoping she'll croak before she needs a gray suit. Unfortunately, the very next week, she will be back still looking for a blue suit. History repeats itself.

Another annoying trait that seems to be common, again especially in women shoppers, is the Proportion Illusion Syndrome. It seems that all women who wear a size 16 or over believe that a 10 should fit. Of course, you, the salesperson, know this is incorrect, and try to direct her to the Elephant's department. No such luck. She insists on trying on every size 10 in the store. After ripping seams, popping buttons, and distorting the merchandise she will declare that these clothes MUST be irregular and are sized wrong. Then she will stampeed from the store and leave all of the clothes that she dismembered lying on the floor of the dressing room. Such behavior leads to quite a few Damaged Merchandise sales. C'est La Vie.

MAGICIAN TO ENTERTAIN ON CAMPUS

UNCW NEWS BUREAU

On Thursday, September 26, the UNCW University Program Board will present Craig Karges and his magic of the Mind Show.

Since the age of twelve Craig Karges has been mystifying and entertaining audiences. Craig began his career as a magician but later became fascinated with the world of ESP. After discovering that his uncle was a retired vaudeville mind reader Craig turned to him in search of ways to bring out the magic of his mind. Craig studied under his uncle for one year, spent another year polishing his skills and in 1974 combined his magic and ESP talents into an incredible performance which Craig calls the Magic of the Mind Show.

tators, reading serial numbers off dollar bills while heavily blindfolded, levitating tables and linking finger rings together, borrowed from members of the audience. In a special demonstration Craig risks his fee, the money being returned to the sponsor if he fails. Craig's Magic of the Mind Show is an unbelievable blend of illusion and psychic happenings that has astonished audiences from coast to coast.

Since he launched his career as a psychic entertainer Craig has captured the imaginations of people throughout the United States by predicting newspaper headlines days in advance, walking blindfolded through an obstacle course. His work has been the subject of newspaper, Radio and television interviews carried in the United States as well as in other countries.

Although Craig refers to himself as a psychic entertainer he claims no supernatural powers nor does he try to convince his audiences to believe in anything. Craig sees his role as being an entertainer and that is his primary purpose once he walks onstage. If Craig's performance goes beyond entertainment he hopes that it may motivate people to explore their own minds and face the possibility that there just might be more to the human mind than is usually thought possible. Yes, Craig Karges is every bit as intriguing as the show he presents!

The show will begin at 9:00 p.m. in Room 100, of the University Union. Admission for this event will be $1.00.

that peril:

"The threat of nuclear war. The U.S. government bases its power and policy on the credibility of this threat. With expenditures in the trillions, weapons of mass destruction proliferate. Nothing in history suggests that they will not be used, or unleashed by accident. Our awareness of this is so potent and pervasive that, according to polls, the majority of the public expects a nuclear war to occur within their lifetime, that they will not survive it, and that civilization as we know it will end."

"The progressive destruction of our life-support system. Toxic wastes... acid rain... rising rates of radioactivity... loss of topsoil and forestland...

spreading deserts... dying seas... expiring species of plant and animal life.... These facts assail us through news reports and our own sensory experience in the air we breathe, the water we drink, and what we see happening to our environment. These developments, arising from our ways of consumption and production, prefigure yet larger-scale disasters."

"The growing misery of half the planet's people. Prevailing economic patterns impoverish the Third World, causing hunger, homelessness and disease. In no period of history has so large a proportion of humanity lacked the means for a decent and healthy life. With growing disparity between "haves" and "have nots," with the spread of totalitarian regimes and the use of detention and torture on an unprecedented scale, deep rage erupts, turning our planet into a tinder box."

To be aware of these perils is to feel pain for our world and our collective future. It is tempting and easy to turn away from the fear and anger and sorrow the awareness of this peril engenders. We can not do that. We must not do that, for the pain that we feel, in all its forms, is a measure of our caring, of our compassion (which means suffering with). And the discovery, maintenance and development of our compassion is the key to our personal, corporate and planetary potential.

We can choose to avoid dealing with the peril that threatens our planet and succumb to apathy. Or we can live with the peril and struggle with the feeling it engenders, for as Joanna Macy states, "facing our despair and anguish for our world is, in effect, a kind of initiatory rite, necessary to our growing up-to the fulfillment of the promise within us."

Even with all your personal day to day here-and-now agenda, I hope that you will choose to be a selfconscious citizen of this planet and strive to learn about its perils, live through the despair and claim the possibilities that your compassion will lead you to in that process.

PRESIDENT'S CORNER

I am NOT the bearer of good news this week Seahawks. I feel you need to know the good things as well as the bad, and that is why I'm here today informing you on some of our problems.

The student senate had the difficult job of telling the SGA funded clubs and organizations that there wasn't enough money to fund what they deserved this year, at their September 5th senate meeting. Needless to say the organizations were not too pleased when they didn't get what they wanted. The decisions on how and why to cut budgets are not easily made and I don't wish the pressure on anyone, but the point is that the students were making the decisions not an administrative board like at the other 15 UNC campuses. We are not the only university of the 16 UNC campuses that retains the right to say directly where student money goes. This is because we have continually worked to improve the system, grow and responsibly work with the funds.

All the free negative criticism on the process will not improve it or the present situation for the organization. Where do we find more money? I know the organizations are bitter, but that doesn't mean we should throw our hands in the air and give up. The senate itself has no money, "0.00" dollars in its own account for this year. They will have to go out and raise money along with everyone else to fund any projects that will come up this year, such as getting cable in Galloway residence hall.

So what do we do now? We get off our "DUFF" and raise money!! We are pledged to advise any student group plan fund raisers whether they are funded by SGA or not. There are some 30 million dollars generated per year in Wilmington because of UNCW students. Lets not give into the popular opinion of today's college students especially at UNCW that we are not apathetic, beer drinking, yuppies. Start asking for some of our investment back Seahawks and we will prove them undoubtedly wrong!

Until next time.

COLLEGE CREDIT
HOTLINE PLANNED

COLLEGE PRESS SERVICE

College students across the nation are finally getting the credit they deserve, according to John R. Post, Vice President and the Director of Bankcard Acquisitions for Citibank. Post, whose division coordinates Citibank's MasterCard/Visa College Program, says that banks, retailers and other credit card companies are realizing the potential of a market with 12 million people and a collective disposable income of over $20 billion.

"We are dealing with a group of consumers that was virtually overlooked until a few years ago," he says. "We'd like to give them every opportunity to apply for our cards, as the start of a long term financial relationship." For that purpose, Citibank has announced plans to be a major sponsor of a 24 hour toll-free hotline that will enable thousands of juniors, seniors, and graduate students to request their Visa and MasterCard applications over the phone.

Sponsorship of the College Credit Card Hotline will become part of an existing Citibank program that found a receptive market on the nation's campuses starting three years ago. Edward Solomon, president of the College Credit Card Corporation, the Philadelphia based company that implements the Citibank on campus program, sees the bank's latest effort as another example of the "foresight" exhibited when it originally entered the college market. "The new hotline is a clear reflection of Citibank's progressive marketing approach," he says. "The ability to discover and use important new markets is what makes Citibank a dominant force in the financial industry."

Post says that large numbers of juniors, seniors and graduate students may be qualified for a credit card without knowing it. "If they assume that a well-established credit rating is the bottom line requirement for acceptance, they won't even bother to apply," he says. "We want college students to know that Citibank understands their credit dilemma and takes other factors into consideration including bank accounts, summer jobs and upcoming employment."

Post feels that the students at the nation's colleges deserve recognition for their efforts and will become excellent credit card customers. "We hope that the added accessibility of the College Credit Card Hotline will show students that Citibank values them as potential customers," he says. "It is impossible to establish a credit rating unless someone gives you that first opportunity to obtain a credit card." Citibank, it seems, is intent on being that someone. The toll-free College Credit Card Hotline number is 1-(800)-824-4000 ext. 421.

FORENSICS EXPECTS A SUCCESSFUL SEASON

RICK OLSEN
JOURNALISM CONTRIBUTOR

The UNCW Forensics Team closed out its 1984-85 season successfully at two final speech tournaments last semester. Early in April the team traveled to UNC-Charlotte for the Carolinas Forensic Association Tournament—the North and South Carolina State Championships. Going up against teams from ASU, UNCC, The Citadel, and several others, UNCW earned a total of 331 points and took first place in Individual Events Sweepstakes and also in I.E. and Debate Combined Sweeps thanks to the Debate team of Trish McHenry and Max Perkins. The second place team was Columbia Bible College with 131 points.

A particular highlight of the weekend came when six members of the UNCW team captured all of the six finalist positions in Poetry Interpretation. Each finalist then went into the final round competing only against his own team members. The first place trophy was awarded to the Vice-President of the UNCW team, Rick Olsen.

Team President, Mitch Butts returned home with a first place trophy in persuasive speaking with a speech on the Amusement Park Safety Act of 1984. He also won first places in impromptu, informative, and prose categories. Rhetorical Criticism is an analysis of the persuasive strategies of a past speech or movement and is one of the most respected Forensic events. Butts' analysis of the Vietnam Veteran's Memorial in

An important, but not widely publicized, revision contained in President Reagan's tax reform package involves a deduction equal to 10 percent of the dividends a corporation pays out to its shareholders. Under current law, no dividends are deductible; only the interest paid creditors is a tax deductible item. Consequently, current law encourages a corporation to finance acquisition of plant and equipment with borrowed funds, not with the issuance of new common stock.

This distinction has not been particularly significant prior to the early 70's because of the low level of interest rates. Additionally, the economy grew at healthy rates that provided sufficient amounts of capital for a company to finance plant and equipment in approximately equal amounts of debt and stock. The entrepreneurial spirit was alive and well in corporate America as the United States was at the economic forefront of the industrial world. Inflation was not a serious threat.

Beginning in the early 70's, however, the economic picture began to change dramatically. The cost of oil skyrocketed throwing the U.S. economy into a severe recession. Throughout the 70's, inflation became a serious problem while changed social values resulted in increased emphasis on protecting the environment. The combination of these events depressed the stock market and sent corporate American into debt to raise much of its needed capital. Consequently, corporate balance sheets became heavily oriented toward borrowed funds, a very unhealthy and risky circumstance. Throughout these events, tax law did not change to allow corporations to deduct dividend payments which further encouraged the use of debt financing.

Today, corporate America is much more healthy. Inflation is down, the stock market is strong, the cost of oil is falling, and we seem to have reached a balance in the pursuit of protecting the environment without saddling corporations with expensive equipment they can't afford. President Reagan's proposal to allow a tax deduction for dividend payments is a little short and a little late, but still welcomed. It should encourage entrepreneurs to put up additional risk capital, and be good news for the stock market. It is small, but important step in the right direction that should help prevent the risky circumstances of the 70's.

WELL

Welcome to the first "wellnotes" column. A column dedicated to you and your health. Wait, don't stop reading just because health was mentioned. BORING!

Quick. Take this test. What is health? Did you answer not-sick, or free from pain? If you did, then the best you can hope for in life is not to be sick! Now, that's boring!

Wellnotes is a wellness column to get you to consider a wellness lifestyle as fun, romantic, free, and open to anyone! No one is too young, too old, too fat, too lazy or too ugly to enjoy the payoffs and satisfactions from pursuing wellness.

Well, on that note, don't look for information here about the frightful things that will happen if you do not practice wellness - such as blindness, eye crossing, bedwetting, baldness and other symptoms. Instead, look for information to motivate and support your decision to take charge and begin making some changes!

Be Well.
The Student Health and Wellness Center.

Wellness is a word being used that gets you to look at your lifestyle and encourages you to think of yourself as whole, and complete. It includes six, yes six dimensions of your life. Bet you can't guess! They are: physical, occupational, spiritual, intellectual, emotional, and social. Remember these - you will be tested next week, and if your brain can't handle all of them at once, think of P-O-S-I-E-S.

This is not going to a medical advice spot, or dull information about that word - HEALTH. It's not going to be a column that will tell you all the awful things that will happen to you if you: a. continue to stuff your face with Dominoes pizza every night, b. drink too much every weekend, c. bite your nails because of stress, d. can't find (or keep) that special someone, or e. all of the above.

STUDY CRITICIZES TAX PLAN

Future investment in residential property will be hurt if the proposed Reagan tax plan is adopted, according to a study completed by Dr. Ronald E. Copley, Associate Professor of Finance at the Cameron School of Business at UNCW.

Because coastal North Carolina has such a high concentration of resort properties, this would be particularly affected, he said.

Copley's study, which quantifies and documents the tax incentive for residential real estate investment, will be published in the October issue of Mortgage Banker. Residential property in the study is defined as apartments, single family housing, and condominiums designed for rental, not owner-occupied housing.

The study reveals two major points of the main findings. First, current tax advantages associated with residential property would be dramatically cut back. Second, because of the cutback of the tax advantages, there would be less incentive to use borrowed funds for investing.

"As things stand now, if you were borrowing only 60 percent of the value of the investment, then the rate of return would be reduced from 12 percent with the elimination of the tax incentive. "And, if you are borrowing only 60 percent of the value of the investment, then the rate of return would be reduced from 12 percent to 9 percent, less dramatic but still significant," he said, noting that he used a hypothetical example to obtain the figures.

Copley compares rates of return available under current tax law to those generated by the proposal using hypothetical investment in a moderately priced, single-family, income producing property - a popular source of wealth accumulation for many investors.

Rates of return were calculated for various levels of borrowing ranging from 60 percent to 90 percent under an assumed holding period of 7 years. Current market place conditions were used in the analysis, including an assumed inflation rate of 4 percent, an interest rate of 12 percent, and a term loan of 30 years.

In addition to the results already cited, residential investments would suffer mainly because of lower tax advantages largely attributable to lower depreciation allowances, revised capital gains treatment, and lower marginal tax brackets.

"If the President's proposal is adopted by Congress, investments in residential properties would be cut dramatically since much of the incentive to invest is now directly tied to tax breaks," Copley said. "Because of decreased tax breaks, the proposal could shift holdings of residential investments to investors in lower brackets."

Copley predicts that the immediate results of a decrease in profitability to investors would be bleak prospects for investments in residential real estate, especially for resort investors where oversupplies of condominiums have already accumulated.

Intermediate effects could be higher rents so investors and landlords could protect the higher rates of return they enjoy under the present law. "In the long-term, profitability could rebound if investors increase their demand for residential real estate due to greater emphasis on the real economic components to total return of price appreciation and cash flow, and less emphasis on the non-economic component of tax shelter," Copley said.

Dr. Copley can be reached on Thursday, September 5, before 11 a.m., then between 2-3 p.m. at 395-3516, Room 209 Bear Hall.

STUDENT AID

Martin says there is no indication that publicity surrounding the administration's proposal to slash student aid budgets has prompted students to forgo applying for federal aid, as some officials feared might happen.

Fewer students sought aid in 1981, when the first in a series of proposals are not the end of the budget process," Martin says.

Martin, however, expects the administration to propose aid cuts again next year.

"Since financial aid programs have not been cut substantially, they remain a high target," he says.

FRISBEE PLAYERS UNITE ON CAMPUS

GEORGE WALKER
staff writer

In 1968, perhaps for the joy of athletics, or perhaps for a cultural outlet that pervaded the times, a couple of students from New Jersey wanted to make a hobby into a sport.

The implications of this whim is very much with us today, as over 750 ultimate frisbee teams compete for national honors in the United States. Recently, there has been widespread talk of possible intercollegiate status in the future. Why the sudden surge of interest in ultimate frisbee?

According to Eric Simon, Mid-Atlantic Regional Coordinator, "The attractiveness is that it's sort of counter culture. The Media tends to regard us as a bunch of hippies throwing frisbees at the beach."

"People within the circle talk about the spirit of ultimate," he said. "You start telling other people about it and they think you're some starchy-eyed radical with Utopian dreams."

The misconceptions that many outsiders share about frisbee players is born out of the individuality and colorfulness of the participants. In Wilmington, for example, the Cape Fear Gale Force Team is comprised of 20 players, most of whom can be distinguished by one varied characteristic or another. Some are Vegetarians, some are deadheads, some are Rastafarians, some are a combination of the three.

All are athletes. "To be a good frisbee player you gave to have good hand-eye coordination. And you have to be a good Runner," says Gale Force player Tom Urban, who played with a national championship team (Glassboro, N.J.) in 1979 and 1980. Urban also points out that frisbee attracts top players from a variety of sports such as basketball, baseball, and track.

Ultimate frisbee is a seven man per team game where all players are eligible at all times. The frisbee is advanced with forward and backward passes by players who must maintain a pivot. The disc automatically changes hands when the frisbee is dropped, blocked, or thrown away. A goal is scored when the frisbee is caught in the 25 yard deep in zone. Contact is forbidden. Frisbee is similar to soccer in the constant movement of the player.

The Gale Force team practices four days a week on Brooks field. With strong spring performances in Gainesville, Greenville, and Wilmington, the team hopes to attain national recognition in the next year.

Toad Leber, a member of the team since 1981 and one of the more committed players, says the weekend tournaments (which can include eight games) unifies the players.

"Frisbee is one of the few sports without referees, it's all on an honor system," he explains. "There's always a big party after the last game is over. If there is a common bond between us, it's a love for ultimate frisbee."

Gale Force will host a tournament Sept. 27 and 28 on Brooks Fields. Teams from Richmond, Charlottesville, Blacksburg, Boone, Greenville, Raleigh, and Durham complete the field. Games begin at 11:00 and continue all day until the championship is contested on Sunday afternoon. Key players for Gale Force include: Chris Eaton, Brian Autrey, Curtis Black, Brett Higgins, Ricky Barnes, and Toad Leber.

A new girls team is being initiated. Practice are M-W-F at 5:00 on Brooks Field. Contact Misty Blanton at PO Box 104, UNC-W Station, or Lynette Williams at Apt. E-202.

FIRST MISS UNCW PAGEANT TO BE HELD ON CAMPUS

AMY HARRIS
staff writer

The university's Fledgling plans to transform Trask Coliseum into the glittering streets of New York as it hosts the 1985 Miss UNC-W Pageant, Saturday, November 16, at 7:30 p.m.

Staged "On Broadway," the "Brooke Shields" and "Lisa Hartmans" of UNC-W will compete for a rhinestone crown and the honor of being named the official hostess of all UNC-W events.

Contestants must apply at the Fledgling Office upstairs in the University Union; they must also obtain a total of $50.00 in pledges to help with expenses. Friends, family or local businesses can make pledges.

During the show, six official judges will rate the contestants on a sportswear and an evening gown competition; contestants must supply their own wardrobe.

All contestants, prior to the event, will also be interviewed by the judges as part of the contest.

Talent competition will not be included in the program due to time restraints. However, Fledgling plans for campus talent to add extra entertainment during the evening. Persons interested in performing during the pageant or persons interested in working with decorations are urged to contact Jenni Brown or Allan Dudley at the Fledgling Office.

In Addition, Fledgling is holding a meeting September 25, in the University Union, room 100 (the time to be announced) for all pageant contestants. Pictures for the programs that are issued during the evening will be taken at this time.

Tickets for the Miss UNC-W Pageant are $2.00 for students and $3.00 for the general public (the date tickets go on sale to be announced).

LITTLE PALS NEED BIG BUDDIES

MARY JEFFERIES
CONTRIBUTOR

A Big Buddy is someone who cares, helps, and spends time with a child, and that is the relationship John Russ, a student at UNCW shares with his Little Buddy.

Russ was introduced to the Big Buddy Program by a friend and was very interested in becoming a Big Buddy because he has worked with children and enjoys helping and sharing time with them. Russ spends time with his Little Buddy during the week or on the weekends doing many different and fun activities such as fishing, going to scout meetings, and taking scuba diving lessons.

Alpha Phi Omega, a service fraternity also contributes time to the Big Buddy Program. Last year the fraternity sponsored the first annual Pizza War between local pizza restaurants and raised over $1,000. Ken Gilbert, service chairman of the fraternity, says that the second annual Pizza War is planned for next semester. The fraternity also participates in many of the functions for the Big Buddies and Little Buddies such as beach trips, field trips, and picnics.

The Big Buddy is a volunteer program sponsored by Family Services, an agency of the United Way. The president of Board of Directors of Family Services is Dr. Ronald Copley of the UNCW Business Department.

Many of the children who have a Big Buddy, or are on the waiting list are from single parent families. The Big Buddy program is designed to give these children the opportunity to develop a one-to-one relationship with an adult volunteer, and to help and support them during childhood to prevent more serious problems that may occur in the future.

There are some requirements on becoming a Big Buddy. Each volunteer must fill out an application so the Big Buddy and Little Buddy may be matched according to their mutual interests and complementary characteristics. Each volunteer is asked to spend 2-5 hours a week with their Little Buddy for a year's time. Throughout the year there are get-togethers such as field trips, parties, and picnics. Other activities Big Buddies do with their Little Buddies include fishing, camping, shopping, skating, biking, and just being good friends.

There is a great need of volunteers for the Big Buddy Program. You can give child the opportunity of a special friendship by being a Big Buddy.

For further information, contact Carol Manning, Family Services, at 392-7031.

REVERSE ENROLLMENT

STRATEGIES UNSUCCESSFUL

COURTESY CPS

Enrollment caps and tougher admissions requirements designed to force more four-year public college students into smaller public colleges seem to be falling short of their goals this fall, some observers say.

Administrators and lawmakers have been trying to convince students to switch from more popular large, four-year campuses to smaller state schools.

In recent years, the popular campuses have had trouble paying for enough facilities and classes for the increasing numbers of students who have enrolled. Smaller four and two-year campuses, on the other hand, have struggled to enroll enough students to pay for facilities they have already built.

This fall, some states have raised admissions requirements and limited enrollments at the popular schools, figuring shut-out students would enroll at the smaller campuses.

Initially, it hasn't worked out that way.

"The more you put caps and requirements on enrollment, the more anxious students are to go to those institutions," says Bert Ockerman, of the American Association of College Registrars and Admissions Officers (AACRAO).

"The plans aren't doomed to failure," he adds. "But they're certainly less than successful."

"People still clamor to get into these schools," Ockerman explains. "Students send multiple applications to a number of schools (if they fear they won't be admitted to their first-choice school). The harder you make it for people to get into a school, the more they want in."

But college officials, whose strict, new enrollment ceilings and admissions requirements just went into effect, say they still don't know if students rejected from the top state universities are opting for smaller, less-noted colleges.

Washington, Florida, Missouri, Oklahoma, Illinois, Nebraska and other states plan higher requirements or limits by 1989.

"Probably the only way to know (the effects) for sure is to survey students," says Bernard Bouchard, director of admissions at Western State College in Gunnison, Colorado.

"We would have to ask where they applied, where they were rejected before they came here," he adds.

Western State, with an in-state enrollment of about 2100 this fall, competes for students with the University of Colorado, Colorado State University, three other four-year colleges in the Consortium of State Colleges and other two- and four-year schools.

"I haven't observed any enrollment increase at all from the cap or new requirements," he claims. "And they won't have much impact until they've been in place a couple of years."

Officials from area community colleges agree.

Most had hoped students turned away from Denver's Metropolitan State College and CU's Boulder campus would enroll in two-year schools.

"[Enrollment is] almost identical to last year," says Morrie Albright of nearby Front Range Community College.

But some Kentucky educators claimed the University of Kentucky's raised standards have boosted enrollment at other state schools.

Part of our 17 percent increase (this fall) is due to neighboring schools changing standards," asserts Maysville Community College Admissions Director John Meyers.

"But it's a combination of several factors," he cautions. "Increased standards at other schools; our tuition rate is considerably less than surrounding schools, and we have many non-traditional students here."

"With conditions in education the way they are, if the cap is maintained, weaker students need to go to community colleges or smaller schools," he adds.

Meyers agrees large universities are more attractive to many students. Their parents, moreover, "don't like to be told their kid is not as smart as they think he is." But the state "just can't run marginal students straight through high school into four-year schools."

Yet small schools can't wait for bigger college's "burnaways," Western States Bouchard argues.

"We want to increase the number of students through

Well it's another week. This time I'm going to focus on the unconventional seriously gauche behavior of our 'new' youth today.

Modern youth lacks all propriety. They are selfish, demanding, and uncouth lacking all forms of etiquette. Gone are the days of yes Ma'am and no sir, hello ya, woman and, forget it, old man. Even the process of mastication has become a contest of who can sleep, munch, crunch and drool more like the domestic cow, without thought towards the old adage of food being neither seen nor heard.

With the age of computers, comes the pain of listening to Pac-Man for 13 hours a day and Q-bert the other 11 hours. Atari monopolizes our TV's unless of course HE-man or Dukes of Hazzard is on, then you have to listen to "By The Power of Greyskull or Ye Ha!" every 5 seconds!!

Their clothes look like Salvation Army throw aways or moms old shower curtain. This is old PUNK! Their hair styles look like something from old McDonalds farm. (Roosters, Goats, Pigs, Horses, and Porcupines.)

But what really goads me is the forwardness of todays females! The breach of social decorum. I have two brothers and whenever I'm home Timmy's trying to get off the phone with Kia, (A girl who says she wants to suck his eye brows -really weird!) so he can talk with Lisa. Adrian, the family stud, doesn't want to talk with Mandy or Brenda, or Lisa, or Mary, but will accept calls from Ashley, or Carol, or Diane.

It's a real pain for me to keep up with these girls when the boys are out. They call back every hour on the hour two at a time, (we have call waiting on the phone.)

My parents have set rules about telephone hours. No calls past 9:00 on or out. Well these girls have the audacity to call between 9:30-11:00-to giggle. What ever happen to girls waiting for the boys to call?

Youth the world of tomorrow? What!!! A future of eye lash suckers and barn yard animals. IS IT A LOST CAUSE?

While the Liberals and the Civil Rights Activists scream about apartheid in South Africa, one issue has received scant attention. That issue is our country's dependence on South Africa for critical minerals. The United States depends on South Africa for such statgeically critical minerals as chromium, cobalt, manganese, platinum, and vanadium.

Inasmuch as Southern Africa is blessed with a wealth of these minerals and is at the same time plagued by internal and external pressures and conflict caused by apartheid. It becomes exceedingly important to recognize the relationship among our foreign policy, domestic economy, and national security.

The minerals of South Africa are of importance not only to our industrial base but to our national defense system. Minerals such as those listed above are used in production of tanks, ships, military hospital equipment, military aircraft, naval nuclear propulsion systems, B-1B landing gear and other military equipment. As one can see our defenses are dependent on minerals from South Africa.

A disruption in the supply of the metals would also affect the use of electronics, chemical power equipment, metal working equipment, iron and steel, petroleum refining, and transportation parts manufacturing industries which would affect the employment of at least 3.2 million Americans in both defense and civilian sectors.

While acknowledging that apartheid is a cancer that must be removed from South Africa, one must realize that this cannot happen overnight. We must remember that racial problems that have plagued our history. We cannot expect South Africa to abolish racial separation overnight when it has taken us more than a century to get where we are now. It is time that Americans realize that South Africa is our only ally left in Southern Africa and we need to support them in this difficult period in their history. We must remember that South Africa is not a U.S. colony, but a sovereign nation and that punitive economic sanctions not only would harm the blacks of South Africa but also the economy and national security of the United States.

STILLPOINT

by Bob Haywood
Campus Minister

YOU CAN FALL IN LOVE BUT YOU MUST WORK HARD AT A RELATIONSHIP IF YOU WANT IT TO BE LASTING!

This is my "bottom line" belief that people who want to be married must accept as truth. You simply can not have and maintain a significant relationship, like marriage, without consciously working at it.

We are designed by God to be in deeply intimate relationships with another person and to have families. It is our nature. On the other hand, our contemporary society with its pressures, both economically and emotionally, towards success does little to support marriage and does much that makes the development and maintenance of a good relationship difficult.

It is both my pleasure and anguish to know many adults whose marriages are hurting. That struggle and change exist in a relationship is no surprise. That is appropriate. We either grow or stagnate. But many, many marriages come to pieces during the stress of change.

Must that be? Isn't there any way that we can insure that a marriage we choose to undertake will work? There are, of course, never any guarantees. But there are tasks that you can undertake right now, whether you are in a relationship or not, that can do much to improve the possibilities of a marriage working.

First, know yourself. Work long, hard and intentionally to develop your own independence and sense of self worth. We all have some fundamental needs that we want to be met with help of another person. What must happen in a relationship for me to feel good about it. We also have values that are important to us. What do you prize in your life? How do you spend your time that leaves you feeling good and, will your partner share, or, at least, support those interests and values. We also need to understand, be able to describe and take some responsibility for our weaknesses. We are all "jerks", in some way. We are insecure and submissive or insecure and controlling or whatever. We need to get to know the "jerk" in us, accept it and take responsibility for it. On the other side, we are also people who have strengths. What do you do well? What do you like about yourself?

Needs, values, weaknesses, strengths-all these are significant aspects that make up who we are. And the greater our self awareness, the higher the clarity of our self knowledge that we bring to a relationship, the greater is the potential for being an effective person in a relationship.

Besides knowing yourself, the second major dimension that builds for success in a relationship lies in your learning how to communicate with another person and committing yourself to open an honest communication of thoughts and feelings. Further, to be any success in a relationship, each party must value their partner. They must want to know what is going on in the heart and mind of the beloved and want to share what is going on in their own heart and mind, and work at finding ways for mutual needs, values, weaknesses, and strengths to be honored. Each partner is a growing changing human being which promises excitement and new adventure at every step of our human journey. If we can communicate about what is important to us and what ever changes we are experiencing, then changes can be worked through to our common advantage. But if we do not talk, if we expect each other to be the kind of person we thought they were when we fell in love, then change can destroy any relationship and often does. Even positive and growthful change is difficult and stressful but if we are not able to communicate thoughts and feelings nondefensively, then we hardly stand a chance of surviving.

Relationships, good marriages are very possible and very much worth the energy they demand. Start towards that kind of relationship now. Seek to know yourself! Learn to communicate. Build a relationship you desire.

retention," he explains. "Our main marketing tool is quality education through caring faculty and support services."

"I think students come to Western because they want to," Bouchard adds. "We recruit some, but our big thrust is keeping those students we have."

"Artificial things like caps and standards don't influence people," AACRAO's Ocker-man agrees. "People don't like being forced into a second choice. Colleges are going to have to rethink things."

SIGMA ALPHA HAS SUCCESSFUL RUSH

Darren Jay Mengedoh

The brothers of Sigma Alpha Epsilon would like to thank everyone involved with this years' fall rush. It was a Great success.

We found many fine young men interested in our fraternity, however only 12 possessed the Qualities of Leadership, friendliness, and a desire for involvement which is Required.

These men are; Greg Ebert, Jeff Bradford, Louis Morales, M. Reid Chitty, Al Ford, Deck Whaley, Carl Deans, Ricky Farmer, Jeff Pierce, Duane Catingub, David Jones, and Mike LeBarnd. We look forward to welcoming these men as friends and Brothers. With these new faces, we will be able to meet the new challenges facing Sigma Alfa Epsilon's and All Greeks this year. In the next few weeks look toward seeing us involved not only socially but in the community and university as well. As we show once again that the Sigma Alpha Epsilon fraternity is more than a bunch of letters on a shirt.

WELLNESS

How responsible are you for what goes well, or poorly regarding your life in general and your health in particular?

See how you rate on personal responsibility for your health.

The rating scale ranges from strong disagreement (1 point) through strong agreement (6 points). Mark your points to the right of each question.

1. When I become ill, it's a matter of fate.
2. I can pretty much stay healthy by taking good care of myself.
3. Even when I take care of myself, it's easy to get sick.
4. When I stay healthy, I'm just plain lucky.
5. My physical well-being depends on how well I take care of myself.
6. When I am sick, I just have to let nature run its course.
7. Whatever goes wrong with my health is my own fault.
8. It seems that my health is greatly influenced by accidental happenings.
9. I am directly responsible for my health.
10. Often I feel that no matter what I do if I am going to get sick, I will get sick.
11. If I become sick, I have the power to make myself well again.

COLLEGES RECONSIDER PAYING ATHLETES

COLLEGE PRESS SERVICE

Paying college students to play football—long considered wrong by most college sports officials—may be mustering support even among coaches, according to a recent Denver newspaper report.

Fourteen of the 18 representatives of the Western Athletic Conference questioned this summer by the Denver Post said they support giving football players a monthly salary.

Eight of the nine players questioned endorsed the idea, as did six of the eight coaches.

"The current situation is not fair to the players, with as many hours as they spend on football," Texas El-Paso coach Bill Yung told the Post.

"It's like a job -- and you deserve to be paid for a job."

National Collegiate Athletic Association (NCAA) officials oppose paying student athletes, claiming it would undermine the amateur status of college athletics.

The idea has been discussed informally for several years, mostly by critics of big-time college athletics who charge student athletes generate profits for the school, but get nothing in return.

And some sports sociologists believe proposals to pay student athletes will gain support as schools struggle to find ways to end under-the-table payments that violate NCAA rules.

But the athletic community itself has not shown much interest in the idea, until now.

Most coaches and players polled by the Post advocated a monthly salary of between $50 and $100.

"Give the kids a few dollars in their pockets to spend legally, then I think you cut down on the temptation for them trying to get illegal money for their tickets or getting alumni to give them (gifts)," says Wyoming coach Al Kincaid.

UNCW DOMINATES RUGBY TOURNAMENT LOSES IN FINAL MATCH

The UNC-W Rugby club put four games under its belt this past weekend. Saturday, the Seahawk rugbys travelled to Winston-Salem to play the Triad Rugby club. The Seahawks gave the Triad dogs a close game, with the Seahawks losing 10-9. The whistle blew with the Seahawks five yards away of scoring another try. Which would have given them the win. Tommy Carter scored all nine points for the Seahawks.

The team then travelled to Greensboro and spent the night in preparation for the following days events. Sunday, UNC-W participated in the HAMS-UNC-G First Annual Season Opener Rugby Tournament. Six sides participated in the tournament, Campbell University, Belmont Abbey, UNC-G Killer Bees, Guilford, UNC-G and UNC-W.

The tournament started off at 10:00 clock. UNC-W's first game was against UNC-G killer bees. The UNC-W team still exhausted from their road trip and game the day before managed to pull off a 14-3 victory with all the team playing a good game.

That win put UNC-W in good standing, and raised their spirits high. If they were to win their next game against Guilford then they would be in the final match playing for first place.

The team grabbed an hours rest and talked strategies in order to beat Guilford. UNC-W went into the game with the right stuff. Within a few minutes, the Forwards had put the ball out to the backs and a try was scored. That was the case of the whole game. UNC-W rarely let Guilford gain possession. By the time half time rolled around the score was 26-0. UNC-W didn't let up in the second half either, which turned out to be a disadvantage, because two key players were injured during their second half onslaught. When the whistle blew, I'm sure the Guilford team was glad it was all over with, the final score was 52-3.

The team had an hours rest before the tournament final match for first place, in which they were to play UNC-G. UNC-W put up a valiant effort against Greensboro but they were tired from their previous games and had an inexperienced hole in Guilford. Greensboro used it to their advantage and took control of the game by the time the second half rolled around. The final score was 17-0. So at the end of a long day the UNC-W team placed second. Outstanding players for the weekend were Tommy Carter, Josh Taylor, Bryan Abrams, David Wightman, Mike Crupi, Rusty Schenk, and Ryan Tattre.

The rugby club is still looking for new players. If you haven't played before don't worry, college rugby is geared towards teaching players how to play and awareness of the rules.

Most of our players last year had never seen a rugby ball, and all of us had a heck of a good time both on and off the field!

Total

You are big on personal responsibility if you scored a 5 or 6 on questions 2,5,6,9, and 11.

According to DR. D Ardell,

"Taking responsibility for your health means making a conscious commitment to your well-being. Part of wellness in general and self responsibility in particular is to become skilled at recognizing the difference between those things under control (ie, lifestyles) and all other circumstances not under your control."

All of this is a way of saying that you are the source of what you are, what you do, and what you have. Think about it, and be well.

INSURANCE AGENCIES FRAUD STUDENT'S FAMILIES

COLLEGE PRESS SERVICE

The insurance agent who visited Bristol Harris and his parents this summer gave the family what they called "a hard-sell." "They went through everything real fast," Harris, now a freshman at the University of Colorado, recalls. "I felt they were trying to make things unclear."

Eventually, his family bought a $43,000 universal life insurance policy for $25 per month, with the understanding the policy would guarantee Bristol access to a federally-guaranteed student loan.

No insurance policy, of course, could get Bristol a Guaranteed Student Loan, and GSL applicants don't have to buy insurance to get GSLs from a bank, but Colorado insurance investigators say a number of local families bought the GSL policies this summer.

It's happening elsewhere, too.

Brigham Young University received complaints about the GSL policies in August. Families in several southern and southwestern states got similar sales pitches earlier in 1985, reports Jean Frolicher of the National Council of Higher Education Loan Programs.

Colorado insurance examiner Tony Tucker says the policies that were sold are legitimate.

But, he says, agent wrongfully asserted that buying the insurance policy would guarantee students access to a federal student loan, or that many banks are getting out of the student loan business because interest rates dropping.

In fact, banks are competing to make loans this fall. The only way a student can get a GSL is to meet federal eligibility requirements.

"I said, 'What if I don't want the insurance policy,'" Bristol recalls of his meeting with the salesman. "It was apparent we had to get the insurance to get the loan."

The Colorado agents all were selling policies for Occidental Life of North Carolina.

Ken Johnson, marketing director for Occidental's student loan program, confirms some agents were not explaining the firm's policies properly.

An investigator in the Oklahoma Insurance Commissioner's office says Occidental fired some of its agents earlier this year after finding they improperly used student loans as bait to sell life insurance.

But the U.S. department of education, unlike the states involved, has yet to find an instance of misrepresentation in the cases it has investigated.

"People interpreted the sales pitch to mean something other than what was said," says Sharon Messenger of the department.

"Consumers need to take the time to read the fine print."

Messenger says the problem frequently arises because insurance firms, which themselves can loan money to students, are allowed to make access to the student loans they offer conditional on buying an insurance policy.

Misrepresentation only occurs if the agent indicates it may be impossible to get a student loan from any other lender, or if the agent indicates buying a policy will guarantee a student a loan.

Messenger says complaints arising from this confusion are "a continuing problem," and are no more prevalent this year than in years past.

Frolicher, however, says the problem surfaced within the past year. She says federal officials are not doing enough to correct the problem.

"Who knows what is being said in people's homes, but based on the number of anecdotes I have heard, a large number of people are misunderstanding and something should be done about it," she says.

To date, only state governments have taken action. In Colorado, for example, student loan officials issued a statement reminding parents of regulations governing student loans.

Tucker says state investigators are scheduled to meet with insurance officials in an attempt to see that the misrepresentation is stopped.

If it continues, the state will consider revoking licenses or even filing criminal fraud charges.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

A second class in "How to Prepare for the S.A.T." is being offered by UNCW's Office of Special Programs, on Saturdays, October 19-November 16 from 9:00 a.m. - noon in Room 104, Social Behavioral Building. The S.A.T. will be administered December 7 and January 25 at a local high school. Hand-out study aids are included in the $82 fee. If registration occurs before the deadline of October 11, the fee will be discounted.

For more information, contact the Office of Special Programs, at 395-3195 between 8:00 am - 5:00 pm, Monday, Wednesday and Friday and 8:00 a.m. - 6:00 p.m., Tuesday and Thursday.

1986 boat models will be previewed in the Marine Expo '85 boat show sponsored by the Azalea Coast Marine Dealers Association. The show will be September 28 and 29 at the Wrightsville Beach municipal building and will be free to the public. Boats will be on display during daylight hours and sales people will be available from 10 a.m. until 5 p.m. daily.

The Underwater Archeology Unit of the North Carolina Division of Archives and History will hold an open house for visitors Tuesday, October 1 from 2-4 p.m. There will be no admission charged for this event.

The importance of seafood to a coastal economy and getting the most out of fresh seafood will be the topic of two programs sponsored by the New Hanover County Agricultural Extension Service as part of the varied and informative schedule of events for Marine Expo '85 in Wilmington September 28 through October 6.

A seminar, "Growth and Impact of the Seafood Industry on New Hanover County and Surrounding Areas" and a lecture, "Getting the Most Out of Fresh Seafood" will be held back-to-back on Wednesday, Oct. 2 beginning at 10 a.m. and running until 12:30 p.m.

Both events are free to the public and will be held at the Extension Service Building at 6206 Oleander Drive at the site of the former Bradley Creek Elementary School cafeteria.

Dr. Frank Thomas, a professor at North Carolina State University and an expert in seafood industry study and economics; will conduct the seminar.

Joy Frauson and Joyce Taylor of the North Carolina Extension Service, both experts in the handling, preparation and storage of seafood will conduct the lecture on fresh seafood and its proper care and cooking.

Beginners and advanced computer classes for youth, designed to help them work with a TRS-80 computer and the language of BASIC, are being offered by UNCW's Office of Special Programs. The classes are:

STEP 1: for ages 10-12 (for students not familiar with computer use) Saturdays, October 26-December 3-7, 10:00-11:30 a.m. Fee of $40 discounted if registration is before October 18 deadline.

STEP 2: (continuation of Step 1. Students who have had at least 10 hours of instruction in BASIC may enroll) Tuesday and Thursday, December 3-17, 3:30-5:30 p.m. Fee of $44 will be discounted if registration occurs prior to deadline of November 26.

STEP 3: for ages 7-9 (a continuation of Step 1 and 2; designed for students who have previous knowledge of the BASIC language) Tuesday and Thursday, October 24-November 12, 4:00-5:30 p.m. Fee of $40 will be discounted if registration occurs prior to the October 17 deadline.

For more information contact the Office of Special Programs at 395-3195 between 8:00 a.m. - 5:00 p.m., Monday, Wednesday and Friday and 8:00 a.m. -

6:00 p.m., Tuesday and Thursday.

Tai-Chi, part II, will continue this Fall, sponsored by the Office of Special Programs of UNCW. The classes, which are derived from the Ancient Chinese exercise to improve health, increase energy and deepen concentration abilities, are offered on Wednesdays, October 23-December 4 from 7:30-9:30 p.m. in Hanover Gym. Fee is $26. A discount is available to those who enroll before the October 16 deadline.

If you would like to enroll in part II but did not attend part I, please call the Office of Special Programs at 395-3195. The office operates 8:00 a.m. - 5:00 pm; Monday, Wednesday and Friday and 8:00 a.m. - 6:00 pm, Tuesday and Thursday.

Intermediate and advanced students of English as a second language who want to improve their proficiency may enroll in "English for Speakers of Other Languages, Part 2," being offered through UNCW's Office of Special Programs.

Grammar, vocabulary and pronunciation will be stressed by instructor Robert Lynn who has taught this course for 14 years and has written eight books about it. The class will meet 9:30-11:30 a.m. on Tuesday and Thursday, October 22-December 5. Fee is $36. Registration deadline is October 15.

For more information, contact the Office of Special Programs at 395-3195 between 8:00 am - 5:00 pm, on Monday, Wednesday and Friday and 8:00 a.m. - 6:00 p.m., Tuesday and Thursday.

The Office of Special Programs is sponsoring a class in dapted Aquatic Aerobics in the UNCW pool for those who suffer from arthritis or an orthopedic impairment or for personal preference. Exercising in water provides enough resistance for a workout without discomfort. Class enrollment will be kept to a minimum to insure individual attention from instructor Lani Driscoll.

Registration deadline is October 15 for part 2 and November 19 for part 3. Part 2 is offered Tuesday and Thursday, October 22-November 21, 7:00-7:45pm. Fee is $20. Part 3 will be held on Tuesday and Thursday, November 26-December 17 (no class Nov. 28), 7:00-7:45 p.m. Fee is $12.

For more information, contact the Office of Special Programs at 395-3195 between 8:00 a.m. - 5:00 p.m., Monday, Wednesday and Friday and 8:00 a.m. - 6:00 p.m., Tuesday and Thursday.

The Cape Fear Chess Club meets on Wednesday nights in the Student Union (study room 105) from 7 to 11 p.m. Members, students, faculty and others range in ability from novice to expert. Members of the UNCW community are invited to come and play.

The club will sponsor a tournament, the SEAHAWK SIXTEEN, on Saturday and Sunday; September 28 and 29. Details at Wednesday night meetings.

Larry Thomas & Associates, INC., a non-profit organization dedicated to the propagation, preservation, and promotion of American classical music (JAZZ) and Caribbean music, is proud to present CARIBBEAN MUSIC DISCO NIGHT, at the St. James Inn, on 8th and Market Streets, in Wilmington, every Saturday night from 8 pm to 2 am.

LIBRARY EXPANSION TO BE COMPLETED BY 1987

TRISH MCHENRY
CONTRIBUTOR

A new wing is being built that will double the size of the William Randall Library. The addition is being built by Boney Associates at a cost of approximately $7,500,000, and is hoped to be completed by the fall of 1987. Mr. Eugene Huguette, Director of William Randall Library sent a letter to the administration allowed plans to be drawn up, and in 1984 allocated funds allowing work to begin.

There is a need for a larger library at UNC-W. William Randall was built in 1969, for an enrollment of 4,000 students and a capacity of only 200,000 books. As enrollment increases each year the problem gets worse. Also, our recent promotion to a Level One University has allowed more graduate programs, and as these programs get approved, more books will be needed.

Not only will there be a new wing, the old part of the library is going to be renewed. After the new wing is built, all the material that is in the old part will be temporarily moved into the new wing while work is done on the old. The library Director, Eugene Huguette says this will be the most difficult part of the transition. Many changes are planned for the library. A new front door facing the Student Union is going to be built, and the old front door is going to be sealed off. They plan to increase the reserve room and the audio visual area. There will also be a computer terminal room which will be necessary because they plan to computerize the information card catalogues. Moved into the new part will be the microfilm room, and the government documents. The new addition will also include more study rooms and lounge areas, along with more space for research material.

Included in the price of the new addition is the shelving and furniture. The library will gradually purchase more books and photocopy machines with the regular budget. Also coming out of the regular budget is the money to hire new staff members.

An inconvenience to both the students and staff of UNC-W is the closing off of a portion of the library parking lot, so that it may be used by the construction workers. These spaces will remain closed off until the work is completed.

Mr. Carl Dempsey, Assistant to the Vice Chancellor for Business Affairs informed us that no new parking areas are planned in conjunction with the new addition, but by that time there will be more parking spaces on campus.

For those interested in seeing what the library will look like in 1987, there is a small model of plans, downstairs in the library.

ALCOHOL POLICIES TAKES EFFECT

CATHY CULP
CONTRIBUTOR

UNC-W has opened and classes are underway. All on-campus students have moved in their new homes and are ready to begin college life and activities. Students will be studying along with having a good time. One prevalent recreation for the majority of students in the past as will the present is the use of alcohol. Alcohol use on-campus must be regulated by UNC-W to follow state laws. Andy J. Bilodeau, resident director of the on-campus apartments, explains the rules of alcohol use on-campus.

Bilodeau says on-campus rules are in accordance with North Carolina state laws. All students that are drinking must be of legal drinking age. According to state law open containers are not allowed in public areas. The public areas on-campus are all areas but private living quarters.

The belief of many students is that the administration would like to ban alcohol use completely. Bilodeau says this is not true. The campus administration does not want students to stop drinking but not to abuse the privilege. Bilodeau says the administration wants students to learn to drink responsibly.

Bilodeau says he has not had any problem with alcohol use on-campus as of yet. He does not foresee any problems, but says the students need to learn the rules for drinking and to abide them.

A new policy implemented by the on-campus staff is the Apartment Alcohol Policy. The policy is a contract between the on-campus staff and a student that wants to have an alcoholic party. The policy states the rules and regulations of an alcoholic party. Bilodeau says the policy gives the students more responsibility and may help to keep on-campus parties to a minimum. If all on-campus parties get out of control then the staff and administration may have to prohibit parties all together.

COLLEGE STUDENTS; LONESOME PEOPLE

College students, particularly entering freshmen, are more lonely than virtually all other social groups except single parents, alcoholics and some high school students, according to a researcher at the University of Nebraska-Lincoln.

"We have been very surprised to learn that college students are one of the more lonely groups of people we've surveyed over the years," says John Woodard, UNL professor of human development, who has given his loneliness test to thousands of people--including over 400 students--over the past 20 years.

After asking respondents how they feel and behave in specific social situations, Woodard rates them on what he calls his "loneliness index."

"Ironically, what we have found is that high school and college students--who you would expect to be the least lonely of all people--rate very high on the loneliness index, while the elderly--who you would expect to feel lonely--are the lowest group on the loneliness index," he reports.

The only people lonelier than entering freshmen, he says, are alcoholics, single parents, rural high school students and female, inner-city high schoolers.

"We believe that students are lonely for a good many reasons," Woodard explains. "Most of them have been uprooted from their family support systems, their life-long friends, and are searching to establish a new support system in a strange place among strange people."

In addition, he says, "College students are in a period when they have to make new decisions about all sorts of things--committing themselves to college, building a philosophy of life, setting rules for moral behavior, what classes they will take--and decision-making is a very lonely process."

"College is indeed a time of shaping and building for students," agrees Thomas Cummings, a counseling education specialist at Arizona State University.

You can be in the middle of New York City and still be lonelier than if you were in Muncie, Indiana," he notes. "And a student in the midst of a new campus can be surrounded by people all day, and still feel lonely because of the changes and decisions they have to make."

Loneliness, says UNL's Woodard, "is a very normal human condition, but it becomes a problem when it interferes with someone's ability to function."

For instance, unusually lonely students often can't study well, isolate themselves from social activities, and become depressed and withdrawn.

"But something as simple as a phone call home, joining a club or organization, or going to church can help students establish the new relationships and gain the self confidence they need to overcome their loneliness," Woodard says.

HURRICANE GLORIA PASSES CALMLY

CATHY CULP
CONTRIBUTOR

The threat of hurricane Gloria caused alarm throughout the east coast, including Wilmington. The students living on UNC-W campus had to decide to leave or stay for the hurricane. The majority of students headed home but those who stayed had to be prepared for the worst. Todd Brady, Resident Director, says the school took the proper precautions to protect the students' on-campus.

Todd Brady says everyone was prepared and cooperative. A few of the precautions taken by the on-campus staff were: an emergency back-up for the telephone, Trask Coliseum was prepared for evacuation, and the cleaning, cooking, and maintenance staff were all on duty.

Brady says "We had a list of everyone staying in the resident halls and where they lived." Everyone who stayed could not leave their building. The cooking staff provided food for everyone and delivered dinner on Thursday night.

Brady says all students on-campus felt safe and comfortable. Brady says "The cooperation of the students made the situation easier."

Mimi Cunningham, Publicity Director for UNC-W, says "Plans were underway quickly and under control." Cunningham says the UNC-W staff had prepared emergency plans for a hurricane after the ordeal of hurricane Diana. Cunningham says an

NEW REGISTRATION WORKS OUT

ANNE SIMPSON
CONTRIBUTOR

Registration day at UNC-W until now meant long lines at Trask Coliseum, students waiting for hours to register, sometimes camping out all night outside Trask to get in the front of the line.

No more. When students registered for the fall 1985 semester they did not follow the same procedure used in the past. They did not go to Trask, wait in line, pick up a master card and then a course card for each course, then turned the cards together.

Instead, they went to one of the 22 computer terminals around the campus and were registered with little or no wait.

"We have not changed what we do but how we do it," said L. Murray Lee, Associate Registrar.

"This new 'on line' system has many advantages, both for the Registrar's staff and for students," said Lee. This new system not only saves time but prevents deliberate abuse of the registration process.

In the past, students could hold out their course cards to keep from having to pay tuition immediately. As long as they held a course card they were guaranteed a place in the course. With course cards "floating around" this way the Registrar could not tell how many students would be in each class, and some classes ended up over-loaded.

This abuse is no longer possible.

Now, if a student does not pay tuition the day he registers, or if he preregisters before he is supposed to, the computer cancels his registration.

Every day the schedules of students who registered that day are printed out. Then the schedules are put in the student's P.O. Box by 10:00 a.m. the next day.

Students registering went first to Trask to fill out a personal data sheet, then to Hogard to register at a computer terminal, then to the Registrar's Office to pay. Traks opened at 8:30 a.m., and everyone was through by 9:15 according to Lee.

During the interview, Lee received a call concerning the registration of a student in a P.E. course. Lee went to a computer terminal and called up on display the roll for that section. He was able to see immediately who was registered for that class.

"This is a big improvement over the previous system," said Lee.

Danielle Woods

I hate my car!! I think it's out to get me, no really. I'll be cruising down the road at 45 mph and Brutus (that's his name) will conk out just as I'm turning off the road—major danger. There you are on your only day off sitting in the middle of the road helpless, cause you don't know what's wrong with the stupid thing.

PEOPLE! They scream, honk, and drive by asking, "Is there a problem?" (No I love sitting in the middle of both roads, having people yell, honk, and ask me dumb questions!!!) Finally, when the good samaritan offers to help you get out of the road, you find out that he is a parttime demolitionist. He gets behind you and smashes his car into yours till you roll off the road.

Another annoying characteristic of Brutus is his slick, stick, screeching to a halt breaks. I'll be going 15 mph and then have to stop—squeeeeeeceek!! Well I'm embarrassed cause whenever I hear someone do that I say to myself "what a jerk" Now it's me in that very situation. Every one is thinking "What a jerk, she can't drive!"

Brutus loves to play mind games with me, seriously! For instance my break lights—maybe they'll work or maybe they won't. And at times when I'm really not sure (. . . t night), a police car gets behind me. Oh my God, talk about panic, and to add to that the dash board lights don't ever work, so I don't know how fast I'm going,

Trauma Time! Oh I really hate that car. I'm sure many of you are thinking what a fool she is to keep the car. Well you are right. It was my first investment. I paid for it. (In more ways than one.) It will break me to buy one now. I'm paying for college (just me) and I only have a Part/Full time job, so I can't afford to junk it right now.

Good news! Good news! Something happened today that may cause me to act forcefully to that lazy, slouch of a car. I got up early today cause I had extra things to do before my 8:00 o'clock class. I live in the boonies. So I got in my car at 7:30 a.m. to warm it up. (It will stall if I don't. HA! HA!) Well it sputtered, spat and DIED!! So did I, cause I had an exam. My first exam in communications. I ranted, raved, punched, kicked, cursed, and cried. But Brutus just laughed!!

Mom came out saying, "I'll take you." OKAY. LATER she gets out of the shower hears me crying and thinks I'm yelling at her and decides not to take me. (As my life is hanging on a limb) At 7:56 a.m. after I beg her she relents. I get into the car with my 10 books, 2 reports, and an antebellum costume for my oral literature class. That I had to carry around for the rest of the day.

Ugh, Ugh, Ugh!!! THAT WAS THE LAST STRAW. Does anybody want to buy a car? The radio works AM! (yummy) The washer works. The heat works. The Rest? Flip a coin.

FOOTBALL TEAM NOT NEEDED

COMMENTARY

BRYANT HENDERSON

An article in the sports section of the "Wilmington Morning Star" concerning a varsity intercollegiate football team for UNCW calls for this comment.

I would have to believe that Athletic Director Bill Brooks is correct. The costs for beginning and maintaining an intercollegiate football team would be astronomical. I fear that the UNCW club football team are being totally unrealistic in believing that the greater Wilmington community would be interested in funding a stadium on the campus that would be adequate for a Division I football program. The state of North Carolina already has so many Division I teams, with the available in-state talent so diluted that the so-called "Big Four" teams will have a hard time competing against other conference members form states in which the talent is not so dispersed. Obviously, the other ACC schools besides N.C. State refuse to schedule teams like ECU, because they do not wish to give credibility to other teams.

There is already a glut of football on television, with the ACC now on the tube, as they have been with basketball for years. Frankly, the Wilmington community would not support a team at UNCW to the extent that would be economically necessary. Our community is not one of spectators. It is one of participants, especially during the fall of the year. Coach Brooks is absolutely right in saying that most established football fans would continue to drive to the Triangle area.

Even if money could be raised in the community, I seriously question the priority of a football team at UNCW. Frankly, the money "invested" in an intercollegiate program would probably show a very poor return. Whom would a football team really benefit? The players? Most, almost certainly all, would not continue to play the gridiron game after college, so the college competition would really not prepare them to compete in an activity that would help their physical fitness in later years.

There was a mention in the "Star News" article about the football club clashing with the rugby club for the use of practice space. Frankly, UNCW should give more support to activities such as rugby and track that athletes can continue to compete after college. I understand that UNCW's rugby team now has over 30 members; those young men could continue to play rugby well into their thirties. There are at least two young women of high school age in Wilmington who have developed into international-class runners, yet UNCW has no track or track & field team. A "Big Name" football program does not equate to excellence in an institution of higher learning. There are numerous activities that are in dire need of funding at UNCW that would better prepare students mentally, physically, and socially than would an expensive intercollegiate football team.

UNCW is the only University in North Carolina where students can play at the edge of the eastern United States of America between classes.

Only one thing could be better than attending UNCW—going to UNCW and being a member of a Sorority or Fraternity.

As the old saying (as quoted by J. Fredrick Houser) goes:

"Casual acquaintances may times part, but brothers and sisters will forever remain in thy heart."

This is what Fraternities and Sororities are all about. Fraternity for brotherhood, and Sorority for sisterhood.

Mike Nixon stated: "I figured I would attend UNCW for four or more years. So I decided I'd join a social organization and enjoy my college career with a group of people with the same common interest."

Jan Hartly explained: "I'm a UNCW graduate. Being a member of my Sorority was a wonderful experience. When I recollect on my college days I picture professors, the campus and studying -- yet memories of my Sorority life dominate my thoughts."

This is the beginning of another school year. All of the Greeks have prepared over the summer to assure fun rush programs.

If you have considered being in a Greek group, we urge you to pursue your interest. If you haven't considered Greek Life, we suggest you reconsider.

The Greek way of life enables a person the opportunity to acquire a long lasting bond of friendship of which J. Fredrick Houser spoke.

Rush programs are slowly coming to halt for most Greek groups. From the BOBBO margin of leading indicators -- it is apparent that membership is up sharply in both Fraternities and Sororities this year. The names of new members of each organization will appear in the "Behind the Greek Columns."

Religion can be a pain in the neck, can't it? For every one person that I have met who feels usefully involved in organized religion, I have met three or four who are either disgusted or have turned off the whole process.

There is a kind of natural distancing that occurs in the lives of many who, being raised in a church and participating in a lot of activities without a lot of reflection find themselves, in their college years, pulling back from involvement in the church. It is one way of distancing themselves from past external authority figures in order to work out their own identity.

But there are others whose experiences of organized religion has left them feeling judged, forced into narrow thinking, taught simple beliefs that do not square with all the insights of a maturing mind and personality. Even worse, there are some religious orientations that center their style around fear. Their strict demands for certain kind of behavior and demands for submission to a particular way of life often times leads the individual to realize some of the negative aspects of their personal life style and put on a mask of goodness and also to deny some of the positive aspects of human life because they are told that such behavior is wrong. The net result is a real turn off and turning away from religion.

What a waste! Here we are at a university developing so many aspects of our mind and body and yet, because of some past experience that has turned us off, we choose not to explore a more mature and positive spirituality. In my own growth I have found that a continuing maturing faith is positive and supportive of all that makes life feel good and meaningful. It is built around words like hope, love, peace, strength, power, and wholeness. Instead of denying and limiting our life, a growing faith leads us to the deepest dimensions of our own possibilities. It opens before us a world filled with adventure and joy.

I wish that those who have turned themselves off to religion because past negative experiences would consider the possibility that there is a place for exploring spirituality as a significant part of life. If there are questions to be asked, ask them. If there is understanding to be sought, seek it. If there are conversations that need to be shared, then share them. October 2 and 3 we saw a multi-media presentation entitled "Habakkuk" taking place in Kenan Auditorium. Based on the words of the Old Testament prophet Habakkuk, here is a contemporary presentation of our current religious situation that is mature, intellectually coherent and emotionally stirring that can provide some useful opportunities for reflection for one who seeks a more mature spiritual life.

Think about where you are in your own spiritual journey. Perhaps if you haven't turned away quickly. Consider the possibility of exploring a new dimension of your life that can bring much joy and meaning to all the other possibilities of your existence.

One of the major concerns that we had was the lack of communications between the SGA and you—the student body. In the future we would like to improve student-government interaction in order to make the SGA more responsive to your student needs. Remember, students make things happen!!

On behalf of all the Senators and myself, we would like to hear from you. Come by the Union Room 200, or call us at 395-3553. Our office hours are from 8:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m. We will be placing suggestion boxes in the Residents Halls in the next couple weeks. We need to hear from you.

THE PRESIDENTS CORNER

Well Seahawks, we made it through another Hurricane. I know most of you made it through with flying colors. What a dudd!

This week's President's Corner is written by Dawn Clodfelter, Freshman Class Senator. She is just one of the exciting new members to SGA who would like to tell you about your SGA.

As an incoming freshman, I was worried about not becoming involved with the school's activities. The SGA (Student Government Association) was just what I looking for. It offered me the opportunity to get involved with you, the students, as well as the current administration

The weekend following the student elections, the newly elected Freshman Senators along with the current members of the SGA enjoyed a constructive retreat at Fort Caswell. On the retreat we learned how to work together as a group. Furthermore, we were joined by several University Administrators who conducted informative presentations. We also enjoyed a barbeque following the presentations, enabling the Senators and the Administrators to become better acquainted.

WELLNESS

Warning---not attending "Just For The Health of It" on Wednesday, October 9th from 10-12 in front of the Union may be hazardous to your health and well-being.

This is a great opportunity to see for yourself what "wellness" is all about, and to take advantage of the many exhibits and ways to participate in your own health care. Lots of folks will be available to answer your questions, and you can have a hypertension screening. You can check your percentage of body fat, get information on herpes, explore careers on SIGI, learn to relax and deal with stress, check your lung capacity, climb on a ropes course, get contraceptive information, learn to eat better, and much much more.

Another reason to check it could win if you participate in the events. These are not your ordinary prizes, these are great--besides being healthy!

- * Peugeot Pipeline-1 (cruiser) from Pedal pushers
- * 3 month membership from The Crest Fitness Club valued at $75.00
- * A day of Outdoor Adventure/ New Horizons for you and eleven friends
- * $25.00 gift certificate from Boseman's Sporting goods

"IF THEY DON'T GET A HANDLE ON THIS DRUG THING, IT'S GONNA START TO AFFECT THE GAME."

GREEKS FEELING THE HEAT

Last year, the commission appointed by trustees of Colby College to review problems with the school's 11 fraternities and sororities adopted a recommendation: no one had anticipated: withdraw recognition for all greek organizations.

And this fall, the college has opened for the first time without greeks on campus.

"We had tried creating new standards for them two years earlier," says administrator Earl Smith. "They had an impact in some cases, but they didn't have much of an impact overall."

Amherst College in Massachusetts soon followed Colby's lead. But even schools that didn't go as far as spending this fall giving greek organizations unprecedented nationwide scrutiny.

There is nothing new about disciplinary sanctions against individual greek chapters, but even national greek leaders acknowledge the heat is on as never before.

Already this fall, officials at Florida, Duke, Lehigh and Dartmouth have investigated and filed charges against some of their fraternities. In addition Loyola-New Orleans administrators say they will soon bring criminal charges against two former frat members.

"We're under attack," says Mark Mullinix of Alpha Tau Omega's national organization.

"There is an increasing public outcry fueled by dramatic stories of misconduct, much of it relating to the way women are treated by fraternities," Mullinix says.

Part from the ongoing disciplinary measures on many different campuses, some unusual punishments are being imposed:

+Amherst and Colby's booting of their greek organizations marks the first time since the 1960's that any institution has taken such action.

+ATO officials last year disbanded three of its approximately 150 chapters, a level Mullinix calls "dramatic."

+Pi Kappa Phi's national director last year urged chapter leaders to adopt a strong stand against sexual abuse, warning that abusive behavior at fraternities had become an epidemic.

+Dozens of schools have adopted tougher disciplinary regulations. Florida, for one, recently decided to require all fraternities to hire security guards for parties.

+Dartmouth, Hamilton, Colgate, Brown and Stanford -- among other schools -- are under pressure either to abolish all fraternities or implement reforms.

National fraternity leaders complain they want to, to solve the problems, but don't want to lend credence to what they say is an unfair emphasis on problems not unique to the greek system.

"The national leadership of many organizations is sickened by some of what's happening in local chapters," says Robert Marchesani Jr. of the National Interfraternity Conference.

"But they have had their consciousness raised, and they are leading a re-dedication to the standards and ideals we uphold."

Says the ATO's Mullinix: "There is an increasing realization in the greek community that we cannot sustain the level of legitimate criticism we're getting."

"But there are some people more interested in vilifying us by harping on one problem or another."

"They're not focusing on the broader picture that includes the fact that fraternities and sororities accomplish many worthwhile things."

Both critics and supporters attribute the increased scrutiny to several factors:

+Greek students tend to be more conservative than other students, and consequently slower to adapt to new social attitudes, particularly toward women.

+Stiffer drinking laws and court rulings making colleges more responsible for their students' safety are forcing schools to tighten disciplinary rules for all students.

+National greek leaders, themselves worried about the misbehaviors and bad publicity, are increasing their own scrutiny of chapters, and in some cases closing chapters down on their own. In May, for example, Sigma Phi Epsilon alumni closed their Worcester Polytechnic Institute chapters after several instances of misconduct.

But the increased scrutiny, greek leaders say, causes some school officials react to distorted perceptions, or punish houses that are well-behaved while they discipline problem chapters.

Others charge discipline problems are endemic to greek organizations.

Greek organizations are "refuges" under attack, say "objects of conquest -- worthy, but decidedly inferior," contends University of New Hampshire journalism Prof. Andrew Merton in the September issue of Ms. magazine.

Merton cites statistics indicating there have been 50 gang rapes at college fraternities during the past three years, and 29 deaths from hazing incidents during the past six.

The crimes and carnage, however, haven't dampened student interest.

Greek membership this fall at an all-time high of about 250,000 students, up from 100,000 in 1972.

Perhaps more significantly, there are as many schools inviting greek organizations to their campus for the first time as there are schools withdrawing recognition.

Maryville College in St. Louis, for one, has opened its campus to greeks for the first time this fall.

Marchesani says membership at some Amherst fraternities is increasing even though the university doesn't recognize them, thus denying them privileges official student groups have, such as access to campus facilities.

Even some banned chapters resurface.

At Loyola-New Orleans, for example, officials have had difficulty permanently banning Pi Kappa Theta.

PKT leaders apparently reorganized themselves as Pi Beta Kappa, held a rush party last month, and promptly drew the same kind of misconduct complaints that prompted university officials to disband Pi Kappa Theta in the first place.

In response, student affairs director Vincent Knipping threatened to suspend any student who in any way lends support to the new Pi Beta Kappa venture.

The fraternity leaders "think by changing their name they're going to beat the system," Knipping says.

"They're not going to play name switch with me every week and think the game starts over. It doesn't."

CLINIC OPENS FOR TESTING

JOE PRESSLEY
CONTRIBUTOR

UNCW has collegiate sports, academic clubs, intramurals, parties, and not unlike all campuses- sexual activity.

From July 1, 1984 to June 30, 1985, 6849 students took advantage of the services offered at the Student Health & Wellness Center. Of those, 1102 of the visits were sexually related. Those visits are classified as contraceptives, sexually transmitted diseases, and pregnancy.

The Center gives physical exams for oral contraceptives by appointment only, which consists of a complete physical and Pap smear. One hundred seventy-one females came in for oral contraceptives and received prescriptions for birth control pills.

Ginga Colclough, a Family Nurse Practitioner, stated contraceptive counselling is available to males, but is very rare. A slide tape "Young Man's Sexual Responsibility" is available to any group and is very informative.

Sexually transmitted disease testing had the largest number of students, with 771 requesting testing...

357 Gonorrhea cultures (3% Positive)
150 Chlamydia cultures (20% Positive)
65 Genital Herpes (13% Positive)

Each student is notified of the results and if positive given a prescription for medication.

Pregnancy tests were given to 165 females, and thirty-nine positive. According to Catherine Vangellow, Physicians Assistant, they are termed "problem pregnancy" due to the nonuse of contraceptives. These women received counselling on all the alternatives when pregnant. Vangellow felt sure that all of them opted for abortions.

Sexual problems among students has always been a problem, but people are becoming more educated on the subject. A key to these statistics is they are only from the center and does not include other clinics, the N. H. County Health Department, or private physicians.

Both Ginga and Catherine emphasized the confidentiality of any of these services, and urge anyone with any questions to come by the Center or submit questions to the Seahawk.

PLAYERS

UNCW has a vast and growing intramural program. According to Intramural Director Dr. Lea Dudley there are eighteen sports on the program this year.

One of the most difficult portions of the program, organizing and "getting the word out", has now been simplified thanks to the use of the UNCW VAX computer system. Over the summer Dr. Dudley and some ingenious computer consultants consolidated and developed a computer program designed specifically for the UNCW Intramural program. Students may now receive information about the intramurals program by simply connecting into the VAX system. Here's how:

1. You can go to any of the four computer clusters on campus (B215, H117, S221, DL201)

2. a. Type "VXA" at the select service prompt.

b. Strike the "Return" key.

c. Strike the "Return" key again at the "connected" prompt.

d. Type "Intramurals" at the "Username" prompt.

e. Type "Sport" at the "Password" prompt.

f. Now you are ready to make some choices at the "Intramural Menu".

You can have your name, address and sport preferences added to our data file. As the mailing is prepared for each sport you will receive a detailed account of procedures to follow, deadlines and other important facts through the University mail system. To implement this type "1" on the Intramural Main Menu.

You can file your team roster through the computer. Be sure to fill out all of the requested information. To access that instrument type "2" on the Menu.

To find out an update of what's going on in the Intramural world all you need to do is type "3" on the Menu. Should you have access to the VAX line because of a student account or in any other manner you can also tune in to the action by typing "IMNEWS" at the "$" prompt. This function allows the user to obtain scores, standings, and schedules.

The Intramural Main Menu even has a help screen if you are new at computer operations. To access that choice type "4" on the Menu.

This easy, computer-assisted Intramural program now sets the pace for Intramural programs at other campuses. Managers will be able to minimize scheduling conflicts for team members with the use of this system and can get a hard copy of the schedule with the use of a printer. Managers need to utilize the terminals frequently to obtain the best results of the system.

Don't forget Intramural volleyball sign-ups began on September 22.

SEMESTER IN SPAIN

Not just for Spanish majors only, but for everyone: beginners, "in between" students, and advanced. Put some excitement into your college career!

SENIOR OR ADVANCED: Cost about the same as a semester in a U.S. college: $3,480. Price includes jet round trip to Sevilla from New York, room, board, and tuition complete. Government grants and loans may be applied towards our program.

Live with a Spanish family, attend classes four hours a day, four days a week, four months. Earn 16 hrs. of credit (equivalent to 4 semesters taught in U.S. colleges over a two year time span). Your Spanish studies will be enhanced by opportunities not available in a U.S. classroom. Standardized tests show our students' language skills superior to students completing two year programs in U.S. Advanced courses also.

Hurry: It takes a lot of time to make all arrangements.

Fun board enthusiasts from across the country are expected for the Marine Expo '85 Fun Board Regatta on October 5 and 6. Sponsored by Caribbean Regatta Company, the regatta will feature competition in wave riding and jumping, long distance, slalom and free style and will be preceded by clinics on Thursday and Friday.

Competition is planned for the ocean in front of the Blockade Runner Hotel at Wrightsville Beach. It will be moved to the sound side, however, if wind conditions dictate.

Registration may be made at the Caribbean Trading Company or at the Wilmington Parks & Recreation office. It is $15 in advance or $20 on the day of competition.

It is that time of year again and no I am not referring to taxes. I am referring to graduation applications that seniors must turn into the Registrar's office by October 29, 1985. In order to get an application a senior must go to the registrar's office with a check or cash in the amount of $27.00. This amount covers the cost of the diploma and a cap and gown. This application must be filled out by a student's advisor and the Head of the Department that the student is getting the degree in. Since this process of getting more than one signature may take some time, the Registrar's office recommends getting an application now to give the student enough time to get everything filled out correctly and on time. If a student's application is late he or she will not graduate on time.

Once a student turns in his or her application they will be notified by the Registrar's Office of acceptance or if there is anything missing. If any student plans to graduate in May, this application must be turned in on time. If any Senior has any questions, please contact the Registrar's office or their advisor.

The Wilmington Parks and Recreation Department's "Art Center Theatre" proudly presents the John Pielmeier Broadway drama "Agnes of God", directed by Marjorie Megivern. The drama will be performed at The Community Arts Center, 2nd and Orange Street, Thursday October 10th through Sunday October 13th, at 8:00 p.m. Tickets are $4.00 general admission, seniors $2.50. For more information call Joyce Grear or Rob Cassatt at 341-7860.

Don't miss this year's Riverfest concert featuring North Carolina's own Mike Cross--sponsored by the Thalian Hall Commission. Tickets are on sale at the Thalian Hall Box Office for two concerts at 7:00 p.m. and 9:30 p.m. on Saturday, October 5. Call the Thalian Hall Box Office at 763-9328 or 763-3398 for reservations and information. Visa and Mastercard accepted.

Inside Old Wilmington Tour (formerly Historic Wilmington Tour), Tuesdays through Saturdays, 10:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m. Includes Thalian Hall, a 19th Century Opera House; the Burgwin-Wright House, an 1852 home featuring Italian architecture. Tickets available at the Chamber of Commerce and all three museum buildings. Tours begin on the hour with the last tour at 4:00 p.m. Individual tickets (one building) are $2.00 for adults and $1.00 for youths under 18. All three buildings--$5.00 for adults and $2.50 for youths. For details call Diana Harris at the Chamber of Commerce, 762-2611 or 1-800-922-7117.

The University Program Board offers some fun, cheap entertainment on Sunday nights for all interested students. Sound good so far? Well its fixing to sound better, especially if you missed some of the summer's hottest films like Beverly Hills Cop, Romancing the Stone, Star Wars, and the list goes on. The UPB sponsors a movie, or two, every Sunday night in room 100 of the University Union and the price is just $1.00. You can't beat that. So if you need some relaxing entertainment after a partying weekend, or if you just don't feel like studying and are bored, head for the Union.

The Wilmington area has always been known for its abundance of wildlife and natural resources, as well as for its busy port through which international commerce takes place.

On Friday, October 4, the public is invited to two forums to discover how governmental policy makers view these resources and how they will be affected by future growth of Wilmington and North Carolina. The forums are sponsored by the local Propeller Club.

The first session will begin at 1:30 p.m. in the Cape Fear Technical College auditorium.

The second forum, sponsored by the Coastal Resources Advisory Council, will begin at approximately 3 p.m. on board the Schooner Yankee.

Last year more than 300 colleges representing more than 2 million students competed in a national campus search for a student to represent English Leather Musk men's toiletries in national advertising. The second annual "Campus Search for the English Leather Musk Man" is now underway to find the 1986 student who will represent the company. Campus winners will receive gift sets of English Leather, and the national winner will receive cash and prizes.

To enter you must be an enrolled college or university student. Contestants or friends of contestants must send one photograph, color or blank and white, taken within the last six months to Campus Search for English Leather Musk Man. The photos must be no longer than 8" x 10" or smaller than 3" x 5" and should have the contestants name, address, school and age on the back. No purchase is necessary to enter. The editorial staff of this paper will select a male student representative of this campus as a national finalist. A panel of judges, selected by the manufacturer, will review photos of the campus winners and select the national winner. The English Leather Musk Man will win cash contribution of $1,000 current winner. Until winning the Campus Search, Kerry had never modeled professionally. This year he has been appearing in English Leather Musk advertising in magazines including People, Life, Cosmo, Gentlemen Quarterly, Playgirl, Mademoiselle, Penthouse, Seventeen and Glamour. towards his tuition, an all expense paid trip to New York to be photographed by a leading photographer, and a selection of merchandise prizes. All selections will be based upon photographic appeal.

Meditation, introspection and concentration will be the main themes of a workshop on "The Theory and Practice of Tai Chi Chuan" featuring noted master Marshall Ho'o being offered by UNCW's Office of Special Programs on Saturday, November 2 from 9:30 a.m. - 3:30 p.m., in Room 119 Trask Coliseum.

Ho'o, a resident of California, will be visiting the UNCW campus to explain the benefits of Tai Chi Chuan, a classical Chinese exercise system based on slow, fluid, balanced movements designed to develop both mind and body. Topics to be covered include "Developing the Life Force and Chi Energy," "Self-Acupressure for Increased Vitality and Improved Energy," and "Tai-Chi as a self-Defense system of Martial Arts."

Ho'o comes to Wilmington as a distinguished master of his art. He is dean and chairman of the Aspen Academy of Martial Arts as well as one of the original founders. He also serves as chairman of the National Tai Chi Chuan Association and the East-West Acupuncture Society. He is a licensed acupuncturist certified by the state of California and is an educational advisor of the Center of Chinese Medicine of California. He also is a doctor or Chinese Medicine. His honors include the Hall of fame award from Black Belt Magazine for Tai Chi chuan.

Ho'o's teaching is a dominant force in his philosophy of life believing that a human being needs to be constructive by preserving what is good and eliminating what is bad. "If a human being strives in this area," Ho'o says, "he will find himself worthy of the time he has spent thinking about training, thinking about his own abilities, thinking about his shortcomings and thinking about all the long and short-term goals. All of these are part of the training of the modern man who takes the martial arts as one of the facets of his life. The martial arts are a subdivision of the art of living."

Registration deadline for the workshop is October 18. Fee is $39 which includes lunch. If registration occurs before the deadline, the fee will be discounted to $35. No registrations can be accepted at the door and enrollment is limited. Refunds cannot be made after the October 18 deadline unless the workshop is cancelled.

For more information, contact the Office of Special Programs at 395-3195 between 8:00 a.m. and 5:00 p.m., Monday, Wednesday and Friday and 8:00 a.m. - 6:00 p.m., Tuesday and Thursday.

CHAMBER SINGERS UNITE

The UNCW Chamber Singers have been selected to appear at the 1985 In-Service Convention of the North Carolina Music Educator's Association in Winston-Salem on November 11, 1985.

Selection was made from a tape which was submitted by Dr. Joe Hickman, conductor of the Chamber Singers, to a state-wide committee lead by Sam Doyle, Chairman of the Choral Division of NCMEA.

The program which is to be presented by the Chamber Singers in Winston-Salem will be performed in Wilmington, at St. John's Museum of Art, on Friday, November 8, 1985 at 8 p.m. The concert is free and open to the public. It will contain a recently composed work for guitar and chorus, Romancero Gitano, by Mario Castelnuovo-Tedesco. It is based upon text by Federico Garcia-Lorca. Guitarist Rob Nathanson will appear in the performance with the Chamber Singers.

The Chamber Singers group plans a performance on seasonal music in December and several performances in the spring. On March 21, Gerhard Herz (the internationally known Bach scholar who recently came to Wilmington to accept the 1985 Albert Schweitzer Prize for Music in the name of J. S. Bach) will appear in a lecture-recital with the Chamber Singers and Orchestra.

During the course of the year, the Chamber Singers will hold informal performances on the campus (at the University Union, in King Hall Auditorium, or in the lobby of Kenan Hall).

AMY HARRIS STAFF WRITER

A new Geography Club was formed last Friday Night at Katy's Great Eats, a nearby restaurant on South College Road.

A dozen students gathered in this friendly atmosphere to elect new officials and to begin planning upcoming projects with the help of the club's advisor, Dr. Frank Ainsley, who is an Associate Professor of Geography here at UNC-W.

Junior Ron Davis, by unanimous vote, was elected president while Jeann McQuery, also a junior, gained the seat of Vice President. Rita Kay was elected Secretary/Treasurer.

It is unknown at this time if the club will receive SGA funding.

According to Davis, a registered club must be in existence for at least one year to receive funding from the student government. And although the Geography Club was active in 1982 and 1983, not enough students showed an interest to keep the club going last year.

Therefore, according to Davis, the 1985 Geography Club will most likely be considered a new club; however, negotiations are still under way.

Even if the Geography Club does not receive funding this year, Davis remains optimistic. "We are already planning to attend a regional geography conference held in Chapel Hill in late November," he says, "and plans are underway for a cookout scheduled for this month."

The club hopes to attract students from all areas of studies, not only geography.

Vice President, McQuery stresses that "Geography is not only concerned with reading maps and studying land regions, it also concerns itself with the cultural and social aspects of life as well." Club activities will be centered around all aspects of geography.

Weekly meetings will be held at 4:00 p.m. on Friday afternoons at various restaurants that offer a relaxed and friendly atmosphere.

CHI PHI; ANOTHER GREAT YEAR

Brad Allen

The Chi Phi Fraternity is off to one of its best years at UNCW in its ten-year history with the official pinning of seventeen promising pledges as well as being very active in on campus activities.

This summer was a great building block for the fall with the Wilmington Chapter of Chi Phi winning the most improved Chapter of Chi Phi. Also, several house improvement projects started and funded by our Alumni were completed.

The Chi Phi Fraternity also supports the football team and soccer team who are also off to a good start this year.

We would also like to invite students, faculty, and administrative officials to feel free to stop by and visit as we work together to promote UNCW nationwide.

M*A*S*H Actor To Appear

For seven years, Larry Linville was Dr. Frank Burns, that dimwitted Romeo, on the classic television series M*A*S*H. Now you can see him in person at 8 p.m., Friday, Oct. 25, in Kenan Auditorium on the UNCW campus.

Larry was best known for many years as a dramatic stage actor. But his endearing portrayal of Dr. Burns has cemented his reputation as an equally adept comedic actor.

For the first time, Larry will present an un-cut (and uncensored) never-before aired episode of M*A*S*H. The episode was originally made and shown to American service personnel overseas. It was a big hit, as you may well imagine!

Not only will Larry discuss incidents and anecdotes of his M*A*S*H years, he will also talk about his role on Paper Dolls, being trained at the Royal Academy of Arts, and becoming an overnight success...after 22 years!

Tickets are $2 for UNCW students, faculty, and staff, and $3 for the general public. For more information call 395-3842.

Larry Linville, best known as Dr. Frank Burns on M*A*S*H, will appear Friday night, October 25th, in Kenan Auditorium. He will bring with him an un-cut never-before aired episode of M*A*S*H to entertain his audience.

Graduate Programs Added

Courtesy of
UNCW News Bureau

The Board of Governors of The University of North Carolina, meeting at The University of North Carolina at Asheville, yesterday took action authorizing The University of North Carolina at Wilmington to begin planning for six new graduate programs at the master's degree level.

The authorization, adopted as part of the greater University's long-range plan for 1984-1989, is consistent with UNCW's mission as a Comprehensive Level I university to expand its graduate programs.

UNCW will now begin the planning process for a master of science degree in biology, master of science degree in chemistry, master of arts degree in history, and a master of arts in teaching degree for secondary school teachers. Chancellor William H. Wagoner stressed that the Board of Governors gave "approval to permit us to plan, not to implement. Planning graduate programs is a lengthy process, and we want to do it seriously and well."

Once planning is complete, each new graduate degree program will be submitted to the president of the University, the University-wide graduate council, and ultimately back to the Board of Governors for final approval.

"The programs approved by the Board of Governors today in the natural sciences and humanities are an absolutely necessary component of a Comprehensive Level I university," Wagoner said. "During the whole planning process, our UNC-W faculty planning committee, Board of Trustees, and the total university have worked diligently for a balanced program of master's level degree offerings."

UNCW currently offers the master of business administration degree; the master of education degree in elementary education, in special education, in reading education, and in educational administration and supervision; and the master of science degree in marine biology with three areas of specialization: marine biology, biological oceanography and coastal biology. A request for authorization to establish a master of science degree program in geology has been submitted to the general administration of The University of North Carolina.

In response to questions concerning the initiation of the new programs, Wagoner said that it is expected that any of these programs will be in place to receive students in the fall of 1986.

Department of Education Changes Calculation Of Default Rates

The U.S. Department of Education has changed the way colleges calculate their student loan default rates.

While the department says it's just trying to catch scofflaws, some campus loan officials fear the change will make it easier to cut student aid in the next federal budget.

Using the new formula, the default rate is more than twice what it was under the old formula, lending credence to administration warnings that the default rate is out of control.

Critics worry the refigured rate will improve the Reagan administration's political efforts to make it harder for students to get Guaranteed Student Loans (GSLs), thereby cutting the program's cost.

Loan officials expect the administration to propose cutting the GSL program again next February. Congress has rejected similar proposals for the last three years.

Currently, about 3.2 million students receive GSLs.

"It's obvious the department is preparing an onslaught (on loan programs), using the default rate as the leading edge of this onslaught," says William Cloban, a lawyer/lobbyist for the Consumer Bankers Association, whose member banks make 80 percent of all student loans.

"They're trying to make an argument for legislative changes they want in these loan programs," Cloban contends.

Jan Frohlicher of the National Council of High Education Loan Programs is particularly miffed the department implemented the new formula without warning or public comment.

"I suspect it (the formula change) is designed to discredit the GSL program to make it easier to get Congress to go along with the budget cuts the department wants," Frohlicher says.

Education department spokeswoman Sharon Messenger denies any political motive for the change.

She dismisses loan officials' criticisms as "inappropriate."

"They shouldn't be finger-pointing or trying to shift the debate from the issue," Messenger says.

"The issue is that there is $5 billion in student loans that are in default, and anyone who suggests that is not a problem has a different perspective than the department."

"We're trying to assure taxpayers and students that tax dollars are being well spent."

In August, Education Secretary William Bennett personally heralded the department's newest tool to catch those who are not meeting their payments on federally-guaranteed loans: the Internal Revenue Service will withhold tax refunds, beginning next year.

Department officials quietly revealed the new default rate formula during the first week of September.

The new formula includes two categories of loans previously not counted: loans in litigation and loans judged uncollectable.

When those loans are added, the default rate for 1984 is 7.4 percent, as compared to 3.3 percent under the old formula.

The default rate jumps to 9.4 percent if loans in default that are eventually paid off also are included.

Opponents of the change acknowledge there may be a sound basis for making the change. It is unclear, they say, whether private-sector loan agencies calculate uncollectable loans in determining default rates.

But they note that, with one exception, the default rate has been declining steadily since 1980. They suggest department officials would have a harder time convincing Congress to cut the program if the default rate was small and getting smaller.

A key representative of university financial aid officers, however, is less concerned about the formula change than the loan officials.

Dennis Martin of the National Association of Financial Aid Administrators notes the formula has been adjusted several times without dire consequences for the program.

Martin is more concerned the department is projecting a higher default rate, using either the old or the new formula.

The GSL program expanded dramatically in the early 1980s, and the loans issued then are beginning to become due today, Martin explains.

Grade Requirements May Be Set For Federal Aid

College students may have to maintain a "C" average in the future in order to get federal financial aid.

The grade requirement is just one change in the aid system Congress is now debating as it tries to pass the Higher Education Reauthorization Act of 1985.

The grade measure, proposed by senators Don Nickles (R-Ok) and Clairborne Pell (D-R.I.), has been proposed unsuccessfully before.

But chances for its passage may be good this time, sources say, because legislators are looking for relatively painless ways to cut the federal budget and because of recent publicity about bad students who get financial aid.

Currently, students only must be in good standing and make "satisfactory academic progress" toward a degree to receive federal aid.

"Unfortunately," Nickles said during a hearing earlier this month, "there have been problems with this open-ended definition."

"Because of this open-ended opportunity for abuse, I believe we need to have a more specific standard."

Nickles originally advanced his idea after a 1981 audit found nearly 20 percent of the students who got aid had less than a "C" average. Ten percent had a cumulative GPA under 1.5.

Congress also is debating a bill to let graduate students, who generally have higher education costs than undergrads, borrow more federally-guaranteed loan money and pay it back over a longer period of time.

The reauthorization process, which effectively sets federal higher education policies for the ensuing five years, usually triggers a slew of proposals that never become law.

But if federal loan programs are to be changed, the changes will first emerge during these congressional review sessions.

The grading bill would put aid recipients whose grades fall below 2.0 on probation for a term.

If the student doesn't improve by the end of the probation period, he or she will be denied federal aid.

Administrators would be empowered, however, to extend the probation period for hardship cases, such as extended illness.

The new break for graduate students who want a Guaranteed Student Loan (GSL) program came up during a House subcommittee hearing.

Georgetown University law school dean John Kramer, speaking for a coalition of law school associations, said grad students needed the break.

"Over time, middle class students in particular are just not going to be able to afford a graduate education," Kramer warns.

Moreover, unless debt repayment policies are changed, many graduate students will feel obligated to take high-paying jobs after they get their degree, instead of going into teaching or community service work, Kramer predicts.

Kramer's plan would let graduate students borrow more than they currently can, and, if they borrow more than $15,000, repay it over 10 to 20 years.

Extended repayment periods currently are made at the discretion of the lending agency.

In part because the plan calls for graduate students to pay the interest on the loans beginning with the 10th year after graduation, Kramer calculates that the changes will save the government between $200 and $500 million a year.

Students would assume the cost, but Kramer thinks they ultimately should be making enough to keep the payments from being too much of a burden.

Current law allows the administration to adjust loan limits, but Kramer says recent law schools' requests for adjustments have been rejected.

Although Kramer's proposals were only for graduate students, he says they could be just as easily applied to all students.

In fact, the American Council of Education, the most prominent higher education lobbying group, wants to increase loan limits to $3,000 from $2,500 for freshmen and sophomore, and to $8,000 from $5,000 for graduate students.

As yet, Reagan administration officials have not commented publicly on either the grade requirement or the grad student differential proposals.

Education Secretary William Bennett is expected to unveil his own proposals for the reauthorization of higher education laws later this year.

1984 is the sweeping controversial novel by George Orwell dissecting our future by relating a takeover of the world by a nameless minority group. Well if we give the group a name, could it be today's totalitarian concept of Orwell's thought is the ERA?

The minions of the Equal Rights Amendment are raising their ugly heads while the majority is wondering at their next move. Must we wait only to ask:

1. Does a minority group with their homogeneous opinionated ideals have the right to change the outcome of events through the process of creating so much red tape that the time that could of been spent finding a national beneficial decision is halted and wasted?

2. Do they have the right to monopolize precious time with petty issues when world wide problems are calling to be solved?

And finally,

3. Does this interest group have the right to dictate to the population- how they should live their lives in church, in the country, in the cities, and even on our campus.

Occurrences have arisen denoting the hallowed ground of our university as the stomping grounds for a campaign of narrowminded thought in the guise of student events. Of course, all people have the right to an opinion, but the active assertion of one's belief cannot be dictated to others. An education institution is a forceful environment which educates and causes us to react to stimuli, but in accordance to moral law it has no proper claim upon teaching an opinion inside or outside class. We create an opinion through a series of continuous stages thus forming our own interpretation. This systematic way of conclusion is indicative to our right to be human.

In conclusion, I wish to define, simply, a doctrine of American right's as a majority -The Preamble of the Constitution of the United States.

WE THE PEOPLE, of the United States, (a collective group of heterogeneous thought) in order to form a more perfect union, (come together and over look the diversity for common peace) establish justice, insure domestic tranquility, (create a civilized law observed by the populace) provide for common defense (protect the citizens as a whole through law) promote general welfare (contribute to mass prosperity), and secure the blessings of liberty for ourselves and our posterity, (insure the promise of freedom for US and our DECENDENTS) do ordain and establish this Constitution of the United States of America. (we legalize and enforce the fundamental law of the United States of America)

So you see, even our founding fathers denounced I and ME and promoted US and WE.

P.S. To whom it may concern, I'm sorry if you misunderstood my article, please reread it. If you still have a problem, come see ME.

Coming at me hard and fast were three of them, I swerved to the right and there were two more, I couldn't very well just stop because there were several right behind me. Any second I knew metal and rubber would be pounding into my flesh. My cycle rode away from this bicycle accident without even a scratch but I wasn't so lucky.

The problems of bicycle safety is more apparent now as the enrollment rises steadily here at UNC-W. UNC-W was built as a pedestrian campus and until the planned bike paths are built pedal pushers are going to have to use a little courtesy.

Certain safety rules should be followed by cyclists and some are enforced. Bicycles fall under the rules of the road: 1) obey all traffic rules and signs 2) always ride with traffic, staying to the right side of the road or sidewalk, 3) ride single file, and 4) yield right of way to pedestrians. Lt. Loughlin, of the campus security, discussed the problem of bicyclists riding in any direction in parking lots and the roads. One main thoroughfare, Reigel Road, is a real problem. He says, "Somebody can get hurt real bad."

Bike riders should also be considerate as to where they park. Ample bike racks have been provided yet bikes are found parked on sidewalks, handicap ramps, and steps. A two dollar fine is enforced for these violations.

UNC-W's Campus Security provides a theft prevention service for your bike. All students, on campus or off are encouraged to have their bicycles registered at Campus Security. "It takes just a few minutes", says Lt. Loughlin. He also states, "Most bikes that are stolen have not been registered". Campus Security also suggests that you always lock your bike, chaining both the rear wheel and the frame. A heavy padlock and a chain no smaller than 3/8" should be used to ensure your bicycles safety.

When peddling your way around campus, remember, "a little common courtesy goes a long, long way!", says Lt. Loughlin.

Bob Haywood

You know what ticks me off? It's when I hear ideas expressed after Hurricane Gloria like - "God spared Wilmington!" as if lousy theology does not give enough bad press to the genuine religious community, such messages make a hurricane sound like a God driven tank that aims at Wilmington and decides at the last moment, "they are good guys and I think I will get those uppity New Yorkers on Long Island instead." The idea of God going to His hurricane stock house and getting Hurricane Harry out, in a few days, and sitting down to plot whose badness merits being clobbered is abhorrent to me.

Hurricanes are disasters, do damage, kill innocent (and stubborn) people. Such deaths are tragic. 7000 people dead in Mexico is also tragic. Deaths by hurricanes and earthquakes make me sad. But that suffering does not compare to the suffering endured by innocent people at the hands of other human beings. Apartheid, hunger in a world of plenty, torture, not only make me sad, they make me mad. That a baby in North Africa is born only to die makes me mad. I call that suffering-evil.

Suffering and evil have been a problem to the human mind since we first became aware that "bad things happen to good people." For centuries we have tried to develop theories to explain how evil could exist in a world created by a good God. Now, if you think I'm going to give you that answer in the next couple of paragraphs, you're crazy! But I do want to make several observations.

First, that God is love, and evil a reality, is a paradox that we simply need to accept. Our intellects are simply too inadequate to understand the mystery of God, and to expand great effort in trying to solve the paradox is to avoid a significant issue of life. Rather than questioning, "Why does God allow evil?" We need to focus on the really relevant question, "how do I live out my life with meaning in a world where good and evil are powerful realities that may very well touch my life?" Secondly, there can be a redemptive aspect of some suffering. While much suffering destroys life, some suffering shapes and fashions our existence in a way that adds depth and meaning to life. I am not labeling divorce, illness, job loss as good; but I do know that many people have discovered courage, power, love, and even God as they have worked through such tragic situations.

Finally, one consequence derived from our decision to run the world and our lives our way rather than God's way is an overall wrought sense of our own importance that makes death seem unnatural and wrong. While all of us want to live long and full lives, our attitudes about death and dying have created an unnatural fear that diminishes our capacity for living.

Suffering happens. Evil forces destroy life. "Why?" Explore, rather, the question, "How shall I who am goodevil live in this good-evil world?"

BEHIND THE GREEK COLUMNS

The sisters of Alpha Delta Pi would futhermore like to acknowledge the awards we received at our National Conference. The conference was held this past July in Dallas, Texas, and was attended by our president, Angel Kiesel. At the conference we received the 125th Anniversary Fund Ribbon, the Abigail Davis Contribution Ribbon, the A-1 Treasury Ribbon, the Pi Pride award for being an outstanding chapter, the "SIS" (Superiority in Service) award, the Panhellenic Star and the History Ribbon.

We, as sisters, would also like to recognize our Fall 1985 pledge class. Members are: Christie Barnhart, Debbie Ferguson, Susan Freeman, Joan Haylick, Laura Henry, Lori Johnson, Kim Kostello, Beth McSherry, Emily Morrison, Pam Oelschig, Dawn Robertson, Rebecca Simpson, Jane Walker, Kerri Whelan, and Michelle White. We are very excited about this large group, for their enthusiasm and willingness represents our future growth.

With the addition of two new organizations and a great Rush for everyone, our Greek system has grown quite a bit since the end of last semester. The sisters of Alpha Delta Pi would like to welcome both Beta Chi Omega, formerly Pi Kappa Phi little sisters, and Sigma Delta Psi, formerly Tau Kappa Epsilon pledges, to the Greek system. We wish them the best of luck in their coming years.

We all, both sisters and pledges, look forward to a great year and hope that everyone at UNC-W can benefit from our growing Greek system.

Are You Sorority Material? Margaret Rose Can Tell You.

If you watch soap operas, spend summers abroad and spring break at Fort Lauderdale, if you drink champagne or Tab diet soda and kill time in the college library watching people instead of studying, you could be sorority material.

On the other hand, if you play bridge, spend break at the amusement park or at home, and drink Schlitz beer or milk, you might want to consider a different campus social scene.

"Rush: A Girl's Guide to Sorority Success," a new book this fall, pinpoints do's and don'ts for "girls" considering greek affiliation by offering advice on everything from recommendations to initiations.

"High school girls must know how competitive rush is," explains author Margaret Ann Rose. "This is the 'me generation' and (sororities) help meet the needs of this generation. Girls who want to must know how to get in."

Rose served as rush captain for her sorority, Zeta Tau Alpha, while at the University of Texas in 1982.

"I met lots of girls who were darling, good communicators and all that, but they froze at the rush party," she says.

"They gave a bad first impression," Rose adds. "And it was very disappointing for me."

She wrote the book to help these girls and others like them, over the pitfalls of sorority rush and membership.

Rose's book dissects sorority life from the kind of students who join to the kind likely to hold office. She examines greek meetings, parties, special occasions, policies and sorority life after college.

But the book's meat is how to get accepted into a sorority.

Rose examines rush policies and activities, pledging, hazing, initiation, and - through it all - how to dress, what makeup to wear and how to communicate effectively.

The growing popularity of greek groups in the past few years convinced Rose the time was right for a definitive book describing how college women could pledge the sorority of their choice.

"Greeks are growing," she says. "Students are not afraid to conform because society has become more conservative. And the image of greeks is changing as more students join."

Rose admits the rowdy image of greeks, fostered by the mid-seventies release of the movie "Animal House," was "not good, not a picture of what it's really like, but the curiosity factor after the movie added to greek membership."

Of more concern to the 30 U.S. national sororities are accusations of racism aimed at groups that resist segregating their organizations to gain official college recognition and privileges, she says.

At the University of Texas, Rose's alma mater, 16 of the 19 sororities on campus this year refused to sign a waiver that would exchange official UT recognition for a promise not to discriminate against minority women.

The racism occurs because so few minority women apply for membership, and those who do often can't meet the financial or social responsibilities, Rose explains.

Alcohol Restraints In Order For "Responsible Drinking"

Courtesy of College Press Service

Police officers "have come to the door on a noise complaint, and have just walked in, and started carding people," complains Mike Forman, Interfraternity Council president at Bradley University. "They don't have the right to do that without a warrant."

They may in fact have the right, and colleges across the country are using it more to keep a much closer eye on students this fall as the nationwide crackdown on student drinking begin its second year.

Some critics fret the crackdown, however, may scuttle campus "responsible drinking" programs, forcing many students off campus -- and into their cars -- to drink in less-controllable, more dangerous situations.

And while observers can't agree if tougher regulations and stricter enforcement actually are changing student drinking habits, campuses' switch to more aggressive anti-drinking tactics this fall is beyond question:

* At Indiana University, the dean of students makes surprise visits to campus parties to find underage drinkers and enforce a new campus key policy.

* Yale now effectively prohibits alcohol at many campus events, and issues students "drinking cards" to help enforce the new rules.

* Local police broke up traditional school - opening street parties at West Virginia and Western Michigan, arresting some 42 students the first week of classes at West Virginia.

* Pittsburgh police have warned student groups they will drop into University of Pittsburgh parties unannounced to enforce new drinking age laws.

* University of Florida administrators made a point of holding a public hearing into alleged violations of their new dry rush rules the very first week of school.

Bradley officials had two students arrested for violating drinking rules during their first week of classes, too. Boston University, Southern Cal, Berkeley, Penn State, San Diego State, Kentucky and Arizona, among scores of other campuses, have adopted stricter rules for student drinking this fall.

At Smith College, for example, underage drinkers no longer can get legal help from the college. Students can't have liquor in dorms at South Dakota state schools any more, while Penn State restricts the kinds of parties that can have kegs.

Administrators say they're responding to new minimum drinking ages and to the difficulty of buying liability insurance without proving they're trying to enforce the rules. No one is sure how much the crackdown is changing student drinking.

"The keg is still the major focus of a party, but there is a trend toward more responsible use of alcohol on our campus," notes Harold Reynolds, director of student affairs at Cal-Berkeley.

"There are some dis-gruntled views about the ban on alcohol, but we are living with it," says George Kuntz, president of the Interfraternity and Sorority Council at Boston University.

"In the past, 10 people would work on the homecoming committee. We had 35 this year. There is a definite increase in participation in school events. It has worked phenomenally well," Kuntz says of the new alcohol regulations.

"I wouldn't say consumption has gone down in our house, but there is more awareness of the potential abuses of alcohol," says Mike Allen, president of Delta Tau Delta at the University of Missouri-Columbia.

At Yale, "there will be fewer large parties with more food and also more VCR rentals," he adds.

And at Texas's Austin campus, "there's not less drinking, but more responsible drinking," says Trina Hedemann of the school's Alcohol Education Task

Accuracy In Academia "Monitors" Professors

"All I know is that they have me on their list," says Boston University political science professor Howard Zinn. "Whether they have agents in my classroom is a good question. That's the most insidious part of this whole thing: everything is kept secret. You just don't know."

He may not know who is watching him, but he does know why.

Zinn, a self-described "Marxist, socialist, and independent radical," is on a list of several thousand social science professors with leftist leanings.

And so it is going across the country this fall as a new "watchdog" group - Accuracy in Academia (AIA) - enlists conservative students to "monitor" their professors for "liberal" slants and "misinformation."

AIA has garnered so many student volunteers nationwide that it has dropped its original plan to use senior citizens to monitor class rooms for liberal sentiments.

Now students, most with grades and credits on the line, will do the monitoring, reports Les Csorba, AIA's executive director.

While many students volunteered independently, many of them are also members of campus conservative groups such as the College Republicans and Young Americans for Freedom.

AIA, in fact has begun direct mail campaigns to solicit campus conservatives for money and support.

All of which conjures up images of "witch hunts," "Red Scares," "McCarthyism," and "Thought Police" for critics in the academic community, who charge the monitoring practice could have a "chilling effect" on college classrooms.

They cite how the fear of being branded a communist - and losing jobs and grades - during the fifties stifled thought on campuses and, according to some observers, so retarded American scientific thought that it took huge federal spending to restore U.S. primacy in the sixties.

An offshoot of Reed Irvine's Accuracy In Media (AIM) - a group which monitors the media for leftist biases and then conducts publicity and letter-writing campaigns against liberal offenders - AIA was formed to attack what Irvine and others feel is the other great bastion of liberal thought: the college campus.

"The response and need for this service have been overwhelming," Csorba says.

"This organization really has exploded with letters and phone calls - hundreds of them - from students on campuses interested in helping us," he adds. "We now have almost 100 colleges where students are in contact with us about what their professors are saying in class."

The group has targeted the social sciences, he reports, and specifically professors with liberal beliefs "because they have been most guilty of violating (objective teaching) guidelines."

But "any professor - right or left - will be reported and exposed if they are distorting the facts."

Among other things, Csorba says, AIA will complain to school administrators, department chairs, and local community, as well as "printing up student complaints in our national newsletter" when it finds professors who mention facts with which AIA disagrees.

For many academicians, that's a nightmare come true.

"We are growing very concerned about the group and its allegations," says Iris Molotsky, spokesman for the American Association of University Professors (AAUP).

"The presence in classrooms of monitors will inhibit academic freedom. Students will hesitate before presenting controversial ideas and professors may withhold unpopular opinions. We believe the group's claim - that they alone can decide what is correct or incorrect information - is both arrogant and hollow," she says.

BU's Zinn is more to the point.

"This whole thing has a strong element of fascism," he charges. "The Thought Police from 1984 are here. They're just a year late."

"As far as their effect on me," Zinn says, "I don't care. I have tenure. But for untutored faculty it is a real threat, and created an atmosphere of fear in the classroom," counters AIA's Csorba. "The classroom is an open forum, and students have a right to speak out and question their professors. That's all we're doing."

"If (AIA's critics) are really for free speech and academic freedom," he asks, "then why are they against us? These people are the ones engaged in their own forum of thought-policing. We like to think of ourselves as a public service for students."

But the United States Students Association (USSA)

the largest student organization in the country, says the group is more like a "public menace."

"USSA has very strong concerns about the purpose behind a campaign of this type," says spokeswoman Kathy Ozer. "We would not encourage any of our members to get involved with it, especially on the grounds that it is promoting or encouraging student rights."

Critics also question how objectively students, with pre-formed opinions and grades at stake, will review their professors.

"In most cases there is a grade on the line," Csorba admits, "and at some universities the students may be associated with campus groups. But we really don't care if a student has an issue over grades, or whatever. We just want to know what the professor is saying, not settle personal grievances."

"Of course," says Zinn, "why worry about that when the group is way out in right field anyway?"

Pageant Offers Opportunity

The Fledgling staff is sponsoring a Miss Scholarship UNCW pageant on November 16, 1985, at Trask Coliseum. This will be both a program for the student body and an evening of entertainment. The winner of this competition will be a female representative at university events and will receive a scholarship of two-hundred dollars from the Fledgling.

This event is open to any and all registered full-time, female students. Already thirty UNCW students, with many diversified backgrounds, have applied. As contestant Sharon Bounds states, "This event is very unrestrictive as to who may be part of this educational experience."

The Miss Scholarship UNCW Pageant is, on one level, a program to find the person with the best poise, expressionism, and knowledge; a secondary goal is for the pageant to become a source of financial aid for the Fledgling. The funds procured from sales of tickets and contestant sponsorships will be used to defray pageant expenses, and any monies left over will go to the general fund of the Fledgling.

All the contestants will be judged on an interview, casual wear, and evening gown competitions. The interview topics will be chosen by a committee of faculty members. The individual questions will be chosen by the pageant judges. These judges will be professionals who have judged many pageants in

Most Teaching Done Outside Of Speciality

Many college students planning to become primary or secondary school teachers can expect to spend all or part of their time teaching classes they are not certified for, according to a new study.

The study, produced by the American Federation of Teachers (AFT) and the Council for Basic Education (CBE), estimates some 200,000 teachers are teaching at least one class a day they are not properly trained to teach.

"It is not an exaggeration to infer that what some educators call 'out-of-field' teaching is out of control," says CBE director Graham Down.

"It's not a pretty picture. The implications for morale, professionalism, pedagogy, subject knowledge and student learning are dire, to say the least."

The study, released Sept. 24, is based on a state-by-state survey of misassigned teachers.

But because many states do not track misassignments, a precise accounting of the problem is not possible.

Although most states prohibit misassignments, few have reliable ways of preventing them, the report concludes.

Moreover, some 15 states permit misassignments on a limited basis, while six don't restrict the practice, survey found.

The reports' authors reject the widely-held assumption that misassignments invariably occur because of shortages of qualified teachers in certain disciplines.

In fact, they say, many English and humanities classes are taught by teachers certified in other fields, even though there is no shortage of English and humanities instructors.

The authors call on state lawmakers to tighten policies against misassignments, but they blame teachers themselves for some of the problem.

Some teachers, the report says, do not understand the subjects they are certified to teach, and are therefore reluctant to challenge misassignments.

There is one feature of the problem that will help reformers, according to the report:

"It may be the only problem currently plaguing education that schools themselves could correct, alone, quickly, without cost, and probably with dramatic effect."

Male and Female Students To Be Treated Equally

Despite some negative input from a college president last week, Congress seems ready to pass a law forcing most college programs to treat male and female students equally.

The bill, called the Civil Rights Restoration Act, would overrule a 1984 U.S. Supreme Court decision that excused many college departments from having to pledge not to discriminate against women.

But some administrators and apparently some students as well worry the measure would let the federal government "interfere" in campus programs.

"It sounds like a new fear to me," says congressional aide Kris McManiman. "We get students calling up from Baptist colleges asking if (they're) going to have to room with a man."

"We want to protect our independence," Charles MacKenzie, president of Grove City College (Pa.), told Congress in hearings last week. "The government at some point may want to impose their secular values on our campus."

The bill's sponsors say they only want to give college women a legal tool with which to challenge discrimination, which a court -- not the government -- would then treat.

Last week's hearings only continued a debate that began when Congress approved Title IX of the Higher Education Amendments of 1972.

Title IX, of course, bars colleges that take federal money from discriminating on the basis of gender.

Many women's groups say Title IX provided the legal tool to open admissions to certain degree programs to women, gain more resources for female students' scholarship programs, and even funnel money into women's sports teams and facilities.

Several schools -- the University of Richmond, Hillsdale College and Grove City College among them -- have gone to court to escape the law.

They've argued that Title IX should not cover whole colleges, but only the programs that get or use the federal government's money. Grove City asserted the government simply should leave campus programs to campus administrators to run.

"We did not want to accept the principle of federal jurisdiction," MacKenzie told Congress last week.

It was Grove City's legal challenge to the jurisdiction that made it to the Supreme Court last year. The court ruled Title IX applied only to programs that directly got federal money, not to all programs on a campus that took some kind of federal aid.

The court added, however, that campus student aid offices would have to comply with Title IX because they administer federal funds.

Various women's and congressional groups were angered by the ruling.

"It's completely absurd that women can only be protected in specific programs and buildings on a campus," says Kristin Stelck, a lobbyist for the spokeswoman Thomasina Rogers.

Congress, which passed a resolution several years ago advising the courts that it meant Title IX to apply to all campus programs, not just those that directly get federal funds, is now debating a bill that would make the law explicitly apply to all programs.

MacKenzie, for one, thinks the current bill goes too far.

"It could expand the definition of who is a recipient of federal aid," MacKenzie says.

"We are afraid that tax exempt deductions will come under its jurisdiction," he notes.

"The courts ruled several times before Grove City that the government exceeded its authority in regulating," adds Bruce Hafen, president of the American Association of Independent Colleges and Universities.

But William Blakey, an aide to Senator Paul Simon (D-Ill.), argues, "We're only restoring the original jurisdiction, not expanding it."

Some are unconvinced. "Once the nose of the camel is in the tent, the whole camel will come in the tent," says Grove City spokesman Robert Smith.

National Association of University Women.

Stelck says the ruling makes it harder for female students to pursue their rights.

Soon after the ruling, for example, the civil rights office of the Department of Education dropped the case of a student who officially complained she'd been sexually harassed in a Northeastern University economics building, Stelck says.

Forty-four cases alleging campus sex discrimination have been closed, limited or suspended because of Grove City, Stelck claims.

"Enforcement was very difficult before Grove City. We have gone from a critical situation to a crisis," she asserts.

"I don't think things have actually gotten worse" for funding women's sports, says Jane Troxell of Women's Center at the University of Maryland, where charges of Title IX violations have flown.

But Troxell agrees "women have lost clout" in dealing with discrimination because of the Grove City decision.

The Dept. of Education's Office of Civil Rights (OCR), which since 1972 has sponsored most of the legal challenges to on-campus discrimination, now must find out if the program a student complains about directly gets any federal funds.

"Regional offices have had to do a lot of analysis of federal financial assistance received by universities and colleges to determine scope of jurisdiction," says OCR.

COMMENTARY

We, the brothers of Delta Tau Delta, wish to express our deepest concern over the publishing of articles which portray a negative image of all greek systems.

On two previous occasions the Seahawk has published articles pertaining to problems with greek systems on other campuses despite the protests of the greek members of the staff. The most worrisome point of this issue is that neither article has any relation to greek activities on this campus. We do understand that many of the articles printed in the Seahawk come from outside sources, however, if it is not occurring on this campus, the article should state this.

Without such a clarifying statement new students and those unfamiliar with the Inter-Fraternity Council on this campus do not learn the truth, and may in fact develop an undeserved negative image of the greek community.

greek system is in no danger of banishment and is fully recognized and supported by our Administration.

As legitimate organizations on this campus it seems a shame that a possibility of misinterpretation might be perverted, however unintended on our hardworking and growing greek community.

Courses For Small Business Being Offered

Two courses dealing with cash flows and pricing analysis for small business are being offered through UNCW's Office of Special Programs.

"Cash Flow Analysis for Small Business," with instructor Susie E. Sheffield, CPA, will meet Wednesday, October 23 from 7:00-9:00 p.m. in Room 104, Morton Hall. This course explains how to do a short-term cash flow projection with emphasis on the reasons behind cash fluctuations and alternative ways to deal with cash fluctuations. The $15 fee will be discounted if registration occurs before the October 18 deadline.

"Pricing Strategy for Small Business," taught by Earl Honeycutt, will meet Wednesday, October 30 from 7:00-9:00 p.m. in Room 104, Morton Hall. This course will look at pricing from both the marketing and accounting perspectives. The $15 fee will be discounted if registration occurs before the October 25 deadline.

For more information contact the Office of Special Programs between 8:00 a.m.-5:00 p.m., Monday, Wednesday and Friday and 8:00 a.m.-6:00 p.m., Tuesday and Thursday.

Join The SEAmester Experience

Courtesy of College Press Service

For nine weeks each fall and spring--"A SEAmester"--16 students enter a college campus which stretches far beyond the horizon to include the Caribbean Sea and the western North Atlantic. The campus classroom lies on a tall ship into which is stuffed, jammed and squeezed students, faculty, and crew competing for provisions, equipment, books, water, fuel, and the most essential item, good humor. This campus is unlike any other because it continually changes in space and time. One day the campus may be a tropical lagoon, the next day ruins of a sugar mill, later a Carolina mud flat or a wall 100 feet below the surface of the Gulf Stream. You are teleported centuries back in time in the setting of rural Santo Domingo or at the seaport in Mystic.

Concepts and topics which seemed remote, boring, and unclear at the home campus take on a new perspective when studied live in the field. A coral reef becomes an intense experience when after a lecture you dive from the ship to do a field laboratory on the reef front. Fish anatomy can become an unforgettable event as you perform a megadissection on a very, very fresh long 12 foot tiger shark.

History becomes alive as you walk through the palace of Diego Columbus or climb wearily 3000 feet to stand in awe upon King Henri Cristophe's monument, La Citadelle, regarded as the 8th wonder of the world. Traditions of the sea take on far deeper meanings after you feel the ship punch through heavy seas on night watch or reef sail during a heavy blow.

There is a sense of personal development as you gain nautical skills such as the satisfaction and confidence at the increasing ease by which you shoot stars at twilight or fix a position at noon. The wisdom of the old sailors' adage "one hand for the ship, one hand for yourself" you will be very clear the first time you unasily climb up the ratlines.

SEAmester is demanding because in addition to a heavy academic load, you stand your watch and assume increasing responsibilities in the sailing of a full-rigged schooner. You will not leave SEAmester as the same person who came aboard. You will experience great and unexpected adventures which make each SEAmester cruise different and will leave a mark on your life.

If you are interested in knowing more about the SEAmester experience and how student participants complete a full college semester of course work while sailing aboard this traditional classroom, write to:

and others," she says. "It's not inherent discrimination, but it doesn't do much for the sorority image as a whole."

"As times change, so will sororities," Rose says. "There'll be less racism."

Other stereotypes of sororities as social groups already are outmoded, she claims.

While sorority women in the 1950s usually married, sorority members today more often choose careers, Rose explains.

Women use sororities to enhance their careers and to make professional contacts, she adds, much as men have for years.

Medical School Enrollment Declines

The nearly decade-long increase in medical school enrollment may be coming to an end, the latest enrollment figures suggest.

The country's 127 medical schools graduated 16,318 students last year, a slight decline from the 16,343 students who graduated at the end of the 1983-84 school year.

The figures, compiled by the Association of American Medical Colleges (AAMC) and released last week, show medical school enrollment has declined only twice during the past decade.

But substantial increases followed each small decline.

Overall, enrollment has increased by about 20 percent since 1976-77.

The growth has prompted some med school officials to warn there may be too many doctors in the near future.

In March, officials in the Federal Department of Health and Human Services warned medical schools may have to limit enrollments to avoid creating an oversupply of doctors.

The officials predicted that, even if med school enrollments keep falling through the rest of the eighties, there will be about 51,800 more physicians than needed by the end of the century.

Medical school officials, however, have been reluctant to limit enrollments, arguing many rural areas will need doctors even if there's a glut of physicians in other areas.

The AAMC enrollment figures show that about 3,000 of last year's medical school graduates plan to practice in small cities.

The figures also show the average student graduated from med school about $30,000 in debt as a result of relying on student loans, 13 percent more indebtedness than 1984 grads had.

Last year, 11 medical schools graduated more than 200 students each. The University of Illinois had the biggest class of new doctors, 308.

Force.

The university now is debating whether to ban alcohol in Texas's dorms.

Raising the drinking age will drive students from bars and dorms, probably starting "a trend toward private house parties," Hedemann speculates.

"If (students) can't drink in bars and frats," says Ruth Engs, an Indiana University professor who has studied student drinking habits nationwide, "they will find other places. They will drink under a tree."

In general, "I do not expect to see any significant change in the amount students drink," Eng says.

"People who think raising the age will prevent student drinking are fooling themselves," Eng asserts, citing a recent Hobart College (N.Y.) study of the effects of raising the legal drinking age.

"There has been excessive drinking in universities since they were first established in Europe in the 12th century," points out Peter Claydon, head of an alcohol awareness program at Cal-Santa Barbara.

But Eng worries that pushing drinking off campus, as many schools are doing, may do more harm than good.

"If kids can't drink in the old places, I am afraid they might resort to drinking in their cars," she says.

Adds William F. Field, dean of students at Massachusetts-Amherst, which requires guest lists now for large campus parties at which alcohol is served, "the present situation is an undesirable one. In the past, we thought we were being helpful in assisting students to plan and run events in which alcohol was available."

"We had a superb program with the 18-year-olds. We lost a lot of this positive input," Fields adds.

Colleges Exaggerate Athlete Graduates

Colleges are exaggerating the number of athletes they actually graduate, the Government Accounting Office (GAO) says.

Some campus sports supporters fret the GAO report may resuscitate congressional efforts to force colleges to pay closer attention to how well student-athletes are doing in class.

The GAO says studies claiming college athletes graduate at about the same rate as their non-athlete peers are flawed.

The GAO said an American College Testing (ACT) Program study of how many athletes graduate simply compared graduation rates of athletes and non-athletes, but didn't break out how many athletes were on scholarship, says the GAO's Carolyn Boyce.

Another study, this one by Advanced Technology, Inc. and trumpeted by the National Collegiate Athletic Association (NCAA) as proof colleges work hard to educate athletes, statistically compared "apples to oranges," Boyce says.

As a result, they didn't answer questions posed last year by Rep. James Howard (D-N.J.), who wants to stop alumni from deducting from their money donated to colleges that fail to educate their athletes.

"Should we allow money to be deductible for advancing education when athletes don't graduate?" asks Scott Imus, an aide to Howard.

Howard wants to end deductions for donations to schools that don't graduate at least three-quarters of their scholarship athletes within five years of starting school.

Imus says Howard figures that scholarships are supported in varying degrees by tax deductible dollars, but are used to enhance schools' teams with little regard for graduating the athletes.

Boyce also notes the ACT study, which was commissioned by the NCAA to help refute charges colleges exploit athletes, did not break down the data by institution.

The schools with good graduation records for their athletes may have very small or nonexistent programs, she adds.

As a result, the study says little about how effective athletic scholarships are in promoting education.

Only 23 percent of the schools surveyed actually responded to the ACT's questions. Researchers relied mostly on athletic directors' estimates of how many athletes in their programs graduate each year.

"I can't defend the 23 percent rate," says Jim Maxey, who did the ACT's research.

Maxey added that, although the sample was not representative, more than 80 percent of the respondents were from "major athletic schools."

Large schools would tend to have a higher percentage of athletes on scholarship, he says.

The ACT concluded that 52 percent of the athletes ultimately graduate. "This is comparable to the graduation rate of other students," Maxey points out.

Other studies consistently show that 50 to 60 percent of the nation's students graduate.

"We had no evidence of bias (in the study), but there was certainly a potential for bias," Boyce says.

Boyce and the GAO found other faults in both studies, adding the Advance Technology study tried to compare athletes' median graduation rate to the overall graduation rate of all students.

"It's comparing apples to oranges," Boyce explains about the use of two different statistics to draw a conclusion.

"The GAO criticized our study because it did not answer questions that Congress wanted answered," says Linda LeBlanc of Advanced Technology.

"Congress is asking a different set of questions than we originally set out to answer," LeBlanc explains.

NCAA officials did not return calls concerning the GAO report.

Activists Hope To Rekindle Fire

Activists hope to turn up the heat of the student anti-apartheid movement -- which culminated in mass sit-ins and protest marches at dozens of colleges last spring -- again as campuses nationwide participate in a national day of protest on October 11th.

"The day has been conceived as a nationwide day of locally organized protest, with a strong focus on divestment from U.S. companies and banks involved in South Africa," say American Committee On Africa (ACOA) representatives who helped organize last spring's campus protests.

ACOA officials say they have received numerous responses from colleges planning Oct. 11 activities, asserting that "from that time the ACOA and student groups initiated the call for the protest day, the mobilization has become a priority on campuses and cities across the country."

Dozens of colleges -- including Hunter, Columbia, Harvard, Yale, Boston U., Mass-Amherst, Penn State, Cornell, Rutgers, Michigan, and Wayne State -- are planning activities for the one day protest, the ACOA reports.

Actions planned range from sit-ins and protest marches to media blitzes and debates.

Organizers also are calling for a national "minute of silence" at 1 p.m. Eastern time, and encouraging students to wear black armbands in support of South African protestors who have been killed or arrested.

This fall anti-apartheid protests already have occurred at a number of colleges.

Over 1500 Cal-Berkeley students picketed a regents meeting in late August to demand university divestment in companies that do business in South Africa.

Groups of several hundred students also organized similar protests in September at colleges including the State University of New York (SUNY) - Albany, Swarthmore, Penn State, and Cornell.

Apparently feeling the heat from student protestors, the 54-campus SUNY system, along with Arizona State, the University of Arizona, and the University of New Mexico, announced plans over the summer to sell off all South African related stock holdings.

Cornell and Columbia, among others, also are considering similar divestment policies.

Later this fall, the ACOA also plans to hold a National Student Conference on South Africa at New York's Hunter College on Nov. 1-3, officials report.

"You the individual can do more for your own health and well-being than any doctor, any hospital, any drug, any exotic medical advice."

Joseph A. Califano
Former U.S. Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare

If you were one of the estimated 800 students who attended, "Just for the Health of It!" on Wednesday, October 9th - a big THANK YOU is in order.

The weather was perfect, the freebies and t-shirts went fast, the apple juice and granola snack mix was great but your support and enthusiasm was tremendous.

The evaluations you filled out were very positive, and told us what exhibits and activities were the most popular. Your comments will help us know what to include, improve, or have more of next year.

An extra thank you also to those who helped us set up the area, move heavy trenches, and helped out during the day. Our UNCW nursing students were a big hit with everyone - checking blood pressures and offering other valuable assistance.

Eight lucky folks won some great healthy prizes:

Lee King - day at the New Horizon Ropes course with eleven friends.

Swayne Sharpe - 3 month membership at the Crest Fitness Club.

Crystal Galliher - leotard/tights from In Great Shape.

Gina Cox - $10.00 food certificate from Kroger.

Theresa Furman - $25.00 gift certificate from Boseman's Sporting Goods.

Lewis Martin - Thalian Association season tickets.

John Capaldi - canoe trip with Outdoors Unlimited.

Jimmy Jeffreys - Peugeot Pipeline 1 (Cruiser) from Pedalpushers.

Congratulations! To everyone who realizes the benefits and payoffs of living well.

Miss Manners

DEAR MISS MANNERS: Seven years ago, when my husband was 34, he decided to change careers and go to law school. We financed the change by liquidating all our assets and selling our house. I returned to school also and then got pregnant, so when he became a lawyer, we had a ten-month-old daughter and no money.

He is now doing very well, working in Silicon Valley firm. His prospects are excellent, and he enjoys his work. The problem is that the people we meet who are our age are financially established, while we're raising our daughters in a two-bedroom apartment and are still struggling to make ends meet.

It is difficult to reciprocate when we are entertained, although that isn't a barrier to seeing good friends. But I have difficulty with some people I've met, through play groups and preschool, whose children play with mine.

Some people ask me almost everytime we meet when we're going to buy a house, or comment on what a shame it is that we don't live in one. The worst offenders are people who've made money in real estate and behave as if they invented capitalism. They suggest that we don't understand the real estate market and are incapable of acting in our own interests.

At a child's birthday party recently, the host interrupted a conversation about houses to ask if the topic depressed me. Then he turned to the (now silent) guests and said, "Debbie lives in a two-bedroom apartment."

We live as we feel we can afford to live. We have a happy family life, and have nothing but compliments on our two daughters, now 2 and 4. I don't feel they'll be adversely affected by living in an apartment for a few more years, nor do I feel that this should concern anyone else.

At the same party, I mentioned that I planned to return to my journalism career next year. Another mother said, "What? You mean writing for a newspaper?" and wrinkled her nose. "Why don't you go into television? That's where the money is." I said that wasn't what I wanted to do. "Well," she shrugged, "if you're happy...."

I'm sure our problems are aggravated because we live in Silicon Valley, where people have high incomes and indulge in ostentatious displays of wealth. Nevertheless, I'm really tired of such treatment. It would be difficult to stop seeing some of these people, partly because they're friends, but why should I put up with them?

GENTLE READER: Why indeed? If you insist upon considering such people friends, there is a perfectly polite way to show them that they are terribly rude in resuming to teach you how to run your life, and are only succeeding in demonstrating how shallow their values are.

Listen to their remarks, and then, with a wistful smile as if you were admitting to some lack, say,

"Now that you mention it, I suppose a great many people do find that they need a lot of money (or an expensive house) to be happy. I don't know why, but we just never felt it was all that important." That should make them good and ashamed.

DEAR MISS MANNERS: When my ex-husband and I divorced, all the relatives were on his side except a widowed sister-in-law and one brother and his wife. They were the only ones who talked to me or had anything to do with me. My ex and I have talked about getting together again. I told him I would be embarrassed to face those who turned away. He said that I should not be like that, as they were the ones who did the turning away, the reason being that they did not want to hear about our breakup.

Am I wrong about my feelings - am I being silly? Should I be the one to make the first move?

GENTLE READER: Yes. You have some excuse for indulging in and starting over.

It is surely easier to overlook mere family loyalty than something you once considered bad enough to justify a divorce. Why don't you invite them all to a celebration of your renewed happiness and tell them you're glad to have them as family again?

And by the way, aren't you glad now that they did refuse to hear your side of the breakup? Had you reported whatever you then found intolerable in your husband, to his very own family, Miss Manners doubts that you would now have any etiquette problems in connection with a remarriage.

Planning a wedding? If you need Miss Manners' advice on whom to invite, what to wear, who pays for what, etc., send two dollars for her "Weddings for Beginners" pamphlet to: Miss Manners, in care of this newspaper, P.O. Box 2385, Cincinnati, OH 45201.

Feeling incorrect? Address your etiquette questions (in black or blue-black ink on white writing paper) to Miss Manners, in care of this newspaper. The quill shortage prevents Miss Manners from answering questions other than through this column.

SOAP OPERA REVIEW

Didi is blinded in accident on OLTL

By Nancy Johnson

ALL MY CHILDREN: Jeremy remembered that he and his stepmother, Natalie, were once lovers. Brooke missed taking the "pep pills" Bryan had offered her. Adam is recovering from brain surgery.

ANOTHER WORLD: Chris realized that Carl plans to use Nancy to get the ring and pendant from Chris. Donna made a deal to sell Edward's seclusion story to a yellow journalist.

AS THE WORLD TURNS: Craig and Sierra are still on the outs because he kept mum about Daryl's hit-and-run accident. Heather told Douglas that Marie's telling lies about Frannie.

CAPITOL: Jarrett (Baxter) insisted to Thomas that he'll leave town before Clarissa marries Mark. Wally was upset to see Brenda with Dylan. Sloane learned Scotty is Trey's son.

DAYS OF OUR LIVES: Shane, Theo and Alice rescued Bo from the prison cell that Richard had locked him in. Bo refused to leave until he rescued Michelle, who aided in his escape.

GENERAL HOSPITAL: Blood tests proved that Rick fathered Ginny's newborn son. Anna rendered Robert unconscious, then set out to save Frisco's life. Amy argued with her roommate, Bill.

GUIDING LIGHT: Suzette was surprised that Alex actually liked La-jack's music video. Reva spotted a baby's photo that Sally carries in her purse. Suzette is afraid of David.

LOVING: Cecilia threatened to reveal that Steve and Trisha have been meeting in secret. Dolly realized that Jonathan is impersonating Keith. Ava insisted she can't trust anyone.

ONE LIFE TO LIVE: Dorian mistakenly believes Asa's romantically interested in her. Didi was blinded in an accident at Lord-Manning. Asa kept mum about the mystery lady he's courting.

RYAN'S HOPE: Jill assumed the identity of fellow plane traveler, Sarah Jane, during her search for Dakota. Jack realized he's falling in love with Betty. Roger also likes Betty.

SANTA BARBARA: Dylan was surprised to learn that Kelly is Mason's sister. The news that Dylan discovered a gold mine spread like wildfire. Brick learned Glen's not his dad.

SEARCH FOR TOMORROW: Cagney decided to join the local police force. Quinn's doing a TV show about Henderson's 10 most beautiful women. Jo received a telegram from Maria.

THE YOUNG AND THE RESTLESS: Victor continued his investigation into the perfume formula theft. Michael Crawford worked out the details of Jill's divorce case against John.

Seahawk Poll Results

Mona Franklin
Contributor

In our first issue of The Seahawk we ran a questionnaire to illicit student opinions. Now we have checked our reply box and are delighted to find something besides cobwebs and a few obscene notes. Students have taken this opportunity to, in most cases, reply kindly, honestly, and openly to our questionnaire. At this time, we would like to report a condensation of the replies, along with some of the comments and requests we received.

1) More than 90% of those who replied felt campus news was important.

2) Both Stillpoint and Seasquawk received some favorable replies. Bob Haywood's Stillpoint received special praise for its thought-provoking content.

3) Garfield, Peanuts, B.C., Hagar, Doonesbury, For Better for Worse, and Blondie were all mentioned as favorite cartoons. (Check out page 9 to see the new cartoons we have received. These have been on order for a while, and fortunately they were two of students' favorites!)

4) Readers want more world issues, national news and controversial topics in our paper. They also requested more student letters and articles or stories dealing with administration and administrative decisions.

We will try to accommodate this request, but we desperately need writers—if you would like to write such a column or article, please contact us!!

Here are a few comments we received:

•• What do you dislike about The Seahawk? Just about everything. Staff writers. (Well, we're sorry, but our staff writers are doing the best they can, and so are our staff writers!!) It's size—could you make it smaller? (At this point, it would be hard to go back to our original size, but keep reading, you may learn like the new big size) It has not been timely. (We're really working on this complaint, and hopefully we will have the paper out every week on time, starting now!)

•• What do like about The Seahawk? The author's humorous perspective (You have to have a sense of humor to work up here!) That it exists (Thanks! Many people forget that without the paper, there would be no real weekly form of information for the students.)

Thanks to all who responded. If you missed your chance earlier, here is the questionnaire again for you to use (or use a sheet of paper). The Seahawk encourages all students and faculty to comment on our operation; just drop comments or questionnaires in our reply box at the post office.

1. Do you feel campus news is the most vital part of the newspaper? Yes No
2. Do you feel campus news is important? Yes No
3. Do you like the weekly columns (i.e. Seasquawk, Stillpoint)? Yes No
4. If yes, which one(s) is (are) your favorite(s)?
5. If no, which one(s) do you dislike?
6. Do you generally notice ads in the paper? Yes No
7. Which ones catch your eye the most?
8. What do you like best about The Seahawk?
9. What do you dislike about The Seahawk?
10. If you could add something to The Seahawk what would that be?
11. If you could take something away from The Seahawk (besides ads!) what would that be?
12. What are your favorite cartoons?
13. Generally, are you pleased or displeased with your student newspaper, The Seahawk, and why?

the past, such as Miss North Carolina. "The reason for professional judges," according to Fledgling Editor Allen Dudley, "is to insure that the pageant maintains a level of objectionability." The interview will count as fifty percent of the preliminary competition, while the gown and casual wear competitions will each count as twenty-five percent. Jenni Brown, the director of the pageant, explains, "The reason the Miss Scholarship UNCW Pageant will include a gown and casual wear competition is to insure that the contestants are capable of not only expressing themselves in an educated manner verbally, but also to have confidence in themselves in appearance. By studying the contestants character in the apparel competitions, the judges will be able to determine the self-confidence, poise, and dignity of each individual."

The competition will then be reduced to ten contestants. These ladies will again be judged in a gown competition, but this is counted as only twenty-five percent of the final evaluation. The real test for the top ten contestants will be "The Question". In front of a large audience, the contestants will be asked a question concerning campus policies. The contestants will hear the question for the first time when they are asked it on stage; therefore, the contestants must be well-versed on campus policy. The resulting answer from this question will count as seventy-five percent of the final evaluation.

The whole competition will be founded on the idea that the individual. Involvement in clubs, athletics, leadership positions, strong academics, etc., will improve the contestants chances of winning. There are no losers in this competition, since all those entering will be gaining valuable experience. "We are putting ourselves to a test of character," feels contestant Cathy Culp. Anna Gatter explains, "Personally, I am in the pageant for the opportunity to meet people and have some fun!"

Tickets for the pageant will go on sale two weeks before the show and will be on sale in the Fledgling office and Student Union. Tickets will be $2.00 for students and $3.00 for the general public.

Any faculty who would like to suggest a topic for the pageant, or be on the committee, please get in touch with Allen Dudley in the Fledgling office.

STUDENTS MOVE FROM QUALITY INN

LYNN FRANKLIN
EDITOR

Out of the 152 UNCW students staying at the Quality Inn, pending the completion of the new dorm, 94 were moved into the new facility this weekend.

According to Karla Alston, a freshman staying at the make-shift residence, the students have enjoyed themselves but are very ready to leave.

"It's difficult being so far from campus," said Alston. Students staying at the Quality Inn have had to travel back to the campus to eat in the cafeteria or to study in the library. "It's been hard to keep going back and forth since I don't have a car," said Alston.

There were some benefits to staying at the Inn. According to Alston there was more privacy because the students had separate bathrooms. "The housekeepers would clean our rooms once a week and give us fresh towels each day, that was one comfort I know I'll miss," commented Alston.

Last week, prior to the move, some vandalism occurred at the Quality Inn which has been attributed to UNCW students. According to Steve Signorelli, another student from the Inn, "there were holes put into the walls of the stairwell on the second floor, cars in the parking lot were sprayed with fire extinguishers and emergency lights were ripped out of the walls."

There has been some speculation among the students at the Inn about the move being related to the vandalism.

Kathleen Domby, Director of Sales, and James Asher, General Manager, both agree that the damage has had nothing to do with the move.

Gail Young, co-ordinator of the Residence Life Association, agreed. "We had projected this as the moving date several weeks ago and the destruction was not in any way a deciding factor."

Ms. Young also said that the Residence Life Association wanted to have these students on campus as soon as possible to make them feel like true residents.

A positive outcome of the property damage came through the students themselves. According to Ms. Young the students have organized a "community watch" to ensure that a "New Hall '85" is kept in good shape and safe from abuse by outside sources.

The remaining students will be moved from the Inn upon the completion of the Third floor of the new residence hall.

ROOM 100 : RESTRICTED USE

JOSEPH PRESSLEY
MANAGING EDITOR

Room 100 of the University Union is no longer available to campus clubs and group meetings on a regular basis, effective January 1, 1986.

This ruling has created controversy among the clubs and organizations on campus. They feel that the room is no longer available for their use, which is a violation of student rights.

Beverly Cobb, Scheduling Coordinator for the Union, stated "The ruling only prohibits the reservation of the room on a regular basis. Any club or organization can reserve the room when needed." Cobb urges those needing the room to reserve it as soon as they know it is needed first-come-first serve.

Linda Moore, Director of the Union says "Room 100 is a unique activity space and is the only one room campus which can accommodate concerts, lectures, and large group activities, and with reservations on a regular basis cuts into scheduling time for these activities."

The University Union Board recommended this change in policy.

The Board consists of 13 voting members and 4 non-voting members. The voting members are comprised of 3 faculty, 7 students, 2 administrators, and 1 alumni association member, while 4 union staff members make up the non-voting members. The UUB is a committee of the Chancellor and Dr. Rodney Earle is chairman.

Moore also emphasized the need for growth in the union. As the school grows more meetings facilities will be needed, and a Union Expansion Committee has been formed to research the need for expansion. Dr. Roger Lowery is the chairman of this committee.

Room 100 is still available to any club or organization, so reserve it when you need it.

HISTORY PROFESSOR

RECEIVES GRANT

UNCW NEWS BUREAU

Robert Brent Toplin, Professor of history at UNCW, has received a $70,000 grant for the development of a television program dealing with the origins of the Civil War.

The grant from the National Endowment for the Humanities will support the writing of a script about Lincoln's handling of the crisis at Fort Sumter. Ultimately, Toplin plans to produce a 90-minute dramatic program on the subject for national public television (PBS).

The program is the first in a series that Toplin has proposed entitled, Presidents in Crisis. Each film will examine an episode from American history in which a president came under intense pressure to take action and resolve a serious problem facing the nation. In each example, the president reviewed a number of significantly different options, and advisors representing conflicting opinions tried to influence his action. Viewers are encouraged to make their own judgments about the choices available to the presidents. In future programs Toplin hopes to examine Harry Truman's decision to use the Atomic Bomb in World War II and Dwight David Eisenhower's decision to send troops to Arkansas during the school integration crisis.

The current project studies Lincoln's handling on the secession crisis when he assumed the presidency. The nation was coming apart at the seams in early 1861, as separatist leaders were setting up their own government, the Confederate States of America. In these difficult circumstances, Lincoln received much conflicting advice. Some urged extraordinary measures of conciliation to help bring southerners back into the Union.

Others demanded tough resistance to the "treasonous" secessionists. Lincoln had to consider several important questions while trying to decide how to deal with the southern challenge. Above all, as the dialogue in the program will show, the President needed to judge whether a military response to save the Union was worth the bloodshed that would result.

Toplin looks to an ABC television special, The Missiles of October, as a model the kind of program he is attempting to develop. That series used a number of familiar Hollywood actors in a dramatic format that took viewers inside the White House. Focusing especially on the tense cabinet meetings during the days of the Cuban Missile Crisis, The Missiles of October revealed the way national leaders wrestled with difficult moral and diplomatic questions. The situation seemed especially dramatic, because John F. Kennedy had only a short time available to make a decision, since missile-bearing ships were headed for Cuba.

Toplin points out that Lincoln's case offers an interesting parallel. The federal garrison at Fort Sumter was running out of food supplies, and it became clear that the new president must either abandon Sumter or send supplies and reinforcements. Lincoln understood that an attempt to supply Fort Sumter would provoke Confederate cannonfire and, thus, begin the Civil War. Like Kennedy, Lincoln faced a profound national crisis, and the clock continued to tick while he weighed the options.

Communications club grows stronger

The Communications club is still here folks, but this year it is stronger than ever before. Sara Skinner, the president, has a number of new ideas in store for the clubs benefit. To begin it will be having a guest speaker at each meeting from various media oriented working establishments in the Wilmington area. The speakers will extend from employees at North Carolinas movie studio, located on 23rd street, to the people involved with production at local television stations.

The club is open for all students on campus, not just communication majors. It offers the opportunity to be exposed to credited media personnel, and also gives everyone a chance to meet new and different friends outside of daily classes.

The communications majors on campus are considered only to be majors in the division of the Creative Arts Department. They are continually pushing towards the goal of becoming a department of their own. Maybe a strong club could be the key to verifying the interest, will, and strength of the student body and help in the development of eventually becoming their own department.

The club meetings will be held the first week of every month. Be looking for an exact date and time upstairs in Keenan Hall. Dues for new members is $5.00, and $2.50 for renewals. Get involved this year and let's make this the club it is supposed to be.

ALCOHOL AWARENESS OBSERVED

UNCW NEWS BUREAU

The second annual National Collegiate Alcohol Awareness Week was observed at UNCW Oct. 21-27. The purpose of this week is to focus attention on the continuing need for students, faculty and campus administrators to recognize that alcohol is still the drug of choice for most college students. Alcohol continues to be the major factor in behavioral problems and other disruptions which occur on campus during the academic year.

UNCW acknowledged Alcohol Awareness Week by coordinating and sponsoring the following activities:

1) Monday, October 21-27 - A wrecked automobile was placed in front of the University Union as a visual reminder of the hazards of drinking and driving. A sign placed near the car read "Friends Don't Let Friends Drive Drunk."

2) Tuesday, October 22-7:00 - 8:00 pm, room 210, University Union, Dr. Diane McKinstry, director, Student Development Center facilitated a discussion for students on concerns or questions they had about their own drinking or the drinking behavior of others.

3) Wednesday, October 23 - 11:00 am - 1:00 pm, the 2nd annual Alcohol Education Fair, located in front of the University Union. Local agencies, including law enforcement personnel, and others distributed literature and answered questions. WHSL Radio provided music during a live remote from the Union.

4) The Residence Life showed films related to alcohol.

5) The University Program Board showed the BACCHUS film "Choices" before their regular film showings at 7:00 pm October 13 and 27.

6) Saturday, October 26 - 8:00 & 8:30 am, Sigma Delta Psi Fraternity, BACCHUS, and Miller Brewing Company sponsored a "Fun Run." T-Shirts were provided for all participants. Proceeds will go to funding the BACCHUS Chapter.

The one mile Run for Fun is for UNCW students, faculty, and staff and their families. There is an entry fee ($5 by Oct. 21, $7 after Oct. 21) and prizes will be awarded.

ALCOHOL AWARENESS WEEK AS OBSERVED LAST WEEK ON CAMPUS

SEA*SQUAWK

BY DANIELLE WOODS

Hey guys, it's me again. This week instead of just writing an article for you to read and chew on I'm giving you a fresh alternative (No not SUBWAY SUBSHOP).

An article that you can spit back out to me. I'm interested in finding out how you feel about these new censorship laws for pornography and records. My goal is to solicit from YOU your feelings, beliefs, and comments on these restrictions.

First off, do you feel the state has the right to decide whether or not pornographic materials (i.e. magazines, peep shows, videos, and movies) should be seen in public view?

1) Are these petty politicians infringing upon our First Amendment rights and dictating their morals to society?

OR...

2) Are they official crusaders attempting to protect the souls of the populace by extracting the temptation of de-cadence?

3) And should we as the generation growing up under this law be outraged at their self-righteous attitude?

OR...

4) Should we be secure under the wing of their paternal guardianship?

Secondly, do you feel that the government should have the right to rate the albums and album covers of the music market?

1) Are these petit bourgeois with their hypocritical holier-than-thou conception of absolute perfection justified in regulating the music we should listen to in our own home.

OR...

2) Are these concerned idealists attempting to guard the minds of the youth by decreasing the availability of satanic music and the hard-core/sex rock?

3) Should we be prepared for the Elite group to enforce titles like: John Denver (PG 13), Rod Stewart (R), and Billy Idol (X), because of their hell-raising lyrics that influence delinquency?

OR...

4) Should we be glad that someone is officially taking initiative to dispense of harmful stimuli that can make Manson murderers of some of our young?

These are pretty difficult issues with PROs and CONs. But you tell me what you think!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!!

Editorial

Officially, as Editor, this is my first address to you, the students of UNCW. I hope that you are pleased with the Seahawk's new look. The staff and I have worked very hard to bring these changes about; which is the basis for what I feel must be expressed.

I was explicitly aware of the thanklessness of this position before the year began. It has been especially tedious this semester trying to train a staff of primarily new members (with little or no previous experience) on a computer system which I, myself, had little experience with until early August. I was also aware of the difficulty involved in recruiting staff members—as this problem has persisted for several years. Fortunately, there were several students who expressed interest in being a part of this year's staff. At this time there are approximately eight active members. Out of the eight members only two are writers who write for the paper each week, and one of those is a columnist, not a reporter.

It is exceedingly difficult to cover the events of an entire university with one staff writer. There have been several events that have passed without complete coverage due to this situation. It is with regret that some very important and interesting events have been seemingly neglected, however unintended this may have been. As a student as well as a staff member, I would love to see more campus news, however, without your help as fellow students in covering the events, activities, and organizations in which you participate it is impossible for our small, but dedicated, staff to service you in this effort.

Another problem that has arisen quite recently is the over-reaction of campus organizations to commentaries from the community and articles from other campuses across the nation. In either event these publications have no reflection of the attitude of the staff as is indicated in our creed. It is however, not the requirement of the SEAHAWK staff to inhibit opinions of various sources whether they are flattering or unflattering. As for the national articles; they are solely based on actual occurrences at other campuses. If these stories lead the reader to the assumption that such events occur at our university it is strictly the individuals assumption and that is his/her private right.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Dear Editor:

The Faculty Women's Network would like to express its disappointment at the Fledgling's sponsorship of a Miss Scholarship UNCW Pageant. While we do commend the FLEDGLING for attempting to raise money for the yearbook, we believe that a beauty pageant (even one calling itself a "scholarship" pageant) is a violation of the mission and goals of the University.

It is our position that competitions such as pageants perpetuate the image of women as objects and the view of women as valued only for physical appearance. Parading women in front of judges and an audience may be so interpreted. Such pageants serve to degrade women and consequently the organizations that sponsor them. No UNCW affiliate—faculty, student or staff—should have any part in sponsoring this type of activity on our campus.

It is our understanding that at the proposed Miss "Scholarship" UNCW pageant, the contestants will be judged on the criteria of appearance in evening gown and casualwear and on an interview about campus policies. Although knowledge of campus rules is desirable for all students, it is not relevant to the goals of academic achievement. It is ironic that the winner of the title is to be awarded a scholarship although the judging criteria pay no attention to the GPA or scholarly achievement of the contestants.

A further problem is that outside professional pageant judges will select a student to win a scholarship and "represent" our campus. As these judges are the same ones who judge the larger state pageants, we assume they are concerned with selecting a woman whose image best depicts the stereotype of femininity based on beauty and poise, and not with the person who best represents the varied traditions of a public university.

We urge the FLEDGLING to reconsider its future sponsorship of the Miss Scholarship UNCW event, and withdraw it from the University calendar. There are many other alternatives to honor student achievement in academics, athletics, the arts, leadership and community service. We feel that this pageant is an event that reinforces sexist attitudes toward women and is incompatible with the basic values of a University. Certainly the 54% of the UNCW student body that are women deserve to be evaluated here on campus on more important criteria than their poise and appearance in an evening gown.

Sincerely,

Faculty Women's Network

STILLPOINT

BOB HAYWOOD

CAMPUS MINISTER

We are in a time of resurgent patriotism. We live in a great country and the American way of life is just about the best there is.

But, in our love and pride for our country, we must not blind ourselves when our nation is involved on wrong doing. At present we are busily castigating South Africa for its apartheid policies, and justly so. Just as imprudent to me is our national policy of supporting the Contras who are a group of disenfranchised Nicaraguans engaged in terrorist activities in Nicaragua. All that I know personally through my own visit in Nicaragua and all I know from Christian Nicaraguans as well as long term members of Witness For Peace in Nicaragua convinces me that we are pursuing a policy that is evil, destructive and counterproductive.

On June the 9th, 1985 the Contras attacked a peasant cooperative in El Cedro in the North of Nicaragua. It appears that they attacked these people, not because they were near any military installation but because they were working collectively, because they were producing, and because they were receiving government benefits (land, health care, education), all of which gave them hope and disposed them favorably toward the revolutionary process.

There were 71 families living collectively and farming the land. They were so poor they had no vehicle, no tractor, no electricity, and no potable water. Their defense consisted of 75 men and boys over 12 who had volunteered to defend their families and their land. 7 of them were on guard when the attack began at 4:00 am. Eleven people were killed, including a two-year-old child and an unarmed government relief worker. Four people were seriously wounded, two of whom were women. Nine were kidnapped, two of whom have escaped or been let go—a five-year-old child and a 14 year old girl. All buildings were burned down—including the chapel and an evangelical church—and all animals were killed.

The Contras attack civilians and use terrorism and torture as standard operating procedures. This has been documented again by international human rights organizations such as Amnesty International, Americans Watch, and the Interamericas Human Rights Commission of the organization of American States.

A witness visiting El Cedro after the attack spoke with women who had lost a son. Holding back her tears for a moment, she asked, "What good does it do to tell you our stories? Will it stop the aggression?" The young men promise to share the story with the people of the United States in the faith that if Americans heard the truth, they would heed it. If we love our nation, we must love it enough to confront makers of immoral policies with our adamant opposition. Write your Senator or Congressperson today. Urge your representative to support the Boland amendment restrictions in the FY86 Department of Defence Appropriations bill which would prohibit all sources of funds from being used to support directly or indirectly, military material, personnel, training or advice for military or paramilitary operations in Nicaragua. If you are from Wilmington, you can call Charlie Rose's office, 343-4959 and express your opinion by phone.

Speak out, if for no other reason than to refuse to participate in the complicity of silent assent to an evil policy.

CAMPUS REPUBLICAN

As Americans we enjoy all the freedoms associated with living in a democracy while countless millions are bound by the chains of communism.

In the decade of the 70's eight countries succumbed to Marxist-Leninist Rule: Vietnam, Angola, Ethiopia, Cambodia, Mozambique, South Yemen, Nicaragua, and Afghanistan. In six of the countries there are active resistance movements. These brave men and women fighting for the freedom of their nations are the freedom fighters. In each case these freedom fighters are facing Marxist governments and armies funded by the Soviet Union.

*In Angola 40,000 freedom fighters make up UNITA's resistance force which controls one third of the country. UNITA faces not only Angolan forces but Cuban and North Korean forces.

*In Afghanistan the world's largest anti-communist guerrilla war is being fought. The freedom fighters, for five years, have resisted 115,000 Soviet troops along with the Afghanistans regulars. The Soviet force have killed hundreds of thousands of Afghan civilians and driven 6,000,000 people from their homes.

*The fight for freedom closest to home is the plight of the Nicaraguan freedom fighters. In our own hemisphere 20,000 Contras fight the Soviet-Cuban backed puppet government of Daniel Ortega and his band of "murderous Sandanistas".

*Other freedom fighters giving their lives for democracy are in Ethiopia, Mozambique, and Cambodia.

Through my involvement with college Republicans, especially this summer, I met representatives from all these resistance movements. These men are committed to their cause but they need U.S. help. As Americans it is our duty to support these courageous men and women pursuing the democratic dream. The same dream of our forefathers 200 years ago. If you would like to know how you can help support the Contras in Nicaragua, Afghanistan, or Angola just leave a note in the College Republican mailbox in the student union or contact me personally.

HELP US FIGHT FOR DEMOCRACY AROUND THE WORLD.

FALL HOUSING: PLENTY/SCARCE?

COURTESY CPS

For University of Maryland freshman Michael Osman, the beginning of college life last month meant living in a motel.

"It's hard meeting people here," says Osman, one of about 170 classmates who couldn't get space in any of Maryland's overcrowded dorms. "I really haven't had a chance to see the campus yet."

But at the University of Colorado, a condo and apartment glut is forcing landlords to lower rents, pay for utilities and waive students' first month's rent to attract tenants.

"We need our tenants," says Boulder apartment manager Ed Mock, who last spring wrote his tenants a letter saying "We love you. Don't leave us."

The extremes—from overcrowded dorms on one campus to empty student housing on another—are typical of student housing this fall, as the terrible dorm crunches of the early eighties refuse to abate at some schools while they fade into distant memories at others.

As recently as fall, 1983, dorm space was at a premium at hundreds of campuses.

Students opted to live in dorms because of high transportation costs and the expense of most off-campus housing.

Administrators, however, were reluctant to build new dorms to accommodate students because they anticipated a precipitous enrollment decline by mid-decade, about the time they would finish building the new housing.

But the enrollment predicament hasn't quite canned out. The National Center for Education Statistics most recently predicted American college enrollment this year would stay at about last year's record level.

And students' access to dorm space, as a result, depends on how well their particular schools have done in keeping their enrollments up.

A random College Press Service sampling of housing officers nationwide found dorm overcrowding—in which students either are forced to live three of four to a room or must move temporarily into off-campus commercial space—is more common in Sun Belt states, where enrollment is steady or increasing, and less common in the rest of the nation.

However many students do enroll, though, they still seem to prefer living on campus.

"The tide is still turned (toward students living on campus)," says Jim Grimm, past president of the nationwide association of university housing officers and still the University of Florida's housing chief.

"Students are slowly coming back to campus."

Grimm expects the number of students living on campus to increase between three and six percent this year.

But Grimm's successor as president of the Association of College and University Housing Officers (ACUHO) thinks student demand for on-campus housing is down marginally this year.

"The smaller and middle-sized schools in particular have plenty of vacancies," says Washington State University housing director Bill Bierbaum.

Bierbaum says more students are going to college closer to home to cut costs, and that commuter students don't need on-campus housing.

"People are trying to cut costs by retrenching," he says.

Colleges consequently are doing the same thing airlines do when they're not sure they can fill the space they have to sell: they overbook their rooms.

Maryland, for example, still was putting up 70 students in an off-campus motel by the end of October. Kearney State College in Nebraska temporarily shoved about 40 students into small temporary quarters.

"It was not fun," recalls Kearney State sophomore Heather Moats. "Boxes were stacked as high as the middle of the window. Stuff was all over."

Some 200 University of Miami students began the year shut out of dorm space they'd been promised, compared to some 40 students who found themselves in the same fix in fall, 1984.

The University of Illinois had to convert 57 dorm lounges into temporary rooms to house students it couldn't accommodate in regular rooms.

The resultant densities alienate students and provoke unexpected tensions. A disproportionate number of black students jammed into dorm triples at Maryland brought accusations of housing office racism.

The overbooking also has angered some off-campus landlords, who figure they could have rented space to the students now squeezed into lounges and motel rooms if the schools hadn't misled the students into thinking there was dorm space for them.

Owners of the University Plaza apartments in De Kalb, Illinois even sued Northern Illinois University, arguing NIU's dorm overbooking violated federal fair trade laws.

This fall, the school put about 180 students into temporary housing.

In September, a federal judge ruled the university's overbooking policy was legal.

"So long as enrollments don't increase, there will be a greater tendency for private housing interests to say that what universities are doing is cutting into their business," observes western Illinois University's Garry Johnson, a regional ACUHO director.

Bierbaum and Grimm believe there will be more overcrowding in a few more years.

By the end of the decade, they say, college enrollments will begin to increase substantially, once again putting the squeeze on campus dormitories and pushing off-campus rents higher again.

Until then, Bierbaum expects campus housing officials will concentrate on renovation and repair projects.

OPERA HOUSE PRODUCTIONS PRESENTS FASCINATION MAN NOV. 8-10

"FASCINATION MAN" PERFORMED

FORMER AMERICAN U. PRESIDENT VISITS

UNCW NEWS BUREAU

Dr. Harold E. Hoelscher, president of The American University of Beirut from 1977-1981, was on the UNCW campus Monday, Oct. 28, as a guest of the university. He currently holds the position of Distinguished University Professor of Technology and Director, Center for Applied Technology at the University of Houston, Texas.

Hoelscher gave a seminar on the topic "The Impact of Industrialization on South and Southeast Asia" and presented a slide lecture on "The Middle East."

The departments of history and political science sponsored Hoelscher's lectures.

Educated in chemical and engineering, and mathematics, Hoelscher holds the bachelor of science degree from Princeton University and earned the master of science and doctor of philosophy degrees from Washington University, St. Louis, Mo. He taught chemical engineering and

IS THE SEXUAL REVOLUTION OVER?

COURTESY CPS

The sexual revolution seems to have ended on campuses, some experts say.

Iowa State psychology Prof. Meg Gerrard's most recent survey of college sex habits found far fewer "sexually-active" women on campus than there were just a few years ago.

"My research clearly indicates that there is less sex on campus than five years ago," she reports.

While other observers are reluctant to endorse Gerrard's conclusion, they do sense a change in students' sexual practices.

"I don't know if it is statistically reliable to say there has been a drop" in sex, says Clive Davis, a Syracuse University psychology professor who monitors sex research.

"At most, I would say there might be a leveling off," Davis concludes.

Gerrard bases her conclusion on ongoing surveys of college women since 1973.

In her first survey, Gerrard found that about 34 percent of the University of Texas-Austin female students she asked were "sexually active," having sex at least once a month.

In 1978-79, Gerrard expanded her research to include University of Kansas women, too, and found that 51 percent of the women at both schools were sexually active.

"The late seventies were definitely the height of the sexual revolution," she observes.

Now Gerrard has released the results of her latest survey, taken during the 1983-84 school year at Texas, Kansas and Iowa State, found sexual activity seems to have declined.

Some 37 percent of the women responding said they had sex at least once a month.

Gerrard attributes the decrease in sex to the generally more conservative attitudes of students these days.

"They will wait until they're in a relatively committed relationship until they jump into bed," Gerrard adds.

She speculates that fear of sexually transmitted diseases also is contributing to the downswing in campus sex, and that women may be more assertive in saying "no, that they are not ready yet."

But Davis contends there are not enough recent conclusive studies to determine if in fact there has been a decrease of sex on campuses nationwide.

SEMESTER IN SPAIN

Not just for Spanish majors only, but for everyone: beginners, "in between" students, and advanced. Put some excitement into your college career!
BEGINNER OR ADVANCED: Cost is about the same as a semester in U.S. college ($3,480). Price includes jet round trip to Seville from New York, room, board, and tuition complete. Government grants and loans may be applied towards our programs.

Live with a Spanish family, attend classes four hours a day, four days a week, four months. Earn 18 hrs. of credit (equivalent to 4 semesters taught in U.S. colleges over a two year time span). Your Spanish studies will be enhanced by opportunities not available in a U.S. classroom. Standardized tests show our students' language skills superior to students completing two year programs in U.S. Advanced courses also.

Hurry, it takes a lot of time to make all arrangements.

NEW CONFERENCE HOPES TO FIND IDENTITY

UNCW EXPECTED TO IMPROVE IN CAA

DEAN BUCHAN
SPORTS EDITOR

Last year the eight teams in the ECAC South did everything possible--on and off the court--to gain some recognition and respect.

On June 6 the ECAC South was dissolved (at least the name) and is now called the Colonial Athletic Association. The move was made to gain some identity for this eight-team league, getting out of the ECAC umbrella which contained over 250 teams.

Also, George Mason built a $17 million, 10,400 seat basketball arena that will be used this winter. Patrick Ewing launched his professional career there in early October.

On the court, Navy, the league's tournament champion ripped LSU 78-55 in the opening round of the NCAA playoffs, then had Lefty Driesell's Maryland Terrapins up 11 in the second half before losing in the final minutes. Navy's solid NCAA Tournament performance last year was not the league's first cinderella-type team. James Madison and Richmond had performed similarly in the three previous years.

Just maybe all that hard work is paying off.

Navy is ranked 13th nationally according to the Sporting News, pre-season, and George Mason, according to the same publication, may do even better in the CAA. Meanwhile, Richmond and James Madison will try to hold off UNC-W and William and Mary for upper division finishes.

So what could the 1985-86 season hold in store for the CAA?

* More post-season tournament berths--with Navy's strong performance last year it's possible two or three CAA teams could go to the NCAA Tournament. Last year only Navy went, while Richmond went to the National Invitational Tournament.

* More exposure--though the CAA is surrounded by basketball-rich conferences like the Big East, ACC, and Sun Belt, Home team Sports will carry 20 regular season games, and ESPN will televise the semi-finals and finals of the league basketball tournament at George Mason.

* More Stars--there are some legitimate All-American candidates this year in Navy's David Robinson and Vernon Butler, Richmond's John Newman, UNCW's own Brian Rowsom, and others. Last Year only two players were taken in the NBA draft--Richmond's Kelvin Johnson and William and Mary's Keith Ceplicki, who was the next-to-last player chosen in the entire draft. Both were cut.

Navy is the team to beat in the CAA. David Robinson, the midshipmen's 6-foot-11 center, leads a list of returnees, including last year's starting five and top three subs. Throw in Navy's best recruiting year in a while and you've got a top twenty team.

The Midshipmen led the nation in field goal percentage last year, won 26 games, tied for the CAA regular season title, knocked off LSU in the NCAA Tournament, and coach Paul Evans was named Coach of the Year.

George Mason is given the best shot of the remaining seven teams to catch Navy. The Patriots moved from their 3,000 seat gym to one of the finest on-campus facilities around.

What's more exciting to coach Pat Harrington is that four starters are back, including three double figure scorers--Rob Rose, Ricky Wilson and Brian Miller--along with three fine JC transfers, and Kenny Sanders, a transfer from Oklahoma.

Richmond did not repeat as conference champs last year but the Spiders did win 20 games (21-11) and played in the NIT. Back is scoring machine John Newman (21.3 ppg), point guard Greg Beckwith, Rookie of the year last season Peter Woolfolk, and strong John Davis at forward.

UNC-W was picked to finish sixth last year and that's where it finished. This year is more of a mystery, being picked as high as fourth and as low as sixth again. Back is Rowsom (18 ppg) and point guard Bobby Jo Springer, along with guard Mark Gary and rebounder Charles Cherry. However, the success of the Seahawks could depend on six newcomers, including 6-7 power forward Ben Pittman, a JC transfer.

Only one starter--Scott Covall--returns at William and Mary this season. coach Barry Parkhill will be hard-pressed to reach the .500 mark this season, but should still compete for a spot in the upper division of the CAA.

That upper-division finish will mean more this year with first-round league tournament games being played on the home floors of the top four teams.

James Madison is the only team with a new coach--John Thurston, and the Dukes may be even better than last year. 11 of 13 players return, and JMU had its best recruiting season ever last year.

All five starters at East Carolina would be back but Roy Smith transferred to High Point College. The Pirates, who are 11-45 over the last two years, are led by scoring ace Curt Vanderhorst of Fayetteville.

The good news at American is that just about everybody is back. The bad news is just about everybody is back. The Eagles struggled to a 9-19 year and finished seventh in the league. American, however, will be better, sporting a very solid backcourt.

While the eight members of the CAA battle for position, the CAA battles for recognition and respect.

All eight teams have a schedule this year in which they can make a name for themselves and for the CAA.

Navy opens the season playing in the first annual Big Apple NIT in November. The Midshipmen will also travel to Japan to play Air Force and Army in the Suntory Ball, then return home with a possible match-up with Georgia Tech in the Cotton States Classic. Georgia Tec is just about everybody's pre-season pick for number one.

George Mason plays early dates with Maryland and Georgetown, while Richmond will take on Wake Forest and Old Dominion. UNCW's Seahawks play in invitational tournaments at Virginia and Tennessee, William and Mary plays Duke, Maryland, Georgia, and ODU. James Madison plays locals VPI and ODU. American takes on cross-district rival Georgetown, and East Carolina plays Kentucky in Rupp Arena.

Good times mean getting together with good buddies and Budweiser. There's something about a couple of beers with friends that makes for great camaraderie.

Beer is meant to be enjoyed by adults socially. It is also the beverage of MODERATION. Good judgment should be used whenever you drink.

Make sure "your drinking buddies are thinking buddies" and exercise good judgment. Especially if they drive! When they need a good friend... think for them! Don't let them get behind the wheel -- the outcome could be disastrous.

FORENSICS TRAVEL TO WASHINGTON

Travis Parker

The UNCW Forensics Team began its 1985-1986 season at the Metropolitan Washington Communication Association tournament Oct. 11-13 at George Mason University in Washington, D.C. With a combined total of 34 different events, twelve of the UNCW Team members nervously entered their first competition of the season. This was the first Forensics Tournament ever for six new UNCW students: Doug Barnes, Donna Calleson, Douglas Hargett, Bill Hogan, Debbie Martin, and Mary Melvin. Each of these new members proved to be a great asset to the Team's success. Two of them received special recognition as Top Novices, Martin in Persuasive Speaking and Melvin in Informative Speaking.

Senior Team members Mitch Butts and Rick Olsen took first place in Dramatic Duo Interpretation with the play, "The Constituent", in which two old crumdegeons argue political disagreements. Butts also won second place in Impromptu Speaking, and third in Prose Interpretation. Olsen also received third place in Rhetorical Criticism.

The new season is beginning as a big success: the UNCW Team is continuing the tradition began last year when they were ranked 17th in the United States. Over Halloween weekend the Team travels to Appalachian State University in Boone.

predicted enrollment drops at recently as three to four years ago, and are now surprised by student body increases.

"It was so well anticipated that we worked doubly hard to avoid it," says Claire Swann, admissions director at Georgia, where the "baby bust" age group of incoming freshmen has grown by 19 percent.

"We also expected a drastic drop in enrollment. Gail Latouf of the American Association of State Colleges and Universities says most associations have been somewhat straddled by not getting the dip we expected."

Older students have made the difference, says Bob Aaron with the National Association of State Universities and Land-Grant Colleges.

"People are going back for extremely pragmatic reasons: career oriented decisions," Aaron observes. "Many people in high tech are coming back for retraining."

He adds the increasing attractiveness of changing careers in later life and the ever-rising participation of women in the workforce also have prompted more "older" people to enroll.

However, college administrators shouldn't jump for joy just yet.

While there are now about 15 percent more "older" students in college than in 1979, the 22-to-34-year-olds are also a much bigger percentage of the total population than they used to be, Michael O'Keefe writes in a recent change magazine article.

As a result, colleges really have tempted only 2.6 percent more of the "nontraditional" student age group to register, a less-than-spectacular increase, O'Keefe says.

But demographers say a new group of students -- children born in the mid-seventies to the early eighties to the World War II baby boom generation -- will start enrolling in college in a few years.

Some administrators don't believe projections indicating an enrollment decline anymore.

While the NCES's latest forecast predicts junior and community colleges will lose 200,000 students by 1993, for example, Jim Mahoney of the American Association of Community and Junior Colleges won't listen.

"We did not participate in the doomsday conversation because of the age of our students," Mahoney says.

The average community college student is 29 years old, he notes.

Enrollment at community colleges is about 4.7 million, and Mahoney expects it to be stable into the nineties, when there might be a slight increase.

people deduced that higher education would lose enrollment, provided the same demographic mix as we had in the early sixties," says Elaine El-Khawass, research director at the American Council of Education.

Administrators have avoided the big drop by recruiting huge numbers of "non-traditional students," people older than 24 who may attend school part time.

"It's such a wide age group (non-traditional students). It's hard to work out a meaningful relationship between an age group that large and college attendance," asserts Vance Grant, the NCES's chief statistician.

In 1980, the center projected total college enrollment would fall to a little more than 11 million students by 1988.

The center now estimates that as of the current semester, enrollment declined by less than 25,000 from the all-time of 12.5 million in 1983.

The NCES wasn't the only agency to predict more precipitous declines. Officials at the universities of New Mexico, Georgia and Kansas, among many others,

ENROLLMENT DECREASES COURTESY CPS

There will be about 575,000 fewer students enrolled in college by 1993, the National Center for Education Statistics predicted last week.

In its most recent long-range enrollment forecast, the NCES projected enrollment nationwide would fall from the current estimated 12.25 million students to 11.676 million students nationwide over the next eight years.

While the decline would leave a number of colleges--especially smaller four-year private colleges--gasping for students and survival, it is a much less severe enrollment drop than the NCES has predicted in the past.

Starting in the mid-seventies, the NCES and other agencies predicted precipitous enrollment plunges for 1980, 1981, 1983 and then 1988.

Experts foresaw as many as 200 colleges closing up during the eighties.

The doomsday predictions stemmed from a marked decline of in the number of 18-year-olds in the U.S. from 1979 to 1992.

Colleges, of course, had always recruited most of their new students from that age category. "From that,

WILEY AWARDED GRANT

UNCW NEWS BUREAU

Dr. Joan D. Willey, as - sociate professor in the Department of Chemical and Physical Sciences and the Marine Science Program at UNCW, has been awarded a grant of $29,800 to continue studies of rainwater composition in coastal North Carolina. The grant comes from the National Foundation Research in Undergraduate Institutions Program.

The proposal was reviewed by the Atmospheric Chemistry Division of NSF. The grant will be used to purchase automatic rainwater sampling devices and an ion chromatography, which is an instrument that can analyze components in aqueous solution.

Willey's previous research had indicated the occasional occurrence of acid rain in the Wilmington area.

Miss Manners

DEAR MISS MANNERS: I am a female college student, recently hired as a limousine driver. I am familiar with the courtesies that male drivers extend to passengers, such as assisting a bride by the hand, or merely shaking hands with a gentleman.

However, should I assist ladies? If so, how? Should I assist gentlemen? Is it proper for a lady to shake hands with either ladies or gentlemen? In these times of supposed equality, proper formal etiquette is terribly confusing.

GENTLE READER: People are not supposed to notice the gender of their limousine drivers. This has never actually been true, and Miss Manners is aware of the history of the scandal between rich ladies and their chauffeurs, but she believes that the effort should be made.

It would certainly work to your advantage to think of yourself on the job as a driver whose gender during working hours is irrelevant, because you are filling what used to be considered a man's job.

If you neglect its traditional functions, such as opening doors for all passengers, and assisting ladies to alight, you will fuel prejudice against women filling this job.

Miss Manners strongly supports job equality for men and women. However, attempting to demonstrate on-the-job equality between employer and employee works to the advantage of neither.

Scandalous doings aside, faking friendship between drivers and passengers lowers the dignity of the employee, who should be offering for sale only his and her professional services, not social ones; and it is a nuisance and intrusion on what ever social life may be conducted in the back seat. There is therefore no reason for any driver, male or female, to be shaking hands with the passengers.

DEAR MISS MANNERS: In an attempt to impress the various dignitaries of local "society," and thereby to gain access to their circle, a lady of my acquaintance invited them all to a splendid formal dinner party.

Her setting was superb, the lighting delicate, the wine coordinated perfectly. Everything was moving briskly along, according to the stiffest standards, from the aperitif right up to the entree.

It was at that moment, with all her guests eagerly anticipating the main dish, that the hostess suddenly realized that cooking a main course had somehow, in the heat of all other preparation, slipped her mind.

Dinner ended with the appetizers. There was no entree.

Time and distance render us callous. When I heard later about her fiasco, although I knew I should have kept a straight and, if possible, sorrowful face in the presence of such suffering, I confess to bursting out in uproarious laughter.

Never mind the on my rudeness. Karma being what they are, my heartless mirth has undoubtedly assured that I, at some future time, will be forced to re-enact the scene. And with each succeeding guffaw, it becomes increasingly likely that I shall have to do so as the hostess.

It is against this impending comic retribution that I am wondering if you might tell me just what, in the face of a dinnerless dinner party, is the appropriate behavior of (a) the guests and (b) the hosts.

P.S. Use my name, and you, too, shall sustain karmic penalties.

GENTLE READER: Don't threaten Miss Manners. She doesn't take to it well. However, she does appreciate being amused. Without knowing how eventful social life is in the circles you describe, she can tell you that this incident would have enlivened any society she frequents.

Do not worry about having laughed at it; laughter is the essential ingredient of social disaster. The hostess should have led the laughter, and it would have been extremely rude of her guests not to join in. There is nothing more embarrassing than having people treat you as if they were not greatly surprised when you did something spectacularly awful.

Should this happen at your table, let out an exclamation of some sort (the kind that mean shock, not anger) to get the attention of everyone. Then say:

"You'll never believe what's happened. I spent so much time trying to make everything perfect and working on an appetizer (murmurs from guests: 'It's delicious') that I forgot to make a main course. Good grief! There's nothing for dinner!"

"Wait! Everybody have some more wine, and I'll go scramble some eggs" or "send out for something" or "make a restaurant reservation."

By this time, the hostess should be doubled up in laughter, and the guests, reassured that they will not starve, should join in with merriment and offers of help in the kitchen or emergency measures.

Their final obligation is to assure the hostess, when they leave, that the improvised evening turned out to be more delightful than any uneventful one could have been.

Judith Martin's "Miss Manners' Guide to Rearing Perfect Children" (Anthem) is now available for etiquette emergency consultation.

Feeling incorrect? Address your etiquette questions (in black or blue-black ink on white writing paper) to Miss Manners, in care of this newspaper. The quill short-gram prevents Miss Manners from answering questions other than through this column.

COMMENTARY

STUDENT GROUPS MOVE TO RESTRICT THE PRESS

Finally, there's an organization with our best interests in mind! Someone out there decided it was about time to take a good look at what is being taught in college classrooms around the country. I'm referring to AIA, Accuracy in Academia, as mentioned in the October 21 issue of the Seahawk.

Monitors in the classrooms are just exactly what America needs! We are facing the results of many long years of unchecked, unpatriotic propagation of notions that go against what it is to be an American. I think it is a fantastic idea to compile a list of professors who teach things as true which go against what we, as good Americans, believe.

As students, we should all act on behalf of this Organization by questioning what our teachers tell us, and further when we hear the sort of teachings that question the legitimacy of our government and its policies, we should make it known to all who it is that is spreading this misinformation.

Some argue that monitoring is a subtle form of censorship, making it more difficult for opinions to be expressed. If the opinion is a correct one then there is nothing to fear! And for those who are found on the "list", they could be instructed and their errors corrected. In all, the system would be purged of error.

It is our duty to protect the great country we all love. It is about time we stood up. It might be even a good idea to promote programs like this in high schools and elementary schools where children are most susceptible to ravages of liberal teachings. Many parents would stand to benefit by knowing just who is teaching their children.

Parents, too should be monitored. For it is with the parent that the child learns the most of his or her national heritage and pride therein. A monitoring program would be good for all, not just the college professor. After all, only a fraction of Americans go to college. In every sphere of influence, we should cautiously eye those who claim to teach!

Even in Church we find the effects of communism trying to undermine the American way of life, like a bear in eagle's clothing. Many teach from the pulpit that we are to love our brothers, that we should give up our worldly belongings and work for the common good of the world without benefit of payment. Many preach that all men are equal.

Bravo to those who initiated this monitoring program to serve as the nation's watchdog. My admiration goes out to all of you who join together in groups to see to it that America is fit to be free in the future. After all, the truth is what you want it to be, and freedom is not having to know the difference.

Student groups at two schools are moving to impose tighter restrictions on their campus papers, largely in response to normal operating procedures.

While student papers in the past have lurched into trouble on many campuses for publishing deliberately provocative material, newspapers at Notre Dame and North Carolina-Chapel Hill recently have attracted controversy while following normal operating procedures.

Student politicians at Notre Dame got angry when The Observer raised its advertising rates, and some UNC students were enraged when The Daily Tar Heel printed, amid other quotes, Friedrich Nietzsche's assertion that "God is dead."

At UNC, dissidents sought to strip the paper of student fee funding.

"It gave me somewhat of a jolt that someone would cut off the student voice," recalls Anne Rickert, The Tar Heel's co-editor.

Rickert says the student religious group's attempt to end mandatory student fee funding for the paper is "ironic. They would cut off the paper that has covered them."

Notre Dame student President Bill Helay says he only wants The Observer to open its books to the public.

"We think the books should be open," Healy says. "We spend about $100,000 of the students' money on The Observer. It's only fair."

The Observer irritated student government leaders when it raised its ad rates earlier this fall. The student government spends about $10,000 a year in advertising in the paper. Critics wondered if the increase was necessary.

But editor Sarah Hamilton refused to open the paper's books to the politicians, reasoning it could set a precedent for later exerting editorial control over the paper.

"I don't want them to determine editorial policy," Hamilton says.

She adds "we are already accountable to the students through the administration."

Nevertheless, about 80 percent of the students surveyed by the student government think the paper should open its books.

Healy also found that, of nearby papers with ad rates comparable to The Observers, six of seven did not get any student funds.

The campus judicial council, however, last week ruled the student senate resolutions to see The Observer's records essentially are toothless.

Rickert, moreover, says the controversy at North Carolina has faded away.

Some observers dismiss the controversies.

"I don't think student governments want to control the daily operations of the papers," says Tom Rolnicki of the Association of Collegiate Press, a group of college newspaper advisors based at the University of Minnesota.

Rolnicki says the conflicts between campus papers and student groups are "not going to change unless student governments become more knowledgeable or student papers become independent."

PHI ETA SIGMA INDUCTION

UNCW NEWS BUREAU

Twenty-one sophomores at UNCW were inducted into Phi Eta Sigma National Honor Society Saturday, Oct. 5, in ceremonies at the board room of Alderman Hall on the UNCW campus. Dr. James D. Johnson, assistant professor of psychology, was inducted as an honorary member.

Dr. Lee Johnson, faculty advisor of Phi Eta Sigma stated, "To qualify for membership in Phi Eta Sigma, students must complete their freshman year with a cumulative grade point average of at least 3.5 and make no grade lower than a C while taking a full course load."

Student inductees were:

Patti Lyn Krizowski, of Newton, N.J.
Matthew Allan Apke, of Wilmington, N.C.
Katherine Hope Arthur, of New Bern, N.C.

Are you a healthy drinker? What does wellness have to do with alcohol? PLENTY.

This past week, UNCW supported National Collegiate Alcohol Awareness Week! Numerous events were held all week to encourage responsible alcohol use, and many students took part.

We all know someone who chooses to drink and never or rarely has any alcohol related problems. Studies and research in the past few years have shown that these people often have the following characteristics.

Healthy Drinkers:

*know their family alcohol history (children of alcoholics are twice as likely to develop an alcohol problem as children of non-alcoholics)

* recognize alcohol as a drug (one that can result in illness, addiction or early death)

* abstain periodically from alcohol use (the healthy drinker knows when and how to abstain from use altogether)

* drink with acceptable social rituals

* drink for positive reasons (to celebrate, share, communicate, not to relieve pain, forget problems, or overcome fears)

These characteristics are essential to alcohol wellness. No one is telling you to drink or not to drink, but if you choose to, please be a healthy drinker.

Be well

PRESIDENTS CORNER---PAUL BELL

Greetings Seahawks:

I hope everyone enjoyed their "Fall PUASE". I spent mine in Charlotte, N.C. at UNCC attending the University of North Carolina Association of Student Governments (UNCASG) meeting. As President, I represent UNCW Students on the Board of Directors of the State Association, along with the other SGA Presidents from the sixteen UNC Universities.

Among the various common problems we discussed were parking, administration, and student apathy; we as an association discuss and form an official opinion on behalf of the 100,000 or so UNC students and convey that opinion to the State and National Legislators and the University Board of Governors and advise a plan of action; much like a lobby group.

At this last meeting UNC-ASG spent hours discussing three subjects; the first being Financial Aid. The question or problem was the complexity of forms and delay in receiving loans and grant money well into the semester.

The second was the current discussion of Proposition 48 which determines admissions requirements for freshmen who will play varsity sports and how this affects our students.

The third topic was the problem university students have trying to register to vote in the county or city they live in while in school. The general feeling is that if you live and work in a community nine months of the year, you have the right to vote. The laws are open to interpretation as to when a person is a "legal resident" and for what purposes. As it stands now, anyone living in a dwelling for thirty days and can prove it, such as drivers license, (which by law has to be changed if you plan to be at an address more than thirty days) may register to vote there.

Many of you can remember the problems encountered when students tried to register to vote during the presidential campaign and Blue Law Referendum at the New Hanover County Elections Board. Wilmington and other cities like Boone, Raleigh, Charlotte, and Greenville, are afraid of the collective voted of its university residents. All of these places have practiced intimidating red tape, unlawful and unconstitutional registration policies.

If I seem agitated, it's because I am; and I hope you are also. If anyone is willing to testify or swear by affidavits they were denied their right to register, please see me. The UNCASG members are collecting this information and taking it to the State Attorney General's office in November. We are determined to straighten out this problem soon. UNCW students are directly affected by Wilmington's City Council and should be allowed to express our opinion in the polls even if you live in a Residence Hall. If you are concerned, please get in touch with me in the SGA office.

The last thing the Association discussed was gathering more information about our respective University's investments in South Africa. Generally, the UNC-ASG members condemn apartheid. We are gathering information so we may make an official comment to President Reagan concerning apartheid and our University concerning the separatist practice. We hope our generation can make a difference and affect South Africa's government and show them our own country's mistakes so they can learn and not make their own so severe. I welcome your input concerning this atrocity.

In closing, I want to introduce to you the PGA Association members. They are: Angela Godwin, Debbie Weekly, Shannon Crake, and Kelly Todd. These students are working as an executive board on various projects of Student Government. Anyone interested in joining should come to our meeting Tuesday nights at 7:00 p.m. in the Student Government office, Suite 200 of the University Union.

Until next time,

Paul W. Bell
Your President

Harper will outline some guidelines for managers in a one-day course, "Performance Review" to be offered through UNCW's Office of Special Programs on Tuesday, November 12 from 7:00-9:30 p.m. in Room 210, Morton Hall. "Most managers do not have the skills and training to conduct reviews," he continued. "In this course, we will concentrate on laying a good foundation of techniques to help them in the future." Topics will include 1) ways to measure performance, 2) setting performance levels, 3) how to conduct an evaluation session and 4) developing improvement programs.

Fee for the course is $25. If registration occurs prior to the November 8 registration deadline, the fee will be discounted to $22.

In the course, "Effective Delegation", to be offered Tuesday, November 19 by UNCW's Office of Special Programs, Dr. Stephen Harper will also offer managers various tips on how to delegate decisions not just work. Harper believes that decision making is the most important aspect of delegation that managers overlook. "You must transfer the right to make decisions and know when to do it," Harper explained, "to be an effective manager." In his course, Harper will teach managers how to structure in advance to avoid pitfalls. "Delegation is a developmental device," he said, "that acts as a training program and gives employees experience in the managing art."

The course will run from 7:00-9:30 p.m. in Room 216, Bear Hall. The $25 fee will be discounted if registration occurs before the November 15 deadline.

For more information, contact the Office of Special Programs at 395-3193 between 8:00 a.m.- 5:00 p.m., Monday, Wednesday and Friday and 8:00 a.m.- 6:00 p.m., Tuesday and Thursday.

"Rat Fink" Anger

"Students at Amherst College are protesting a new set of parietal rules, including a so-called 'rat fink' clause which makes all residents in each dormitory responsible for reporting violations of the social code," College Press Service reported on October 5, 1965.

To protest, about 100 students refused to hand in signed honor code cards to the school registrar.

The students also wanted to extend the time by which women were required to leave men's dorms each night.

20 Years Ago...

Overconfidence

"The demonstrations that rocked Berkeley last year won't happen again, President Clark Kerr of the University of California believes," College Press Service reported on October 7, 1965.

The Berkeley Free Speech Movement, now seen as the first stirrings of a decade of student unrest, concerned students' exercise of constitutional rights and their efforts to bring their needs to the university's attention.

"There is no question that the undergraduate has been neglected," Kerr pointed out, but he said reforms in the campus governance and a new attention to students would preclude future unrest.

20 Years Ago...

Campus Communists

"The University of North Carolina is facing academic censure and possible loss of accreditation because of the state's so-called anti-Communist speaker ban law," College Press Service reported on October 19, 1965.

The law held state college officials criminally liable if they let speak on campus communists, people who advocate the overthrow of the American or North Carolina governments, or anyone who has cited the Fifth Amendment guarantee against self-incrimination while answering questions about "subversive" activities.

The Southern Association of Schools and Colleges threatened to censure schools that conspired to limit the free speech of students, faculty members, administrators or speakers.

UNC President William Friday agreed, blasting the law as "un-American."

20 Years Ago...

Preoccupied With Unrest

Virtually all the sessions of the American Council on Education's conference on "The Student in Higher Education" ended with predictions of more student unrest to come, College Press Service reported on October 11, 1965.

vice reported on October 11, 1965.

"Genuine student involvement in the formation of educational policy offers our best hope of regaining the lost concept of an academic community," Edward D. Eddy of Chatham College in Pittsburgh asserted.

Other speakers called for student participation in evaluating teachers and grading, but Yale President Kingman Jr. lamented "too many a-mong our students of high promise squander their talent for the cheaper and transient satisfaction of throwing himself on some immediate bar-ricade in the name of 'involvement.'"

20 Years Ago...

So Long Sororities

"A University of California sociologist says that sororities, long influential in manipulating the campus social order, now face extinction," College Press Service reported on October 13, 1965.

Cal-Davis Prof. John F. Scott said colleges, anxious to fill the big new dorms they were building, wouldn't be "as hospitable to greeks, who draw students into private housing, as they used to be."

"But the worst blow to the sorority system is the increased academic pressure college men, who no longer have time for the for courtship that made sorority so exciting," he explained

SEAHAWK EXPRESS DEDICATED

JOSEPH PRESSLEY

On Wednesday, October 30, the Seahawk Express was officially dedicated on the north steps of the University Union. Approximately fifty students, administrators, and faculty braved the wet conditions to attend the dedication.

The Seahawk Express is a shuttle van devised for the protection of students on campus at night. Its route includes the dorms, Randall Library, and the computer clusters around campus.

A number of dignitaries attended the event. Paul Bell, Student Government President, gave the opening address. He stressed the importance of the Express and noted that this is a prime example of what could be accomplished if the students, administration, and community worked together.

Dr. Bryan, Vice-Chancellor of Student Affairs, was pleased with this project. He favors any safety programs and stressed safety on campus as everyone's responsibility. He stated that any student, faculty member, or administrator who discovers a hazardous sidewalk, a street light out, or just an unsafe area, as their responsibility to inform the proper authorities on campus or their complaint.

THE SEAHAWK EXPRESS VAN, WHICH WAS DONATED BY DON KIMBALL CHEVROLET, WAS OFFICIALLY DEDICATED ON OCTOBER 30.

The Chancellor was unable to attend, but Dr. Bair, Assistant to the Chancellor, attended and spoke on his behalf. He was pleased with this project and gave a "Big Thank-You" to all responsible in making this possible.

Don Kimball was happy to be a part of the project and said his General Manager actually did all the work. He was presented a Seahawk shirt and History of the University by Paul Bell.

The Express is run by the Shuttle Bus Task Force, headed by Ken Gilbert. Gas is supplied by the SGA, insurance by the administration, and the eight passenger van by Don Kimball Chevrolet. Drivers are supplied by various organizations on campus on a volunteer basis.

The hours are: Sunday through Thursday 6:00 pm to midnight; Friday from 6:00 pm to 9:00 pm. Scheduled stops:

CRITICAL FINANCIAL AID NOTICE

NDSL Borrowers- All National Direct Student Loan borrowers are required to have a signed promissory note for the spring semester on file by November 13. It is the student's responsibility to make sure that all financial aid forms are completed. Students without promissory notes on file will not receive credit for any of their financial aid on their spring bills.

SGSL Borrowers- All Guaranteed Student Loan checks will be deposited to the student's account for the spring semester. This is a change from fall semester procedure, in the fall students were allowed to pick up their loan checks if their accounts were clear. Spring semester students will have their accounts credited for a loan when the check arrives, a refund will then be generated and students will endorse the loan check when they pick up the refund. All

SGSL checks that are received directly by the student should be processed through the Financial Aid Office and follow the same procedure as checks that are mailed directly to our office. Again, all SGSL checks should be endorsed and deposited to the student's account for the spring semester.

what can create a climate for sexual aggression. The male sex-role of having to be the aggressor also lends to this. During an interview at the University of Connecticut by MS Magazine, a male student had this comment to make, "I get told no and I keep going, no one complains afterward." Communication is another problem. If a girl means yes, she should say yes, if she means no she should say no. One can always expect mixed messages to be interpreted wrong. For example: If a girl says, "No, stop, I'm not sure I'm ready for this now," the guy really doesn't know what she is saying. And finally, alcohol and drug use is often often connected with incidents of acquaintance rape.

Now that you know the fact on rape, here are some prevention tactics you may find useful:

- When walking, show confidence and aggression.
- Know what is going on around you.
- Always have your car keys ready.
- At night, have your keys sticking through your fingers with the points out.
- Park in a well lit area.
- In your living area, keep your door locked always.
- Never study in a public area alone.
- Let someone know when you will be home.
- Be aware of people abusing alcohol and drugs.

If the situation arises where you have to protect yourself there are three methods to choose from. The first is using Martial Arts as the plan of defense. If you are not proficient in this field it should not be attempted. The second resistance is active resistance. The plan is to use what you have available as weapons, such as pens, keys, nailfile, etc. You should also use your body as a weapon by screaming, kicking, biting, etc. The final form of resistance is passive. The idea is to talk the rapist in to a calmer situation which may save you from being killed or even raped.

This all may seem pretty extreme but if the situation ever arises you may be glad you read this.

UNCW THEATRE PRESENTS "THE MANDRAKE"

UNCW NEWS BUREAU

The UNCW University theatre will present "The Mandrake" a famous play by Niccolo Machiavelli, at 8 pm November 13th through 16th in Kenan Auditorium.

Translated by Wallace Shawn, this version of "The Mandrake" enjoyed a long run success at New York's Public Theater. This rollicking, fast-paced, sometimes bawdy always hilarious translation brings new life to Machiavelli's comedy. Set in the 16th century in Florence, the play blends songs and robust action in detailing the hilarious lengths to which a man will go in winning the favor of the beautiful young wife of a rich and aged lawyer. The resulting twists lead to non-stop high spirits and hilarity, until, in the end, everyone gets exactly what he hopes for and, quite possible, deserves.

James Burke has written original music for this production. Kevin Moore will design the set with Doug Swink directing.

Admission is $4 for the public; $1 for UNCW students. For tickets, call 395-3442 or 791-9695.

CONTESTANTS FOR THE 1986 MISS UNCW SCHOLARSHIP PAGEANT POSED FOR A PICTURE AT A MEETING LAST WEEK--SEE RELATED STORY ON PAGE 6.

CAMPUS THEATRE PRODUCTIONS SCHEDULED

Anne W. Simpson

Several theatrical productions are in the works on campus and around the community.

The UNCW University Theatre has just begun rehearsing "The Mandrake," a comedy by Niccolo Machiavelli set in 16th century Florence, to be performed on November 13th at 8:00 p.m. in Kenan Auditorium. Described as a "rollicking, fast-paced, sometimes bawdy always hilarious" story, the play will have an open unit set, no intermission, and a Greek chorus between acts.

Doug Swink is directing this play, and Kevin Moore is designing the set. It sounds interesting.

The Thalian Association has begun rehearsals for Bring Back Birdie, a sequel to the musical Bye Bye Birdie, set twenty years later. Several UNCW students will be in this show, including Linda June Porter, who was in Vanities here on campus. The show makes fun of the early 1980's as Bye Bye Birdie made fun of the 1950's. The cast numbers about 35, and Jane Hansen directs.

Also, in Clinton, about 60 miles north of Wilmington, not too far to drive from here - the Sampson Community Theatre will present Wait Until Dark, a suspense thriller. Performances will be November 15-17 and 22-24 at 8:00 p.m. in the Sampson Community Building in downtown Clinton. For real edge-of-your-seat suspense, come see this show, which is shaping up nicely, judging from its rehearsals.

CLUBS BUDGETS RESULT IN CONTROVERSY

TRISH McHENRY
JOURNALISM CONTRIBUTOR

There are fifteen clubs on campus that receive funding from the Student Government Association. The money the SGA uses to fund these clubs comes out of student fees and is used for club activities. The amount that each club receives varies. UNCW students sponsor these clubs and therefore should be aware of how and on what basis these funding decisions are reached.

chairman, explained that the people involved in the decision have different interests and may have opposing view points of what makes a club worthy of receiving funding. Among the items taken into considerations before voting are club reputation, what the club has done in the past, financial record, and planned activities of the club.

A policy recently passed requires all the clubs to make minimum revenue requirements. Depending on the type of club each is, they will have to raise a certain percentage of their funds on their own. Failure to meet this requirement will result in the freezing of their funds.

The SGA works for the students of this campus, but the students should remember the members of the SGA are only human and are subject to mistakes. Students curious about what their money is supporting are encouraged to look into these clubs and give the SGA their input.

Certain steps are followed in turning a club request into an allocation. Each club must submit a complete plan of their club's intentions to the SGA Finance Committee. The Finance Committee studies the plan and then makes a recommendation to the SGA Senate. The Senate has the final decision of how much, if any money, each club receives. They have the right to reject the Finance Committee's recommendation.

The actual decision making can be a very complex task. Tim Robinson, finance committee

SEA*SQUAWK

BY DANIELLE WOODS

It's finally that time again, time for a new article (I know y'all, or for the benefit of the yankees yuz-guz, are holding you breath in anticipation). Well B-R-E-A-T-H it has arrived!!!!!! My newest gripe is the Dear Abby Syndrome. What is she talking about you may ask? The Dear Abby Syndrome, a role that many individuals find themselves being forced to take. It is plainly the process by which one dependent individual, friend, or associate asks another individual, friend or associate advice on matters as a daily routine that don't concern the poor victimized good samaritan.

EXAMPLE: "What do I do? I think I'm in love with him, but he doesn't even know I exist!!!! (Oh yes the famous Miss Cellophane lady line). Funny how she asks that same question every Monday morning about a different guy! Or maybe this ever popular touch and go game of, "If I play hard to get maybe he'll find me more alluring". When finding her more alluring is his comparison to the Black Beath!

Does this problem sound familiar to some of you? You sit there trying to eat lunch while she or he picks you apart giving you a despairing monologue about how they can't live with or shall perish without the love of Ralph or Rafealla, for the hundredth thousandth, millionth time. All the while you are thinking, "Why don't you get some professional help! I'm not qualified to to disclose advice on such stressful matters". Of course you don't have more important problems then whether Tom, Dick, and Harry likes their hairstyle. No, life evolves around them. They don't let you get a word in edgewise unless you are talking about them. So you get really frazzled out --your mind starts to wonder and you think about ways to shut them up like: If life is so bad HOLD YOUR BREATH AND DIE!!!!

I pity the poor friend more than the person with the problem because they have no one to turn to with THEIR problems. So this is a warning to those people who impose their conflicts upon others, don't take these people for granted, and a commendation to those unsung love lorne guides who help most of us through life's crisis. BRAVO!

GREEK COLUMNS

Our decision to become a sorority came about after the annual Greek Week was held last Spring. We realized how many more opportunities there were for greeks on our campus compared to our position as "little sisters" to a fraternity. We saw the possibility of expanding our horizons as well as our friendships among the other greeks and decided to begin organizing. Thanks to the help from Ellen Servetnick we were able to get over the first major hurdles quite smoothly. We found two super advisors, Nikki Howard and Margaret Taylor, and then began the process of choosing our letters, and a mascot, the bear, along with writing a constitution and making preparations to approach Panhellenic with our request. The answer we received is obvious by our smiles and the frequently seen maroon and gray letters that spell out Beta Chi Omega in greek.

At this time we would like to thank everyone that has given us either their time or support during our organization period. These people include Ellen Servetnick, Margaret Taylor, Nikki Howard, the sisters of Alpha Delta Pi, Delta Zeta, and Alpha Lambda Omega, the other fraternities and especially our brothers in Pi Kappa Phi-with you guys we never would have been able to do all this.

Our current membership consists of Kay Andrews, Traci Armour, Lisa Bradshaw, Denise Falls, Doris Foushee, Sue Franczkiewicz, Michele Gerrits, Peaches Grantham, Debbie Hage, Gena Hess, Terri Hydock, Jennibeth Kennedy, Lisa Kenyon, Michelle LaPointe, Kim McIntosh, Susan Stromsoe, Kim Wright, and Eva Zevenhuizen.

Our plans for the future include the Spring rush mentioned before, with our hope being to expand the greek system even further by encouraging girls that might otherwise have been afraid to pledge a sorority to give the greeks a chance and see just how fulfilling being a part of this system can be. We also hope to become a recognizable fixture in campus life as well as in the surrounding community.

On October 1st there was a new addition to the Greek System on our campus with the decision to make the Pi Kappa Phi "little sisters" the local sorority of Beta Chi Omega. Our sisterhood presently consists of 18 members and we plan to hold an informal rush in January of 1986 to continue growing in numbers. Presently we are working towards the goal of becoming a national Colony by the Spring of this second school year, and our president Sue Franczkiewicz is always busy planning the activities necessary to achieve this. One of our biggest projects so far has been a fund raiser for the March of Dimes that was held during Riverfest, at which time we raised over $400.00 for their organization. There are also plans to work with the Special Olympics during their annual games this year. These along with a number of other projects, should help pave the way to us becoming a national sorority before too long.

BOB HAYWOOD CAMPUS MINISTER

"I just know what I want to do." "I'm changing majors again." "Here I am about to graduate, I still have no clear sense of a career."

Sound familiar? So many people seem to go through the motions of a university education without any clear vision or conviction about their future. For most, thinking about the future causes nervousness and uncertainty rather than excitement and possibility, and that is sad.

There are lots of resources around for exploring the question "what do I want to be?" That's not my concern. I am concerned about two things. The first is the apparent influence on vocational choices that come from living in a world that seems more and more insecure. Rather than exploring who I am, what I want to be and do, where might I be most fulfilled; the major question seems to be, "What professions will have jobs available and provide the best economic security when I graduate?" We all want to be secure, but it occurs to me that our need for security has taken an over riding position in our exploration of our vocational goals. I'm not sure I have an answer, but I do think it is worth reflecting on.

This issue leads into my second concern. I don't feel that students exploring their vocational features listen to their internal Self enough. We all have yearnings, needs and desires. And whatever life experience we've had, we've learned something of the ways of life that brings us satisfaction and fulfillment. To me this is the beginning point for determining our vocations. The word "vocation", comes from a Latin word meaning to call. The call does not come so much from society around us but from deep within as we listen to the ways we inwardly respond to all of our life experience and listen intently for those experiences that call us to a sense of meaning and fulfillment.

I believe God has placed a calling for us deep within our own life experience. The road to our future begins with our journey inward as we remember and explore events and people that have shaped us and values that have become important to us through a whole variety of experiences. All that we have experienced can lead us to a list of "wants" which can be the first step towards our vocation. "I want to help." "I want to make a difference." "I want to run a business." "I like working with computers." All these can be "callings" for us to which we must give heed. Even hard times in our life, like the divorce of parents or our own divorce, (if we are older) can contain experiences that shape our future plans.

It takes courage to risk listening to our "wants" rather than the "shoulds" of our society and even our education that push us towards choices based on a protected income or other external values. But the possibility of deep satisfaction lies, I believe, in listening to your wants and letting them lead you step by step into your future.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

NO MORE DANCES AT UNCW!!!

That certainly seems to be the aim of the administration. First it was alcohol and now its dances. What will be next.....visitation? Prohibition?

For the past three months we have been trying to put on large, campus-wide dances for the students. Consistently for the past three months University officials have been ramming policies down our throats. It would be different if everyone knew about these policies and followed them.

or even if these policies were consistently enforced. But it is an entirely different matter when administrators pick and choose who they want to jump on and who they want to let ride.

This past week it finally came to a head. We had already bought our advertising, made our agreements with our business sponsors and had our people to get off work for our event, Frantic Friday, but to no avail. Our professionals at the Union had goofed-up and double scheduled for that night. Now it would seem that whoever had been scheduled first would naturally get the date, but not here, not at this Union. They cancelled our event! And we had been on the books since August.

So...did the Union even offer to at least reimburse us for our lost expenses due to their "professional" screw-up? NO. Instead we were informed that we had to eat our lost expenses! Now in all fairness, I must tell you that they did agree to pay for two extra hours for a building manager, and give us a "lav-ish" half-off on billiards. Of course, the latter is something the Union was planning on weekends anyway.

Not largely known by the student body, the Union has had many similar problems in the past. Just ask the Campus Christian Fellowship who has had their reservations kicked around by the Union, more than a ball on the soccer field. Or the NAACP who lost more than $500 due to the Union "technical difficulties". Technicalities that have reached the attention of the Union personnel well in advance of an ill-informed club's event.

It's funny how when the students pay 3.5 million dollars for a union, and give over $55,000 to the University Program Board, that they are only met with cold policies and a slew of dusty forms. It seems that some body administrative-wise, is living pretty high and mighty, and its not the students. Student Government has been kicked out of Room 100 as well, and if there is any group that deserves to use Room 100, I would think it would be them. Aren't they the main group that is supposed to represent all of the students who paid for that building, and pay the Union Staff's salaries? Then again it's obvious that the union was approximately name the "University Union" and not the "Student Union." Some people on this campus sure are enjoying it, maybe the students are just next in line.

Everyone has got their problems, but these mistakes are at the students' expense, and now they are threatening the Miss UNCW PAGEANT, any dances or large events (unless of course, it's one of the administration's events), and our own Student Government Association. Where is the "dynamite" and its tactics going to stop, or be halted? Are you next? Could you be one of those with an ill-fated reservation?

Anyway, we have rescheduled Frantic Friday, the best people and music in town, for November 22 at 8:00 p.m. And we're going to make it the best dance this university has ever seen! Unless, of course, the administration gets envious or egotistical or something, and decides to cancel us again.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

There has been a lot of talk about the Outdoor Adventure Club and whether they deserved, the three hundred dollars the SGA funded them this year, so I decided to look into it. I wanted to find out exactly what this club does. Does a portion of my tuition (and yours) go to send this group on vacation? On what basis did the SGA decide to fund this club?

I went to the SGA office to see a copy of the club's plans for the year. I was told there that the SGA makes its decision about which clubs get allocated what by talking with a spokesperson for each club. Nothing is in writing. This does not seem right. I think that the students of UNC-W deserve to know why their money is going towards this or any other club.

Seeing as there was nothing written about the clubs plans, I then decided to take a look at their constitution. I found that what the Outdoor Adventure Club does is go on cross country skiing, camping, rock climbing, white water rafting, swimming, and diving trips. From the looks of their constitution it did seem like we are funding their trips, however, I found out that this club has yet to register with the Student Organization Committee. No longer did the question of whether it is right or wrong for our money to be spent on their trips seem important.

As long as this club is not registered with the SOC, the money they are allocated by the SGA is frozen. Which means they do not have access to these funds. But now the fall semester is more than halfway over, and what I want to know is what happened to this club? Why haven't they bothered to register with the SOC? Why did the SGA fund a club that is apparently so unorganized? Aren't there any requirements for these clubs? If not, why? If this club asks for funding next year will it be allocated money again? Couldn't another club have used the extra money that is now frozen?

The students of UNC-W deserve some answers. If anyone has some answers and would like to respond, please contact the Seahawk office.

PIGTALES

DAVID FAIR
PRESIDENT

Have you ever wondered what goes on behind the scene of a major concert here at UNCW or what in the world Larry Linville was doing on our campus? These and most of the entertainment brought to this campus is the responsibility of the University Program Board. We are an organization funded through SGA from your student activities fees and run solely by students.

The UPB is divided into eight committees: Arts and Lectures, chaired by Wayne Sharpe and is responsible for such thing as Danes Theater, Jazz, and other performing acts as well as nationally known speakers.

The Concert Committee chaired by David Hitzsmeller is responsible for having local and nationally known musical and comedy acts.

Films and video chaired by Edwin Powell orders and shows a wide range of films from blockbusters to foreign films and the classics on a weekly basis.

One of the most active committee is the Coffee House Committee known as Half Moon Productions is chaired by Sharon Gustofson which brings you an evening with friends in a charming atmosphere that will allow you to relax and enjoy the evening's performance. The range of performers brought is from country, bluegrass, jazz, to Dr. Demento performers.

The Minority Arts committee chaired by Ramona Ragland brings entertainment to this campus especially for Blacks, International, and Non-Traditional Students as well as programs geared towards many women's issues.

The newest committee on our board is the Residence Life Committee chaired by Kim McDaniel which make dorm life more fun by bringing cage parties, films, and dances to the students that live on campus. Of course these are opened to all UNCW students.

Lastly, the most diverse committee is the Special Events Committee chaired by Monica Davis. This committee brings us a wide range of features from dances to hypnotists as well as a good deal of Homecoming events.

Along with the eight committee chairs the UPB has a general board of more than twenty-five people without which the executive board could not function. This however is no where near enough people. The UPB is responsible for spending 60,000 of your money, and they need all the input they can get.

If any of these programs interest you, the UPB meets every Thursday at 5:30 in room 201 of the union; everyone is welcome. Remember your money is being spent.

SGA MAKES NEEDED REVISIONS

CATHY CULP
JOURNALISM CONTRIBUTOR

The Student Government Association is constructing a new constitution. The SGA is presently updating and revising their constitution to make a new, more detailed version. Daniela Sullivan, President of the Senate, says the reason for the change is to help the SGA function better with a more detailed constitution to follow.

Ms. Sullivan says the change will include revisions of election procedures, the Executive Branch, the Judicial Branch, and the SGA President's functions. The last meeting discussed adding to the Judicial Branch of the constitution. She explains "The Judicial Branch needs to be more specific because we (SGA) added a Supreme Court." The Supreme Court is new and therefore needs a constitution to follow.

The President's powers are also being revised. Ms.

Sullivan says "We also went over some of the President's functions, like veto power." In the constitution one section states veto power standards then repeats it in another section. Therefore many of the revisions are simply changing the repetitiveness of the constitution.

Ms. Sullivan says the changes will take all year to complete. She says "It's an ongoing process and a constitution is tedious." The SGA is approaching each article one at a time. The revisions will hopefully improve SGA procedures.

Ms. Sullivan says all the SGA meetings are public and open for student participation. She says "Students need to look in their student handbooks and find out what is available to them."

WATER TOWER PAINTED

CHRIS SPILLMAN

Our campus has gone through many changes over the past few years. With major additions such as the new Student Union and the Social Behavioral Science Building the campus is becoming very impressive. To add to these improvements the watertower will be repainted. We can thank the SGA for voicing the students opinion in getting the tower painted white with green block-type lettering. The estimated cost of the project is $70,000. The contract is in the bidding process and the actual starting date has not been determined.

The watertower is seen not only by the students and faculty, but it can also be seen from many points in the surrounding area. At present, the watertower is not eye catching, and taken for granted by most passerbys. After repainting however, it will be an outstanding highly visible landmark that will reflect our high standards of Excellence and school spirit.

BIT-BUCKET

Thinking about buying a micro computer? They're very good investments considering the amount of software (programs) available. You can do almost anything from:

Word Processing-Great for easily typed, professional-looking term papers (including a spelling checker)

Spread Sheet- The Generic name for programs that keep track of budgets or expenses

Data Bases-Another generic for programs that organize information or data (For example a data base could be all the students at UNCW including their ID numbers and class schedules. This information could be reorganized various ways, perhaps in alphabetical order or by ID number.)

Communication packages-enable a micro to interface (communicate) with our campus computers via telephone lines (Access the vax from home at your leisure, 24 hours a day)

You may purchase "Apple" computer equipment from the UNCW Bookstore at special reduced prices. You may also buy "Tandy / Radio Shack" equipment on campus at discounted prices. If you wish more information, please contact Academic Computing services located in SB 222.

NIGHT SPOTS NEEDED

CATHY CULP

The city of Wilmington is in short supply of nightclubs. Recently two favorite drinking establishments have been closed, leaving the citizens of Wilmington with little choice of alternative beverage spots. The Pablo, next to campus, was closed this summer and the Beer King, on Kerr Ave., was replaced by a bike shop last year. The University is full of students that want to have a place to go for a drink and some camaraderie. The choices left to these students are now very limited.

The Mad Monk, Sgoddars, the Palm Room, and various restaurants are the students only choices. The Mad Monk is for those who enjoy hard rock with an atmosphere of stale beer and drunk customers. The Palm Room and Sgoddars are fun, light-hearted bars, but who wants to tackle the Wrightsville Beach Police Department?

The alternatives to these places are Adam's, Eve's, Banannas, the Port O'Call lounge and Gabriel's. These are bars that are almost entirely for the 'young working population of Wilmington. To enter these places you must be at least 21 years of age. This leaves freshmen, sophomores, and many juniors and seniors from being admitted.

Bars are a business and must have a consistent amount of customers, but students need a place to "escape" for a drink. A plea is being made: Please open a nice, laid-back bar with friendly service and good music. To any entrepreneurs, this is your big chance.

VALUE OF COLLEGE DEGREE IS CLIMBING

COURTESY CPS

College degrees are worth more to male students now than at any time since the 1960's, the authors of a new U.S. Census Bureau study say.

The study, by analysts in the bureau's Department for Demographic Studies, says that, as of 1983, male college graduates could expect to earn 39 percent more than men who quit school after high school.

Male college students' economic edge over high school grads declined during the 1970's. In 1969, male college grads made 28 percent more than high school grads. In 1979, the difference was 21 percent.

By 1981, the decline had been reversed. The economic edge was 34 percent that year.

The study does not include figures for female college graduates.

The bureau's analysts attribute the decline and subsequent increase in the value of a degree to the entrance and passage of the "Baby Boom" generation through college.

The larger the college graduating class, the less valuable a college degree is in the market place.

Among other conclusions

the analysts found:

+Even the states with low levels of educational attainment are improving. In 1950, 19 percent of south Carolina's adults had graduated from college, compared to 49 percent of Utah's. By 1980, the extremes were represented by Kentucky (53 percent) and Alaska (83 percent).

+Black students' graduation rate, which was 65 percent of that of whites in 1940, improved to 96 percent by 1980.

+Thirty-two percent of the American population has at least some college education. By comparison, 17 percent of East Germany's, 16 percent of Sweden's and seven percent of Hungary's populations have some higher education.

+In 1940, 38 percent of Americans at least 29 years old had a high school diploma, and six percent had a college degree. Today, 86 percent have a high school diploma and 22 percent a college degree.

The study relied primarily on previously published data, although some new information from the National Center for Education Statistics was also used.

SEMESTER IN SPAIN

Not just for Spanish majors only, but for everyone: beginners, "in between" students, and advanced. Put some excitement into your college career!

BEGINNER OR ADVANCED: Cost is about the same as a semester in a U.S. college $3,480. Price includes air round trip to Seville from New York, room, board, and tuition complete. Government grants and loans may be applied towards our programs.

Live with a Spanish family, attend classes four hours a day, four days a week, four months. Earn 16 hrs of credit (equivalent to 4 semesters taught in U.S. colleges over a two year time span). Your Spanish studies will be enhanced by opportunities not available in a U.S. classroom. Standardized tests show our students' language skills superior to students completing two year programs in U.S. Advanced courses also.

Hurry, it takes a lot of time to make all arrangements.

KECHLEY RECEIVES FELLOWSHIP

TAMARA DREW
JOURNALISM CONTRIBUTOR

Dr. David Kechley, an assistant professor of music at UNC-W, has been awarded an Artist Fellowship Grant from the North Carolina Arts Council. Given in recognition of artistic excellence in composition, the fellowship is awarded to one North Carolina composer every other year.

Two playwrights and a choreographer were also winners of the 1985 North Carolina Arts Council Fellowship Awards. The $5,000 fellowships are awarded annually to professional artists who are residents of North Carolina to allow them to devote more time and resources to their artistic work. Playwrights M. Terence Cawley of Raleigh and Phil Hines of Charlotte, and Choreographer Barrie Barton of Weaverville were the other winners of the fellowship.

Out of state specialists form the selection panel for the grant, which is intended to help the composer set aside time for work and accomplishments of specific goals. Dr. Kechley intends to use his grant money to purchase a computer to eliminate a majority of the tedious paperwork involved in copying out parts for different instruments, in addition to the time-saving features which allows him to experiment with ideas, revise scores, and store musical works for the future use.

According to Dr. Kechley, he submitted his work "LIGHTENING IMAGES" to the grant selection panel. "It was interesting because I had submitted the piece in other situations for various purposes, but it hadn't really gotten any attention. When I applied for the grant, the piece was already taped and available, so I used it in order to have the music in by the deadline."

Dr. Kechley, who had applied for the grant once before, was surprised when notified that he had been chosen. "In the past, there have been times when I've had a fairly negative and real positive reaction to the same work...and later the piece gets recognized."

Winning awards is not new to Dr. Kechley. He has received awards, fellowships, or grants from the following: John Simon Guggenheim Memorial Foundation; National Endowment for the Arts (twice); American Society of Composers, Authors, and Publishers; Bascom Little Fund; and the Rockefeller Foundation. He has also won composition competitions from the Shreveport (LA) Symphony and the OPUS 1 Chamber Orchestra.

Dr. Kechley's works have been performed by the Seattle Symphony, the Winston-Salem Symphony, St. Paul Chamber Orchestra, Northwest Chamber Orchestra, and the Footpath Dance Company of Cleveland. STRUMMING: A SONATA FOR SOLO GUITAR was performed at the 1984 North Carolina Composer's Symposium. CLOCKS AND MORE CLOCKS and ALEXANDER AND THE WIND-UP MOUSE, orchestral works based on children's books (and dedicated to Kechley's children) were premiered by the UNC-W/ Wilmington Community Orchestra, and Alexander most recently for the Charlotte Symphony Orchestra. The work is also scheduled to be performed later in the month by the Seattle Philharmonic Orchestra.

Kechley's SONATA FOR VIOLA AND PIANO will be released later in the year by Pro Viva Records as a part of the Eastman School of Music's Music Nova Recording Project.

Receiving the Artist Fellowship Grant is not only good news that Dr. Kechley has had recently. "I was just commissioned to write a piece for the Minneapolis group Key Winds under a commission from the Minnesota Composer's Forum. The procedure is very much the same as for the grant. You submit a piece to a selection panel and they determine the commissions from that."

Dr. Kechley was born in Seattle, Washington where his father was a composer and instructor at the University of Washington. He received his bachelors and masters degrees at U of W. After deciding on a career of university teaching, Dr. Kechley earned his doctorate of musical arts degree in Composition at the Cleveland Institute of Music. Dr. Kechley has been at UNC-W since 1979. His wife, Jerilee, is also a music instructor. Mrs. Kechley also plays flute in the Wilmington Symphony, where Dr. Kechley plays the string bass. In addition, Dr. Kechley is the regular bass player for the Riverboat Landing, where he is often known to improvise a fascinating jazz solo. Dr. Kechley is also on the Board of Advisors for the local Cape Fear Musician's Association.

The Writing Place in Morton Hall has been blessed with five new word processors. These word processors are available to any UNC-W student from 9:00 a.m. to 9:00 p.m. Students are free to use the word processor for any type of work.

Tutors in the Writing Place have been trained on the processors and are more than glad to help out when assistance is needed. Instruction sheets are also provided for reference. The word processors are much more effective than a standard typewriter. Students are able to review their paper before it comes out in print and make any necessary corrections without them being noticeable in the copy. A computer dictionary is also available for student use. When this disk is inserted into the word processor the spelling throughout the paper may be checked. The computer will seek misspelled words, highlight them, and give the typist the choices of ignoring the word, replacing it, or the computer will suggest a list of alternative spellings.

The word processor is of great help to UNC-W students. There is one major drawback through the hours the processors are available. The word processor is only available from 9 to 9, whereas the VAX computers are available for students use until midnight. This is much more convenient for working students or those procrastinators that stay up burning the midnight oil. Helen Jones realized how much of an inconvenience this can be.

After work she went straight to the Writing Place to type a paper on the Word Processor. The paper turned out great and at 8:55 p.m. Miss Jones was ready to print the paper. She accidentally hit a wrong button and her entire paper vanished. She repeatedly tried to retrieve her work unsuccessfully. Suddenly she heard a dismal voice utter "It's time to close up. This room will self-destruct in ten seconds." Helen gathered her books and left. Her paper was due at eight a.m. the next day.

The word processors are conveniently located in Morton Hall and are helpful in editing student papers. The only problem associated with the word processor is that you can't take it home with you if your paper isn't completed by nine p.m.

SURFERS RIDING THE WAVES

UNC-W Club Surfers held the first of many Intra-Club contests on Monday October 28. Conditions for the event were not ideal with a northeast wind blowing at about fifteen-twenty m.p.h., making the waves quite choppy but with adequate size. Wave heights were two-four feet with some bigger waves rolling in for the finals.

Although only twelve surfers competed, the competition was tough without anyone having it easy en route to the finals. The twelve surfers were placed in three, four man heats with first place in each of the three heats advancing straight to the finals. Second and third place finishers of the first round heats went on to a semi-main heat. Of the six surfers in the semi-main two advanced to the final.

By now the waves had some increase in size but the wind was relentless. New member and hot performer Tom Burris started the heat with a long left breaking wave which he ripped all the way to the beach. Veteran club member Bryan Tracy retaliated with a left-hander of his own, that was equally impressive. As the heat wore on Burris and Tracy looked to be in complete control, with the question being which of the two would come out on top.

The decision was a close one with one judge having the surfers tied for first while the other two were in favor of Tracy.

All five finalist were awarded prizes by Gordon and Smith surfwear. Gordon and Smith had already donated over three hundred dollars worth of clothing to be given away at UNC-W Surfing events throughout the 85-86 school year. The following is the order of finish.

First Place-Bryan Tracy
Second Place-Tom Burris
Third Place-Mike Gilpin
Fourth Place-Brett Owens
Fifth Place-Bill Warlick

A special thanks goes out to Clark Wallin (Eastern Surfing Association) and Rik Beitel, Gordon and Smith sales representative for their help and support of the UNC-W Surf Club.

Other notes of interest involving some recent achievements by Surf Club members are Bryan Tracy's third place finish in the Mens Amateur division of the Record Bar Pro-Am held at Wrightsville Beach and also the domination by some UNC-W Club

Surfers in the mens divisions at a recent Eastern Surfing Association contest held at Carolina Beach.

Results are as follows:

First place 1A men Brett Owens advanced to 2A
First place 2A men Brett Owens advanced to 3A

Second place 1A men Brian Camarot
Third place 1A men Paul McCauley
Fifth place 1A men Lance O'Brien

Second place 3A men Stan McCauley
Third place 3A men Bryan Tracy

MCCORKLE SPEAKS ON SOUTHERN WAYS

KATHY KIBLER
JOURNALISM CONTRIBUTOR

Author Jill McCorkle spoke at Morton Hall Friday night and told about her two novels; JULY 7TH and THE CHEER LEADER. McCorkle centers her novels around the "new South". The South which she grew up in and not the stereotypical southern traditions.

The Lumberton native got her ideas from passing through all of the little side-of-the-road towns which everyone has experienced while driving through North Carolina. To her each town is a story waiting to be written. McCorkle seems to have on-hand experience with the feelings of such small towns since she grew up in one.

The 26 year old author published both of her novels at approximately the same time. While she had been trying to get THE CHEER LEADER off the ground she finished JULY 7TH and had them both ready to go simultaneously.

McCorkle read three passages from JULY 7TH on Friday night. She read aloud the thoughts of her light headed character Juanita, who shared her experience of going through la-la land, and also told about an old black grandmother expressing her love for her live in grandson Martin Luther or M.L. In January Ms. McCorkle will begin teaching a creative writing course at UNC.

FRATERNITY ANNOUNCES NEW PLEDGES

The Upsilon Nu Chapter of Alpha Phi Omega, a national service fraternity proudly welcomes its Fall 1985 pledges. The Alpha Kappa class members are as follows: Wendy Adams, Leon Brown, Scott Coker, Robert Cruz, Mark Ennis, George Holland, Diane Norris, Laurie Schable, Skip Smith, Gordon Spicer, Keith Stephenson, Sofie Svenson, and Kevin Vest.

The pledges joined APO's in manning Red Cross hurricane shelters, coordinating a blood drive, and various other efforts. They assisted Cape Fear Hospital in x-raying Halloween candy for neighborhood children, and entertained the pediatrics ward of New Hanover Hospital in full Halloween costumes as their class project.

Highlights scheduled for this semester include a luau, scavenger hunt, Christmas banquet and dance, football games, a camping trip, Child Fingerprinting project, and sponsoring Thanksgiving dinner for needy families.

ESCORT POLICY EXAMINED

LIONEL MITCHELL

Imagine a stranger walking into Galloway Hall, knocking on a door and assaulting the unsuspecting student when they open the door. With that problem in mind, the University has started an escort policy for inside the Residence Halls.

In all of the Residence Halls after the hour of 7 p.m. all visitors are escorted to the student's room they are visiting. Once the visitor has been escorted by the residents personnel, there is no more official intervention, unless there is trouble. Then the residents step in and ask them to leave. The policy for coed visitation states that Sunday through Thursday the cut off time for visitors is 11:30 p.m. On Friday and Saturday a visitor can stay until 2:00 a.m. According to Residence Life Director, Steve Hill, the policy is a very informal one.

"We trust the students to abide by the rules. The reactions to the escort policy have been mixed. Some like it and some don't. But, we don't want people wandering aimlessly around the halls. And the Residence Life Staff feel that it is in the best interest of the students."

The escorting of visitors to students' rooms was initiated this year for all of the Residence Halls. This informal policy gives the staff enough control to stop curious strangers. Yet, it still allows students personal freedom to see whomever they choose.

MANAGEMENT COURSE OFFERED

A two-night course, "Self Management Techniques", designed to help people gain control over their lives by gaining control over their own behavior, will be offered by UNCW's Office of Special Programs. Taught by Dr. Robert Brown, professor of psychology, the course will run Thursdays, November 21 from 7:00-9:30p.m. and December 5 from 7:00-8:30p.m. in Room 212, Hoggard Hall.

"This course cannot be used for dealing with serious problems," Brown continued, "but the techniques can be used in controlling procrastination, productivity, weight, smoking and a variety of other problems. If you have a goal that is concrete, specific and measurable, I can show you specific ways to meet it," Brown continued.

"Will power is important in changing behavior but it is not enough," he said. "You will be taught a set of skills to manage your own self. These guidelines include changing your behavior and possibly changing your surroundings since environment plays a crucial role."

Fee is $29 but will be discounted to $25 if registration occurs before the November 15 deadline. For more information, contact the Office of Special Programs, 395-3195. Faculty, staff, students entitled to 50% discount on $25 fee.

UNCW NEWS BUREAU

GEORGE WALKER
STAFF WRITER

Lynn Baker is a young woman who most parents would be proud to claim as theirs. She's attractive, a college student, friendly, and has a soft southern accent that evokes trust. She thrives on the company of others, so much so that she is entered in the first annual Miss UNCW Pageant "to make friends." On November 16 Baker will emerge from backstage at Trask Coliseum along with 27 others to find out who is the "fairest of them all?"

Just who is the fairest of them all? While these ladies, all proper and well-dressed, compete in front of a large, adoring audience, countless other girls will be working in the privacy of their dorm rooms, studying to be a doctor or a teacher or whatever else they feel is worthy of their abilities. Still others will be in nearby Hanover Hall, lifting weights, stretching, pushing to be the best they can be.

Again, the question surfaces, who is the fairest of them all?

Controversy has, in the form of charges and counter-charges, made its way into the pageant, which carries a $400 first prize and is sponsored by the campus yearbook. The women's faculty network, a campus teacher's group, has made it known to yearbook editor Alan Dudley that they feel there is no place for a pageant at "an academic institution."

They have met with Dudley and expressed their hope that the pageant would be canceled, because they say, "such exhibitions only perpetuate the idea that women are objects." Dudley's response--"stay home, don't come if you don't want to. It's their (women's faculty network) right to stay away and our right to have this thing."

Diane Levy, Joan Willey, and Patricia Tjaden are UNCW teacher's network members who feel the pageant should be stopped. Levy, who herself is in a field of academics (anthropology) which women rarely enter, says pageants like these hurt all women.

"It's telling the community and the world that women are objects. Women begin to feel that their physical appearance should conform to the ideal." Willey adds, "women are socialized early to these pretentious ideals, and so much real talent is wasted."

They could have a point. Studies have shown that young girls are advanced over their male counterparts until about fifth grade. At this point, a high percentage come almost to a halt while the guys continue to excel and improve. Many sociologists claim this is a manifestation of American socialization. Simply put, make-up and training bras dominate girls attention while males turn theirs to math and science.

This is the philosophy that the women's faculty network is standing behind: the pageant is dangerous because of the cloudy values it sets forth.

Is anyone really hurt by the pageant? Not if you ask the contestants, who all talk about the camaraderie and challenge of the competition. And certainly not if you ask any pageant judge; who undergo years of observation and training to attain that status. Beth Bell, a 16-year pageant judge and a music instructor at UNCW, says she is "100 percent behind the pageant."

"The competition as such pushes the girls to be the best they can be. They have to be knowledgeable in different areas, have to have poise, and must project herself well. I've been in pageants a long time and have met a lot of fine people at them."

Dudley, to his credit, has remained calm during all of the fuss. He believes the pageant is more than a contest of physical beauty.

"Look, I don't agree with swimsuit competitions (not in this pageant) and girls parading around like meat. If anyone wants that they can go to Wrightsville Beach."

"We are part of society. It would be kind of boring if everything at this university

Furthermore, skipping or skipping on breakfast doesn't help a bit toward weight control. A study of college women showed that breakfast skippers consumed more snacks-than those high in calories and low in nutrients-than those who ate breakfast. In another study at the University of Minnesota, 2,000 calories a day consumed at breakfast helped people to lose weight, whereas on the same 2,000 calorie meal consumed at supper, they gained.

So, next time you fall asleep in your 8:00 a.m. class, or eat a doughy, gooey toaster pie while driving your hair or driving your car early in the morning-stop and think; Do I really need to start my day this way?

had to be academics and work."

Contestant Baker, who entered her first pageant in grade school, feels the women's faculty network "shouldn't judge us without knowing us. No one is forcing us to do this. If they want to make changes, why don't they complain about the damage of heavy drinking on campus or something like that?"

The pageant will be 50% interview, 25% evening gown and 25% casual wear. When asked why grade point average wasn't included as a factor in the scoring, Dudley said, "It would be unfair for an upperclassman to get beat out by a freshman who had no grades yet."

The pageant will include live entertainment and a visit by Miss Erwin-Denim.

And the battle goes on. The women's faculty network has recently written a letter to the editor, spoke with a Star-News reporter (as has Dudley), and continue to plot strategy for getting their message across.

"If nothing else, we want debate on the subject," says Tjaden.

And the effectiveness of this debate?

"We're already in the planning stages for another one next year," Dudley says with a grin.

Nine children have been named winners in the Marine Expo '85 coloring contest sponsored by McDonalds.

All six Cape Fear area McDonald's participated in the contest by using 36,000 tray liners which carried the distinctive Marine Expo '85 slogan in a black and white format suitable for coloring. Entries were submitted from children ranging in age three years to ten.

Winners in the four years and under category were: First place, Caroline Bernard of Leland; second place, Beth Boney and third place, Joshua Robinson.

Also from Wilmington were the winners in the eight-ten-year-old category: first place, Andrew Lloyd Baibea; second place, Fontella Moore; and third place, Jeff Cayton.

MISS UNCW CROWNED AT TRASK

The first Miss UNCW was crowned Saturday night, Nov. 16th in Trask Coliseum. Melissa Ballard Davis of Raleigh won the title and will represent UNCW in such upcoming events as the Azalea Festival, the Wilmington Christmas Parade, and the Ms. Pleasure Island pageant.

The pageant opened with Bev Cobb singing "Everything's Coming Up Roses", in an opening number with all of the 27 contestants-but everything was not coming up roses for the beginning of the pageant. In that opening number, Bev Cobb's microphone shorted out, and in the middle of the casual wear competition, the whole sound system overloaded and went out. Fortunately, repairs were made and Master of Ceremony B. Allan Dudley and Mistress of Ceremony Melissa Collins covered the error well by continuing their introductions in a loud voice. After the opening number, Melissa Collins sang "New York, New York." Then Mr. Dudley introduced the judges for the pageant: Katie Brinkley, chief judge; Winston Price; Linda Register; Rick Dawson; and Allan Galloway. Following a dance number by Kerri Whelan and Chandra Marley, the first competition, the casual wear competition, began.

Following an intermission, the 27 contestants competed in evening gown competition. As the judges made their decisions on the top ten, Chris Beaver entertained the audience with "Old Man River". Ms. Collins then introduced visiting queens and the pageant dancers performed two lively numbers to the songs "New Attitude" and "The Heat Is On."

Contestant #2 Catherine Culp, Contestant #4 Gina Smith, Contestant #5 Melissa Davis, Contestant #6 Deborah Detommaso, Contestant #9 Lori Devaun, Contestant, #10 Lynn Franklin, Contestant #12 Karen Flynn, Contestant #15 Jackie Griffin, Contestant #16 Brenda Harrelson, and Contestant #18 Kelly Bunch comprised the top ten.

Each girl was then asked a question on stage to answer in front of the judges and audience of 700 or more. Topics for the questions ranged from the controversy concerning the pageant to prayer in school and the problems facing young women today.

As the judges made their final decisions, Bev Cobb returned to the stage and sang "Hello, Dolly," this time with the microphone and sound system intact, and a performance that would make the audience forget the problems encountered in the earlier number.

Melissa Collins sang the popular song, "Memory"

(The Theme From CATS), and then, finally, the moment was at hand.

The winner of the "Most Sponsored Contestant" Award was not announced on stage, but that award was given to Karen Flynn during the reception. She will receive dinner for two at Fraziers and dinner for two at Beaches.

The "Miss Congeniality" Award, a large trophy, went to Gina Smith.

Karen Flynn was the fourth runner-up, followed by Lynn Franklin, third runner-up. Catherine Culp was the second runner-up, and Brenda Harrelson was the first runner-up.

Then, as the excitement and anxiety was building, Melissa Ballard was announced as Miss UNCW 1986. She will receive a $400 scholarship, a trophy from 4 Seasons Trophy Shop, an Earth Cruiser, dinners for two at such places as the Pepper Mill, a free month at the Spa Health Club and 20 free sessions at a tanning booth.

A champagne reception was held immediately following the pageant. This event was sponsored by the Delta Zeta Sorority and The Fledgling. Delta Zeta members served as

STUDENTS URGED TO APPLY FOR PRIVATE FUNDING

SCHOLARSHIP BANK

Students who need to supplement their state and federal financial aid packages for the 1985-86 school year were urged today to apply for private foundation and corporate funding. According to Steve Danz, Director of The Scholarship Bank, there are numerous private aid sources available from private foundations, major corporations, trade, union and civic groups. With over 55 million in aid, the following are just a sample of programs available:

Teaching: Offering up to $3,500 per year, the Danforth Foundation gives awards to students interested in teaching as a profession. 3,000 annual awards, twenty-five percent to minorities.

Exceptional Student Fellowships: Awarded by a major life insurance company to students in business, law, computer programming, accounting and related fields. Summer internship required with all expenses paid.

Anthropology, biology, conservation and marine science: Field Research Project grants up to $600 per year.

Journalism, broadcasting and related fields: The Poynter Fund awards annual scholarships to $2,000. Must have a career interest in one of these fields.

Center for Political Studies: Internships in political science, law, public relations, business, history and education.

White House Fellowships: Highly competitive graduate level fellowships to work as an intern at The White House. 14-20 yearly openings.

According to the director, many private aid sources do not require a showing of financial need but are dependant on the student demonstrating a career interest in a certain field, or a willingness to intern or enter a competition. Low and no-interest loans are also available. The Scholarship Bank is a non-profit nationwide organization. Students who would like to use the service should send a business size, stamped, self addressed envelope to 4626 N. Grand, Covina, CA. 91724.

BOOKSTORE SELLS APPLES

Recently, the UNC-W bookstore expanded into a newer and larger building and along with this move became more diversified. The bookstore is striving to meet any and all needs of students, faculty, and staff by carrying items like soap, toothpaste, clothes, books, and Apples; that is Apple computers.

The bookstore will provide students and faculty/staff with the opportunity to purchase Apple computers. The idea was brought up last year, but when a demonstration was given on campus, the majority of those showing any interest were only only faculty and staff members. Since then, an increasing number of students have shown an interest as well. Carrying the computers was a system wide decision and all sixteen schools in the UNC system are on this program.

When the program first began, a variety of different computers were offered. According to Mr. Siko, only one model 128 was sold and has since been discontinued from the UNC-W selection. He says that the 128 is only about four hundred dollars less than the Macintosh 512k. Siko says "the Macintosh 512k sells for $2481 plus tax and is a better package deal." He also noted that this price is better than that available by state contract and should beat other prices since UNC-W will buy the computers direct. Included in the price are the external drive, image writer, carrying case, ten blank disks, the Macwrite, and the Macpaint.

From six to eight computers have been sold to both faculty/staff and students thus far. The only advertisement made was one ad in the Seahawk and an announcement in the Faculty/staff communicade. Siko says another open house will be set up with the Apple and Computer E's representatives will demonstrate how to use the computers and answer any questions. Siko also says Computer E's will handle all servicing of the computers when necessary and they are really trying to work with UNC-W to help provide the best possible service and price to the students.

Brochures are now available in the bookstore for anyone interested. Mr. Siko claims delivery usually takes from two to three weeks but may take a little longer as we approach the Christmas season. KIMBERLY SKIPPER

ALUMNI AWARD TO BE PRESENTED

UNCW NEWS BUREAU

The UNCW Alumni Association will present the 1985 Distinguished Alumnus Award and 1985 Distinguished Citizen Award at a banquet at 6:30 p.m., Saturday, November 16 in the Dining Room of the University Union.

The Reverend Ray A. Buchanan of Big Island, VA., co-director of the Society of Saint Andrew, will receive the Distinguished Alumnus Award. Dr. Gerald H. Shinn, professor of philosophy and religion at UNCW will receive the Distinguished Citizen Award.

Working out of a sheep shed in the Blue Ridge section of Virginia, Buchanan and partner Ken Horne, both ministers, formed the Society of Saint Andrew in 1983 as a world hunger ministry of the United Methodist Church. The society began as a regional project to salvage non-marketable potatoes and distribute them to the hungry in Virginia. The regional project grew into a nationwide Potato Project to salvage and distribute misshaped but nutritious potatoes to thousands of hungry people through over 100 food agencies. In its first 18 months of operation, the Potato Project salvaged over 10 million pounds of potatoes and yams to help ease world hunger. Its first shipment overseas was in December 1984 to the Dominican Republic.

The project pays the growers' cost of bagging the potatoes and freight charges to the distribution center nearest the receiving food bank or soup kitchen. Growers receive a tax benefit for the charitable contribution in addition to knowing that crops once left as waste in the fields will help feed the hungry. The average cost of distributing the potatoes is less than four cents per pound. The project hopes to distribute 15 million pounds of potatoes in 1985.

"I'm just doing my job as a Christian. Hunger is a moral issue with over 20 million Americans going hungry," said Buchanan.

In addition to the Potato Project, Buchanan spearheaded the Harvest of Hope, a work study program for youth on the causes of preventatives to hunger, and the Potato Project Partners program, where churches and other groups finance a minimum of one tractor trailer load of potatoes.

The society's efforts to help eliminate hunger have been recognized by national television news and letters of support from President Reagan, governors and senators.

Buchanan and Horne practice what they preach. The two and their families share a home, farm, most possessions, and have a common budget and one checkbook.

"We're trying to develop a lifestyle that puts more emphasis on people than on things," said Buchanan.

Buchanan graduated from UNCW in 1972 and received the master of divinity degree from Duke University.

Dr. Gerald H. Shinn joined the UNCW faculty in 1967. His service and dedication to the campus and community range from serving a curator of UNCW's Museum of World Cultures to establishing in 1972 the Albert Schweitzer International Prizes, the first international prize of its kind in the United States and held every four years at UNCW. His excellence as a teacher has been recognized with the UNCW Board of Trustees Teaching Excellence Award in 1981, and his selection as a semi-finalist in the 1985 Professor of the Year competition sponsored by the Council for Advancement and Support of Education (CASE). Shinn was the only professor so honored within the 16-campus UNC system, and one of two semi-finalists chosen from North Carolina.

Shinn's genuine interest in the relationship between faculty and students is evident in his being named an associate of the Danforth Foundation, an organization dedicated to improving the quality of human relations in American higher education. He is the recipient of a Ford Fellowship, a Gurney H. Kearns Fellowship, and was included in the 1970 edition of Two Thousand Men of Achievement. In October, Shinn was asked to serve as an advisor to the International John Steinbeck Society, a learned society that serves member and friends in 44 nations.

Shinn received his undergraduate and graduate degrees from Duke University and also studied at Goethe Universitat at Frankfurt am Main, Germany. At UNCW he teaches philosophy and religion and Old Testament literature.

The nomination of Shinn as a distinguished citizen recognizes his exceptional service to the Wilmington community and his achievements as a leader in education.

The UNCW Alumni Association began the awards presentation in 1981.

CAMPUS REPUBLICAN

MICKY GAHAGAN

Finally, after two months of searching out liberals on campus, the November 1st edition of the Seahawk provided three bleeding heart examples.

First, our beloved campus minister, Bob Haywood. Mr. Haywood in his STILLPOINT column calls U.S. policy in Nicaragua "evil." While I'm sure Mr. Haywood is a fine man, his views on foreign policy are a bit naive. He almost sounds like a burnt out peacenik left over from the sixties.

Mr. Haywood apparently wants us to believe that DANIEL ORTEGA AND HIS BAND OF MUDEROUS SANDINISTAS are just like us, A LATIN AMERICAN VERSION OF JFK and Jackie. I gather he also expects us to believe that the Nicaraguan CITIZENS ARE HAPPY WITH THE LIFE THEY LEAD.

Mr. Haywood, this is not the case, Nicaragua has a totalitarian form of government. THE CITIZENS HAVE NO RIGHTS WHATSOEVER AND LIVE UNDER VIRTUAL MARTIAL LAW. Those who do not believe as the SANDINISTAS, ARE ROUNDED UP AND SENT TO RELOCATION CAMPUS NEVER TO BE SEEN AGAIN. Most Business is controlled by the Government, and that which isn't is so heavily taxed as to render the business non-competitive. Would anyone want to live under a dictatorship such as this. Bob Haywood would like you to believe so.

Mr. Haywood, obviously you do not realize that we are intelligent students who will not be swayed by your anti-United States views. Your views are in the minority on this campus along with the rest of the country. This is 1985 not 1965. WAKE UP, MR. HAYWOOD, AND SMELL THE COFFEE.

Another unattractive liberal movement at UNC-W is the Faculty Women's Network. These GLORIA STEINHEM CLONES HAVE THEIR NATIONAL ORGANIZATION FOR WOMEN (Now) SCRIPTS OUT AND ARE PROCLAIMING THE MISS UNCW PAGEANT TO "PERPETUATE THE IMAGE OF WOMEN AS OBJECTS AND THE VIEW OF WOMEN AS VALUED ONLY FOR PHYSICAL APPEARANCE," and that "SUCH PAGEANTS SERVE TO DEGRADE WOMEN!" GIVE ME A BREAK!!!

Evidently since the resounding defeat of ERA, the feminists no longer have a cause. So instead they ATTACK A WORTHWHILE fund raising project such as the Miss UNCW Pageant. SOMEONE NEEDS TO INFORM THESE WOMEN THAT FEWER THAN 20% of American Women consider themselves feminists. I quote columnist Laura Ingraham "Feminism has failed in every respect-it is socially disreputable, intellectually bankrupt, and politically feeble." Obviously feminism does not represent the mainstream of American females.

I agree that the Faculty Women's Network has a right to their opinion. However I am upset because of their pettiness.

The Miss UNCW Pageant is a worthwhile event and I wish the Yearbook staff best of luck. I also congratulate them on their courage in standing firm against this liberal thrust.

The third and most morally repulsive is the new chapter attempting to be formed on campus to support gays and lesbians. I sincerely hope UNCW does not lower itself to recognize a group such as a gay support group. Rather the university should provide counseling for these people to solve their problems.

I welcome opinions contrary to mine. As students, the future of this country is in your hands. TAKE A STAND.

* The large majority of congressmen think it is right to provide job training to help young people learn job skills. In 1977, the house voted 334-61 to teach young people job skills, help them find work, and encourage them to stay in school. Congressmen Broyhill and Martin opposed these efforts. In other words, they voted against the young people of this state and nation.

Politicians may try to reduce choices to "liberal" and "conservative", but this ignores the real choice about what is right and wrong for North Carolina; the choice between fairness and special interest; and the choice between progress and standing still. The Republicans, for obvious reasons, would prefer to ignore these questions and simply pound their chests and yell "conservative."

JEFFREY BARNHILL

We all simply give other people and organizations too much power over our lives. And it will not change, it will only get worse, unless you choose to take some time to reflect on your external life style and your internal values in order to discover what is really important for you and how you and how you might reorganize your life to reflect those values.

For me, the journey to a less harried life (although still full and busy) is a spiritual one. Spending time in meditation with God is slowly allowing me to do less and relax into the agenda any given day or week brings my way. This is the way I have found it possible not only to reduce the number of activities in my life, but to feel less stress around all that I still am doing.

Being harried really is our own responsibility. You do not have to respond to the pressure to buy. You do not have to say yes to everything friends or even bosses ask you to do. You do not have to make productivity and success a god. You can choose. You can say no.

The process of taking charge of your life begins, hopefully, with reflection rather than heartattack or high bloodpressure or mononucleosis. Claim some time, create some emotional space and look at your life style. Who or what is in charge? Where does the pressure come from? What do you really value in yourself and with others? I have found that learning to trust God's love for me has led to a real increase in the ease of living, life. Whatever it is for you, you'd better take charge of your life or life will continue to lead you from one harried day to another.

SEA*SQUAWK

TRISH MCHENRY

What is wrong with our generation? Why do we sit back and let others make decisions for us? Everyone has opinions. Why don't we let our opinions be known?

The college students of the 60's and early 70's are remembered for being anti-establishment and rebellious: are we, the students of the 80's going to be remembered for being apathetic and uncaring? It's our decision.

It's not that we don't care, it's that we're lazy. I hear people on campus voicing their opinions to friends all the time, but usually, that's as far as they go. We all know of things going on in this world, even on this campus, that we have strong feelings about, but we don't speak out. I don't mean to put us all in the same category, I know that there are some that get involved, but numbers are few. We all need to get involved in the world around us. It's time for our generation to get off its behind and start fighting for what we believe in.

No matter who or what you believe in, your opinion needs to be heard. The United States is a democracy for the people: we are the people. How are the leaders of this country supposed to know what we want from them, if we don't tell them? The same idea applies on this campus also. How are our needs and interests supposed to be met if we don't let organizations like the SGA know what we want?

If we don't speak out for what we believe in, then we have no right to complain. It's our life and our future, so let's try to have some input. For every opinion you hold there are probably at least thirty other students on campus that feel the same way. If you all got together, you could make a difference. And if you don't know what's going on in the world around you it's time to start learning. Read the newspaper, watch the news. The sources are available so ignorance is not excusable. We won't always have others to take care of things for us. One day we'll be the leaders of this country. Let show some responsibility.

GREEK COLUMNS

CHERYL GRIMES

The sisters of Delta Zeta Sorority are proud to be a part of the UNCW Greek system and we have just celebrated our sixth year on the UNCW campus. On November 3, our annual Founder's Day/Parent's Day Banquet was held in the University Union to celebrate the establishment of Delta Zeta at UNCW. We were honored to have Sandy Bass, Delta Zeta Province Collegiate Director for North and South Carolina, as the guest speaker, and Norma Robertshaw, the Order of the Golden Rose recipient (50 year member), in attendance. Other guests included members of the local alumnae club, Ellen Servetnick, Greek advisor, and the parents of the Delta Zeta sisters and pledges.

In the six years that Delta Zeta has been at UNCW, there has been a lot of growth in chapter membership. Currently, we are proud to have forty-nine active members. Membership increased so dramatically in the past year that the Xi Theta chapter received the Membership Award at National Convention held in Scottsdale, Arizona this past summer.

Along with the increase in membership, Delta Zeta has continued to increase their involvement in campus and community activities. Several of these include adopting a loggerhead turtle nest, a program designed to protect them from extinction; sponsoring a non-alcoholic mock-tail bar during Alcohol Awareness Week, and hosting the reception of the Miss UNCW Pageant.

We are also proud to have individual sisters recognized inside and outside the community for their achievements and service. Susie Marshburn received the Alumnae Scholarship Award given by the local alumnae club. Sally Wedgeworth and Wendy Crowson both received awards at this past year's Province Day. Sally received the Golden Crest Award and Wendy was chosen as an Outstanding Collegian in North and South Carolina. The chapter received awards for our pledge program, rush, and the Most Improved Chapter Award.

As the university is growing and changing, so does the role that Greeks on this campus play. Delta Zeta is pleased to be a part of this growth and hope that all Greek organizations continue to strengthen and play an increasingly active part on this campus.

CAMPUS DEMOCRAT

I will give this to the Republicans: they talk a good game. Listen to their campaign speeches, and they will convince you that they're all for good roads and schools, tax relief for everybody, generous retirement benefits for the elderly, a fair shake for textile workers and tobacco farmers, and above all, a painless budget.

But take another look at the Republican record in Congress. You might find a few surprises. The Republicans are not necessarily up there fighting for the farmers, the elderly, the taxpayers, or young people who are going to inherit the deficits this Republican administration is pulling up. In fact the Republican seldom live up to the image they try to project back home.

For instance:

* On July 29th 1981 North Carolina Republican Congressmen Broyhill, Hendon and Jim Martin voted to amend the 1981 tax cut to direct more of the benefits to wealthy and corporate special interests, while denying real tax relief to working people and small businesses.

* Test after test show that early education programs, like Head Start, help children do better in school and, in the long run, save the government money when these kids grow up to get good jobs, instead of dropping out or getting into trouble. But in 1977, Congressmen Broyhill and Martin voted to cut 240,000 children from the Title I program and keep Head Start from reaching 40,000 children.

STILLPOINT

BOB HAYWOOD

CAMPUS MINISTER

I am both impressed and scared about how good a job culture is doing in training us for the American Way of Life! Even here at UNC-W the social forces of our larger culture are hard at work guiding us irrevocably towards a self-destructive life style. And the major symptom of this process is captured beautifully in a descriptive word "Harried".

A questionnaire answered by 600 women at a national convention last year, an overwhelming majority listed as a chief cause of tension; "too much to do and not enough time to do it." An overcrowded life is indeed a major cause of tension. Doctor says that the corroding influence of too much pressure on our bodies can cause Osteoarthritis, headaches, heartattacks, asthma, ulcers, and colon problems.

Leading such frenetic lives is also serious because we can divide our attention over so many areas that we usually only do one or maybe two things well or perhaps none. And we may discover that what we have been doing well is not really what is important to us.

Talking about the stress that results from such harried lives seems to have replaced sex as a major topic of conversation, of books and of workshops! And we are all well aware how harried we are! Still, the pressure to do, to consume, to produce, to become comes from every quarter of our American culture, including the church, and seems to overwhelm any urge to moderate our busy lives.

NCSL UPDATE

JOSEPH PRESSLEY

The UNCW delegation of the North Carolina Student Legislature will be traveling to Greensboro for the November Interim Council, Nov. 22-24.

According to Delegation Chairperson, Charles Gavins, "We have 27 members, the largest number of members in our nine year history in NCSL." Gavins also stressed the strength of UNCW in the state organization.

"We had problems with the first IC in Raleigh due to the hurricane, with only eleven people attending," stated Gavins. The school was well represented at the October IC with sixteen traveling to Chapel Hill. UNCW and UNC-CH had the two largest delegations.

At the October IC, a number controversial issues were debated including a resolution concerning SIDI research and a resolution dealing with racist organizations.

The UNCW delegation played an instrumental part in defeating the racist organizations resolution. Gavins commented, "The resolution was well-intentioned but poorly-constructed to accomplish what the author wanted. There were constitutional uncertainties regarding certain portions. If the author had been more willing to compromise, NCSL would have passed the resolution."

The delegation is looking forward to attending two IC's and Annual Session in Raleigh this Spring. They are also hoping to host the April IC. With the increased membership, the delegation plans on being a major factor in NCSL politics.

The Friends of UNC-W posed for a photo as they toured the campus recently. The group is headed by Janice Kingoff. The purpose of The Friends is to fund various departments of the university.

THIRD WORLD VIDEO TO BE PRESENTED

SONYA THOMPSON

The League of Women Voters of New Hanover County will present "The Third World Challenge to U.S. Policy", a video program focusing on strategic and economic approaches to U.S. relations with developing countries, on Nov. 21 at 7:30 pm in Bryan Auditorium, Morton Hall at UNC-W. This video presentation, which features officials such as U.S. Ambassador Otto Reich, Coordinator of Public Diplomacy for Latin America and the Caribbean and Moen A. Querishi, Senior Vice-President, The World Bank, highlights specific issues such as increasing U.S. reliance on security assistance and the problem of third world debt.

Following the video presentation, Dr. Syed Ahmad, political scientist, and Dr. Denis Carter, economist, from UNC-W will present analyses of the issues raised in the film and lead audience discussion.

This video, produced by the National League of Women Voters, is being presented around the country this fall as an educational service by local leagues. In New Hanover County, the video will be presented in some social studies classes in several public and private high schools. For more information, call Jan Rouse, president of the local league, at 392-7233.

PIGTALES

From the University Program Board to you the general student body and faculty, we would like to share the events to come as well as a review of the events past.

On November 8th, there was a talent show with Jeff Justice that turned out very well. I would like to commend everyone on an outstanding performance and encourage more people to participate next year.

On November 20th at 8:00 in Kenan Auditorium, Tim Settimi, mime, comedian, and clown will be performing. His opening act is Taylor Mason. Come join us for the fun filled evening with plenty of laughs.

November 22nd brings us back to Half-Moon Productions presenting Brian Huskey. He classifies himself as a humorous acoustic rocker, comedian, and pretty darn good at other stuff. He will be performing from 4:00-6:00, room 100 of the Union.

If you have friends, why not send them a carnation. Between November 11th and November 15th the residence life committee will be selling carnations in the Union Foyer.

That about raps it up. Come out and see what we have to offer. You're bound to find something you like.

become aware of the added costs smokers place upon companies. No Smoking Policies are becoming a more common reality. As you prepare yourself to enter the work force, you need to consider this.

The Surgeon General has stated that although the government will not attempt to ban smoking, his goal is to rid society of smoking by the year 2,000. He states, "the smoker of 1995 likely will be segregated from society, and forced to practice his habit alone, or outdoors."

Think about it, and if you want to quit, take advantage of the Great American Smokeout this Thursday, November 21, or stop by the Student Health and Wellness Center to speak with a health care provider. BE WELL.

The Student Health & Wellness Center

"Get off my back." Have you ever said this to someone or have had someone say it to you about smoking? Encouraging someone you care about to stop, or trying to stop yourself is no easy task, but it is something we must not give up on.

Most people are aware of the hazards of smoking, so Wellnotes will not dwell on these numerous as they are. Instead, let's look into the future.

A major issue for the 80's is NO SMOKING POLICIES in the workplace. To non-smokers it is almost a dream come true; to smokers it may be a nightmare. It has been estimated that employing a smoker costs $1000 more a year than a non-smoker. Seattle University notes that the employee who smokes wastes time, takes more sick leave, and uses the health system more. If you smoke, you need to know that legally employers can discriminate against smokers by refusing to hire them. As more and more employees

FORENSICS COMPETE

TRAVIS PARKER

The UNCW Forensics Team spent a rainy Halloween weekend competing in the ASU Mountain Forensics Tournament in Boone. The contributions made by the debate team of Doug Hargett and Bill Hogan, along with the Individual Events competitors, UNCW placed fourth in I.E. and Debate Combined Sweepstakes.

Mitch Butts held the record for individual awards on the UNCW Team with a total of 6. He was awarded 3rd place with a persuasive speech on the hazards of smokeless tobacco, along with 3rd in Extemporaneous and 4th in Impromptu Speaking. He and Rick Olsen together placed 2nd in Duo Interpretation with the play "The Constant." Butts also had another Duo in finals, "Duck Hunting With My Brother" with Travis Parker, which earned each of them a fourth place trophy. Butts placed fourth in Penetration—the overall individual speaker award of the tournament.

Olsen also won second place in rhetorical criticism with an analysis of the radio show "A Prairie Home Companion," and 4th in After-Dinner Speaking.

The Team is now preparing for their next tournament at Marshall University in Huntington, West Virginia, November 21-23, 1985.

CADET PROGRAM

KATHY KIEHL
JOURNALISM CONTRIBUTOR

Wilmington Police Department offers a cadet program for students majoring in Sociology with a main tract geared towards Criminal Justice. Right now the program involves two students from UNCW, Jennifer Thompson and Jeryl Brown and four from Cape Fear Technical School. The program is unique because it allows a student to work a 40 hour week and be a full time student. While in class the students stay on the clock and are considered to be at work. All school fees are reimbursed at the end of the semester pending on a grade of C or above.

The requirements are that the person applying be 19 years of age or older and a high school graduate. They also must be attending a school of higher education with a career goal of law enforcement.

The duties of a cadet are that they must work as a desk officer. This involves taking care of walk in complaints, keeping a logbook from the police radio, distributing paper work, and processing prisoners which includes fingerprinting and photographing. The job often exposure to aspects of law enforcement, and administrative experience.

specialized position which is an evidence custodian. This position is held by Jennifer Thompson. Her duties include receiving, logging, storing, and securing all physical evidence which is brought in, or found. She is responsible for releasing items to officers for court use, locating owners of found property and sending material to the State Bureau of Investigation for further investigation. It is also her responsibility to destroy drugs and fire arms. Miss Thompson plans to attend rookie school beginning December 2nd for ten weeks.

There are plans for this coming January to add three additional specialized jobs, similar to the evidence custodian. The idea is for the cadets to rotate their specialized jobs every six months enabling them to experience all aspects of the field. The Wilmington Police are trying to change their current program more into a training program rather than a support program.

If interested contact Carol Lee, the Administrative Assistant of the Wilmington Police for an application. It is an ideal opportunity for students interested in law enforcement and getting their education paid for while obtaining practical experience.

GRADUATION??

WENDY CROWSON

Graduation to some seems far away, but believe it or not the planning for this years Graduation has already begun. Tim Dillenger President of this years Senior class has already begun meeting with Mr. Ty Rowell of the Development office, on planning what he calls a more dignified graduation. So far the speaker for graduation has not been determined but some names mentioned were Gov. Jim Martin and Congressman Charlie Rose. Dillenger describes last years graduation as unorganized and ill planned. He also believes the choice of Marshalls was ludicrous and wants to have it so that the new Senior class President and the Junior with the highest grade point averaged will be the Marshalls for this years graduation.

One change that Dillenger wants is more student participation in the ceremony. He feels that too much administration participation occurs. This is evident in that the graduation committee has only two students out of the supposedly five hundred graduating in it. Mr. Dillenger hopes that many changes will occur to make this graduation a memorable experience for students as well as the administration.

UNCW AT CHAMPIONSHIP?

Imagine for a moment. It's the championship game of the NCAA basketball tournament in late March. 15,000 people cram into the Dallas Civic Center to watch Georgia Tech play the darkest of darkhorses--UNCW--for the national championship.

Four seconds remain on the clock, the darling of the Dallas crowd, UNCW, trails by one. Bobby Jo Springer puts up a jumper from 18. No good. Brian Rowsom, however, grabs the rebound and puts it back up. As the horn sounds, the ball rolls around the rim and...

The odds are that we will not know this season whether or not the Seahawks win the national championship with Rowsom's follow. But as the season gets underway this month, it is important for UNCW students to realize that out of the 270-plus teams that are eligible to win the national Division I crown, many can be counted out before the season begins, but not UNCW.

There are some characteristics of a championship team. A dominating center and a flashy point guard aren't enough (UNCW has both of these), but a champion needs support. Fan support.

Reaching the final four would be a miracle for UNCW many feel. But remember, this is college basketball, the home of miracles. Villanova proved that last March. And UNC Charlotte showed in 1977 when it reached the final four that the Big Four teams aren't the only source of basketball in the Tar Heel state.

Imagine again. UNCW wins half of its Colonial Athletic Association games this season, good enough for a fourth-place regular season finish, and the right to host a first-round post-season tournament game.

A sellout crowd of 6,100 cram into Trask Coliseum, wearing the Green and Gold of the Hawks. The crowd, the largest since the arena was opened in 1977 against Wake Forest, makes such incredible amounts of noise that the opponent is rattled, while that same noise pumps adrenalin through the veins of the Hawks, who go on to win the game by one point. The victory, the most important in school history, gives UNCW momentum enough to upset Navy in the tournament finals and receive its first-ever NCAA Tournament bid.

Your imagination doesn't have to be too vivid to realize, that this could happen in 1985-86. There needs to be people and noise this season. You, the students, can make a difference.

It's hard to understand why a student wouldn't want to watch the Hawks this year. UNCW has a good record in Trask, it has a pre-season all-conference performer in center Brian Rowsom, and the team could realistically finish third or fourth in the eight-team league. In addition, the $10,000 homestead will be done again this year, with Dominoe's writing a check for ten grand to the lucky person who makes a shot from halfcourt during half-time of each UNCW home game.

Yes, maybe some schools know before the season ever begins that their team has absolutely no chance to be NCAA champions. For example, everyone knows that no Ivy League team will win it, no way. Nor will any team from the states of Montana, Maine, Idaho or North and South Dakota. Ditto for any team that begins with a direction like northeast or southwest, like Southwest Missouri State or something.

Then there are teams like UNCW; teams that separate a state and a city by a hyphen. Never, ever, count teams out. UNC-Charlotte showed that. And certainly let's not forget a little school out west called University of California-Los Angeles. They have had mild success the last two decades.

BASKETBALL

DEAN BUCHAN

Likely Lady Hawk starters include freshman Johnnie Smith at the point, sophomores Phyllis Edwards and Sissy Morse at the wings, and Elizabeth Bell in the frontcourt. The fifth starter could be one of four candidates including senior Sue Dean.

UNC-Wilmington men's and women's basketball teams kick-off their respective 1985-86 campaigns with road dates on Nov. 23 and Nov. 26 respectively.

Coach Mel Gibson's Seahawks venture far away from the friendly confines of Trask Coliseum Saturday, Nov. 23 when they travel to West Point, N.Y. to play Army. The game will officially open Army's new arena.

The Lady Seahawks, who begin their second year of NCAA Division I play, journey to Greenville, SC, to play Furman in the season opener for both teams.

Army's Cadets had their first winning season last year since 1979. Three starters return off of last year's 16-13 club. Gone off of last year's team is high-scoring Randy Cozzens, who was voted the Metro Atlantic Athletic Conference Player of the Year last year.

The Lady Paladins of Furman are a similar team to that of UNCW's. Both are beginning their second year of NCAA Division I play, and both have three key starters returning. Furman was 7-18 last season, but had an excellent recruiting year.

The likely starting lineup for UNCW in its opener will be senior Bobby Jo Springer and junior Sandy Anderson at the guards, and junior standout Brian Rowsom at the center. Freshmen Greg Bender may get the nod at the small forward, while Charles Cherry, Kevan Miles and Ben Pittman are battling for the power forward spot.

By Nancy Johnson

ALL MY CHILDREN: Tad nixed helping Dottie to break up Hillary and Andrew. Erica flipped when Adam backed Brooke to win the Woman of the Year contest.

ANOTHER WORLD: Carl murdered Daphne, then framed Cass for the crime. Mac's secretary was killed by a poison Carl had meant to kill Mac with. Zane and Felicia renewed their romance.

AS THE WORLD TURNS: Lily feels uncomfortable whenever she's around Holden. Kevin found a body in the Corbman mansion. Marie seemingly disappeared into thin air.

CAPITOL: Trey made public his relationship to Kelly and Scotty. Dylan and Brenda are suspected of killing thug, Griff. Zed vowed to stop Josh's plots against Victor.

DAYS OF OUR LIVES: Kimberly

saved Shane from being eaten up by alligators. Bo and Hope avoided a run-in with Patch. Bo and Hope were trapped on Victor's yacht.

GENERAL HOSPITAL: Kim and Mr. Wu realized there's a spy working within their organization. A frightened Robin hid in the hospital. Yank and Jade exchanged kisses.

GUIDING LIGHT: David gave a hypnotized Billy a gun, then told him to kill Kyle. Mindy and Kurt were married in an outdoor ceremony. Maevie isn't feeling well.

LOVING: At the start of Steve's rape trial, Trisha and Cecil came to blows. Cabot fumed that Dane wants to put Ann into a sanitarium because of her drinking problem.

ONE LIFE TO LIVE: Bo and Woody realized that Clay is the one who sabotaged prints of their film, "Backfire." Tina urged Niki (Viki) to divorce Clint. Clay held a gun on Woody.

RYAN'S HOPE: At Ryan's request, Max gave D.I. a college scholarship. Jack and Betty arrived at the same nightclub that Dakota took Sarah Jane (Jill) to.

SANTA BARBARA: Nick, Carlo, Sam and Dylan all searched for the whereabouts of an African gold mine. Gina furthered her plot to frame Eden for murder.

SEARCH FOR TOMORROW: Hogan and Sunny met a farmer who's been poisoned by the toxic substance in Henderson's water supply. Lisa vowed to save Tournier instrument reputation.

THE YOUNG AND THE RESTLESS: Traci was grateful to Brad for helping her cope with her divorce from Danny. Paul is suspicious of Lauren's weird behavior of late.

Miss Manners

DEAR MISS MANNERS: How does a professional address correspondence to relatives when it is strictly business mail and involves non-relatives who are entitled to copies of the correspondence? Obviously a "Dear Mother" salutation with copies to attorneys and financial institutions is inappropriate, but I feel uncomfortable with "Dear Mrs. Connor" even though the subject matter is business, and in some ways it seems that, to business addressees, I am denying the relationship.

GENTLE READER: You are quite right that your mother's bank may be started to receive a copy of a "Dear Mommy" letter, and also that your mother might start wondering, if you address her as Mrs. Connor, whether the illusion of being an adult has gone to your head.

So you do both. One on top of the other. Address the letter formally, as you do all business correspondence. Then take your pen, the one she gave you for high school graduation, and draw a line through "Dear Mrs. Connor." In your own little hand, which she can read, replace it with "Dear Mother."

At the ending, cross out "Yours very truly" and write "Love and kisses" or whatever, and above where

"Charles H. Connor, III" is typed, sign "Chucky."

Miss Manners promises you it won't show up on the carbon. Only your mother will know.

DEAR MISS MANNERS: Am I correct in the belief that you should answer all letters that have self-addressed stamped envelopes?

I am the senior aunt of a large California family. We have taken up a collection now and then over the last 50 years. When my niece, who had two small girls and a husband who drank and would not work, asked me for help in getting a divorce, I suggested a collection from the family.

I loaned out my surplus and, when I have more, will pick up remaining bills. I have a special fund that I keep just for this.

I sent out 20 letters to uncles, aunts, sisters, brothers and cousins. There was no sum mentioned. Anything would be welcome, and I would make up the rest.

One letter was returned. One brother, and my son and his wife, called to say they would help. Other letters weren't answered.

I have given dinners, parties, showers, etc., with 30 of these people and their children, and I think that out of respect, they could have answered me.

GENTLE READER:

Well yes. People always answer their letters, self-addressed envelopes or no, and especially those of such a generous nature.

But unless the custom of family collections is an institution known and practiced by all of these people, Miss Manners is afraid your letters were misclassified with the many less personal fund-raising appeals everyone gets.

It is not that she thinks your siblings and cousins mistook you for the Divorce Foundation, but that resentment of an unusual tactic, or disagreement with your premise of mutual financial support in extended families, made them treat you so. A highly personal and confidential letter to each, along the lines of "I know you're pressed, too, with a child in college, but I wonder if you could help me get poor Sarah on her feet again," rather than a general declaration, might have been better received.

Nevertheless, you have made your request and received responses, however negative. Miss Manners feels you should not press the issue, because it would serve no purpose to hear now this one cannot afford it or that one, who told your niece she should never have married the man, now feels she got what she deserved.

Let us hope that the non-responders never find themselves in want of extended family help.

hostesses, and as member Wendy Clowson put it, "we were honored to be asked to put this reception on. We worked hard on it, and I hope the people who attend enjoy it."

During this reception, the contestants presented both Allan Dudley and Melissa Collins with a plaque to commemorate all their hard work. Allan also received a special cake for his efforts.

In retrospect, Allan Dudley said he was "proud" of the pageant and that he and his staff will "hold their heads high" in recognition of their hard work.

The pageant was the culmination of three months' work on the part of Allan and his staff. Allan began thinking of this pageant as early as July, but no real planning and organization was done until around the end of August.

Soon after the pageant had begun, the Faculty Women's Network began to voice complaints over the pageant being a "beauty contest" emphasizing a very shallow view of a woman's importance on campus. This controversy lead to the pageant's name being changed to include "scholarship."

One member of the Faculty Women's Network attended the pageant, Sylvia K. Polgar, a sociology professor on campus, commented afterward that the pageant was "well-run, despite mishaps, and very neatly organized by Allan Dudley and his staff." Her attendance at the pageant was as an anthropological observer, she noted, not as a critic. She did, however, find a couple of problems with the pageant, but she feels that these problems are inherent in all pageants.

The pageant was very white-oriented, she observed. There was only one black contestant, and just a few blacks in attendance. The song "Old Man River" was sung by a white male, and the only other portrayal of blacks was as sexy dancers. All of this seem to point towards an insensitivity towards the image of blacks, but not necessarily a deliberate insensitivity.

Dr. Polgar's other observation was the same complaint raised by the Faculty Women's Network, that women were being judged on looks and appearance rather than accomplishment and talent. This is a problem all pageants have, she noted. They seem to project women as objects instead of well-rounded individuals.

However, Dr. Polgar and a faculty member accompanying her did not feel the pageant was degrading to women.

Allan Dudley was very pleased with this pageant and is beginning plans for next year's. He issued a personal thank you to Brad Alexander, Jenni Brown, Michael Gilchrist, Cece Wall, Nancy White, Wil Wilkinson, technical consultant Renee Brantley, Dottie Robertson, Sharon Simmons, Kerri Whelan, Chandra Marley, Kitty Mahoney, Sara Skinner, and the SGA, plus a very special thank you to Ernie Meyer and Sigma Delta Psi.

The third Annual Festival of Trees in Wilmington, NC begins Saturday, November 30, 1985 and runs through Friday, December 6, 1985 in the Hilton Inn Grand Ballroom. The Festival is a holiday event that will benefit Hospice, a program of care and support for terminally ill patients and their families in assisting them to live life to the fullest...caring...sharing...serving. Sixty Christmas trees have been purchased by community sponsors and will be decorated by various clubs, individuals, or businesses in differing themes. Trees will be displayed within a coordinated setting within the Ballroom during the seven-day event. After the Festival closes, the trees will be returned to the donor or delivered to a designated individual or community facility as a gift.

Santa's Shoppe, a place to shop for Christmas gifts with items donated by various community groups, will be a featured part of the event. A cookbook will be featured by Hospice entitled "Festival of Foods". Adults and children alike can admire doll collections, displays from the Teddy Bear Club, an antique toys display, creche collection, trains, home furnishings, art items, a 22-foot tree in the downstairs Hilton Lobby, and a Christmas Dinner Table. Doll houses, duck decoys, miniature collections, and antiques will also be on display.

Two trees are being specially decorated by Friends of Hospice. One is a Memorial Tree with ornaments created in memory of Hospice patients who have died. Another is a Christmas Tree with all the religious ornaments featured.

Continuous live musical entertainment will be a highlight of the Festival. Musical presentations will vary from solos on piano, guitar, and harpsicord to school and church bands and choruses.

A raffle will be held for two Vogue Bears with Wardrobes, and an intricate hand-made quilt, and an attractive solid oak end table with a pair of quail professionally mounted by Bruce Bolick in their natural setting. Each raffle ticket will be a $1.00 donation to Hospice. The drawing will be held December 6th. Ticket holders do not have to be present to win.

The Festival of Trees will open with a black-tie Patron's Party, Friday, November 29, at 7:00 p.m. in the Hilton Grand Ballroom.

Tours may be arranged through Brenda Mitwol of Wilmington. They will include shopping and a tour of the downtown Historic District. The Hilton is also offering special discount rates for weekend accommodations.

Tickets for admissions are $3.00 and may be purchased at the door or $2.00 for tickets bought in advance. (Children $1.00) See you at the Festival of Trees!

On Sunday November 10, at Crystal Pier, on Wrightsville Beach the UNC-W Surfing Club held the Fall Surf Challenge. The contest was basically between UNC-W and East Carolina University surfing clubs. UNC-Chapel Hill was also represented but with three surfers from that school participating they were not a threat for top honors in the team placing.

Conditions for the event were excellent with light winds, sunny skies and a two-three foot swell. The respective schools were broken down into seven man teams with team points being decided from the first round results. UNC-W surfers took first in four of the five first round heats thus assuring themselves of the team title.

In the individual surfing, UNC-W was overwhelming again gaining four of the five spots in the final. One of the best surprises of the event was the fine performance put in by Keith Buckhold of UNC-W. Buckhold squeaked by in all of his early heats but still showed great poise in gaining his first trip to the finals of a UNC-W event.

As the finals got underway the waves had begun to get quite mushy making it difficult for the surfers to get the long rides that score high. One surfer that being Tom Burris rode three waves from the outside sand bar all the way to the beach. Second place finisher Bryan Tracy was consistent as usual but couldn't outdo Burris and those incredibly long rides. A fine performance was also put in by Tracy Peters a familiar face in contest finals.

The UNC-W Surfing Club sends our thanks to Clark Wallin (ESA director) and Gordon & Smith surfwear sales representative Rik Beitel for their support and help of UNC-W surfing events.

Trophies were awarded to first and second place teams and first thru fifth place individuals. Also Gordon & Smith surfwear was awarded to first thru third place individual.

Contest results are as follows:

Team: First place-UNC-W, Second place-ECU

Individual: First place-Tom Burris-UNC-W; Second place-Bryan Tracy-UNC-W; Third place-Tracy Peters-UNC-W; Fourth place-John McCann-ECU; Fifth place-Keith Buckhold-UNC-W.

CHAMBER SINGERS RECOGNIZED

NANCY BURKHARDT

One group not widely known on campus but which has regional recognition is the UNC-W Chamber Singers, directed by Dr. Joe Hickman. The Chamber Singers is a select group of singers from the Concert Choir. The group strives for ensemble -- musicians harmonize together producing a particular effect. Twenty-four members make up the Chamber Singers.

Currently the group is in the midst of a concert tour. Early renaissance pieces to popular music, some not even published yet, make up the program. The group performed at the St. John's Museum of Art on Friday, November 8, and then went to Winston Salem where they performed at the North Carolina Music Educator Association Convention. They were on to the Duke Chapel. On December 9, the Chamber Singers will perform for the Campus Christmas Candle Light Service. Then they are on to the St. James Episcopal Church for the Wilmington By Candlelight tour. The semester will be wrapped up with a T.V. special to be televised on December 18, on WECT. The concert will be directed toward children ages three and up.

Next semester the Chamber Singers are looking forward to spending Spring Break in England where they will be performing at such places as Canterbury Cathedral. Also in the spring the singers will be working on a recording project.

To become a member of the Chamber Singers you must have a preliminary audition with Dr. Joe Hickman, Assistant Professor of Music. Then a cut is made and singers are put together in ensembles for a few days to see if they can work together to get that "ensemble" sound. Finally, the group is cut to the "perfect" twenty-four.

Auditions are beginning now for spring semester for both the Chamber Singers and the Concert Choir. Only a placement audition is needed to become a member of the Concert Choir. If you are interested in becoming a part of these fine organizations, give it a try, for as Dr. Hickman says, "We are always looking for new singers!"

GRAHAM HALL DEDICATED

UNCW NEWS BUREAU

Frederick B. Graham Residence Hall was officially named and dedicated in services beginning at 11:30 a.m., Tuesday, Nov. 12 immediately in front of the building.

Previously known as dorm 79, the four-story structure houses 200 men and women. It was occupied in 1979 and was designed by Boney Architects. The 40,000 square-foot building is the third one built at UNCW using a suite arrangement, a departure from the previous typically long hall of rooms and gang baths.

The building is named to honor Frederick B. Graham in recognition of his many contributions to UNC-W. Graham was a member of the original board of trustees of Wilmington College (1958-1969) and chairman (1968-69) of the trustees until the college became part of the greater University of North Carolina in 1969. He served as chairman of the building committee and was instrumental in locating the campus at its present site. He provided leadership and financial support to establish the Wilmington College Foundation, and his commitment and enthusiasm for Wilmington College were a major force in the establishment and development of the institution.

Moreover, admissions officials say Asian students usually lack other attributes that increase their chances of being admitted, such as athletic or musical talent, or alumni references.

Thursday, November 21, 1985 is the Great American Smokeout. During the day, the Student Health and Wellness Center/Office of Health Promotion will be sponsoring a free film entitled, "THE FEMININE MISTAKE". The film lasts 25 minutes and takes a realistic look at what happens to women who smoke, and addresses several compelling reasons to stop smoking--now.

The film will be shown in Room 100 of the University Union at the following times: 10:00; 11:00; 12:00; 1:00; 2:00

SCHOOLS MAY BE DISCRIMINATING TO ASIAN STUDENTS

COURTESY CPS

Some schools may in fact be discriminating against Asian-American students--who as a group score highest on most kinds of standardized aptitude tests--U.S. Secretary of Education William Bennett told a Vietnamese organization in California last week.

The speech marked the first time a high-ranking official has acknowledged persistent complaints that several prestigious universities have informal quotas for admitting Asian-American students.

Bennett told the group that figures gathered by Asian-American student associations "might suggest that unofficial quotas are in effect."

"The evidence is less than conclusive, and it is possible that factors other than anti-Asian discrimination are at work here," Bennett said.

Administrators counter that any appearance of discrimination may be because Asian-American students tend to aim high.

Many Asian-American, they say, apply to limited programs like pre-med, and so suffer a higher rate of rejection.

But if conclusive evidence of discrimination is uncovered, Bennett promised the department will take action.

But a department spokesman later said the department won't initiate a probe unless someone files a complaint.

And a key official in one prominent Asian-American anti-discrimination group is skeptical of Bennett's professed willingness to investigate.

"This sounds like more Reagan administration rhetoric to me," says Philip Tajitsu Nash, an attorney with the Asian-American Legal and Educational Defense Fund.

"It borders on being hypocritical. What Asian-American really need is more money for all types of educational programs, and what this administration is giving them is more bombs. That's the crux of the problem."

Nevertheless, Bennett's statement suggests that, after years of publicizing admissions figures that indicate some of the country's most prestigious schools have quotas, the Asian-American groups have succeeded in bringing attention to the issue.

And because Asian-Americans are the fastest-growing minority among college students, the issue may well spread.

On the east coast, the concern centers on Ivy League schools. At Princeton, for example, figures gathered by students indicate that, while the numbers of Asian-Americans applying for admission has tripled in recent years, the number accepted has remained constant.

"It's hard for me to believe there has not been some kind of limit placed on Asians," says Regina Lee, Who graduated from Princeton earlier this year and who met repeatedly with administrators there to discuss the issue.

On the west coast, student groups pelted University of California administrators at Los Angeles and Berkeley with complaints after the percentage of Asian-Americans admitted dropped substantially in 1983 and 1984.

Administrators uniformly deny there is any discrimination. They note the proportion of Asians applying to college is much higher than for other minority groups.

And they say that while Asians generally rank high on academic criteria, they are often pre-med, science or engineering majors, which limits their enrollment opportunities.

"The question is not one of race, it's academic balance," Brown admissions director James Rogers said last spring. At Brown, 70 to 75 percent of all Asian applicants plan to be pre-med majors, Rogers said.

Moreover, admissions officials say Asian students usually lack other attributes that increase their chances of being admitted, such as athletic or musical talent, or alumni references.

WSEA TO BROADCAST SOON

Are you tired of the limited variety of music and seemingly endless number of ads on the radio today? Well if you are (and even if you aren't) you're in luck! WSEA, the campus radio station, is about to begin broadcasting. Through the hard work of radio club members, including General Manager Marc Burleson, Program Director Lance O'Brien, and Music Director Doug Cameron, the station will be broadcasting from the University near the beginning of the spring semester.

COMPUTER DATING SERVICE

Yes, UNCW has finally caught up with the computer age thanks to two enterprising freshmen, Nelson March and Patric Zimmes. What these two young men are doing, is setting up a computer dating program which Residence Life is sponsoring. The program is established as a fun activity but is also being geared towards stimulating interest in the Semi-formal Dance on December 7th although there is no obligation to take one of your ten choices to the dance.

The questionnaires are available in the RA offices for on-campus as well as off-campus students. The forms should be returned to the RA office by November 25th in Room 414-416 Hewlett Hall. At that time, a one dollar donation will be requested to cover expenses. Be sure to go by and get your results.

HOUSEKEEPERS HONORED

UNCW Residence Halls House Keeper Appreciation Day was Nov. 18, 1985.

The residents and staff in the residence life area would like to dedicate this day as Housekeeper Appreciation Day. We appreciate all that you do for us.

Thank you Housekeepers: Helen Washington, Cheryl Miller, Clara Butcher, Sylvia Gibbs, Minnie Lee, Mary Claude, Velma Dailey, Alice Lowe, Ann Moore, Debra Williams, Hilda Walker, Mendal Harper, Eliza Miller, Clarence Shavers, Inez Dykes, Bob Bickery.

AIDS SCARE SPREADING

College Press Service

Soon after a psychologist visited the University of Arkansas campus last spring to urge that gays be quarantined to stop the spread of AIDS, Gay Pride Week in Fayetteville, Arizona became an unusually traumatic episode.

Members of gay and lesbian groups were verbally assaulted in letters and newspaper advertisements and threatened with a makeshift bomb that fizzled before its makers could detonate it properly. "It made us nervous because they were so loud and so adamant," says Linda Lovell, an officer of the university's gay and lesbian group.

While campuses never have been very friendly to gay groups -- heterosexual students, administrators and even state legislators in Oklahoma, Texas, Washington, D.C., Maryland and other places regularly have tried to ban or hobble the groups -- college medical officials say intensified anti-gay activity is likely to be one of the first signs AIDS hysteria has spread to campuses. According to Catherine Vangelow at the Student Health & Wellness Center, there have been no cases of AIDS reported at UNCW.

It could get worse, they say. If AIDS (acquired immune deficiency syndrome) becomes widespread in the heterosexual community.

Most health officials note that, statistically, every college campus in the United States soon can expect to have at least one student, teacher or administrator with AIDS.

And many say that without preventive measures, it's only a matter of time until the hysteria now swirling around primary and secondary schools precedes the diseases to colleges.

A number of national higher education groups already are trying to fashion guidelines for coping with the disease and the fears surrounding it.

"It's going to depend on the extent of the educational efforts made by institutions," says Dr. Richard Keeling of the University of Virginia medical center, chairman of an AIDS task force established by the American College Health Association.

"If college officials take a narrow perspective and make little in the way of an educational effort, rumors and discontent will fester," Keeling warns, "and colleges will get swept along in the same AIDS hysteria that affects other segments of society."

Experts fear a massive disruption of college life: students fleeing dorms, teachers insisting their offices be moved far from colleagues with the disease, students refusing to take classes taught by AIDS victims.

Keeling says in the dozen or so cases in which administrators have had to deal with AIDS victims, they have responded correctly.

But Lovell thinks Arkansas officials were part of the problem.

"Our administration does not feel any ethical or moral need to provide information on AIDS or to make public comment when others spread false information," she complains.

"They let a speaker who calls for the quarantine of gays come to campus, and they don't say a word about it."

Dr. Robert Wirag, director of the university's health center, says his staff was prepared to respond to inquiries about AIDS.

But he says it would have been a mistake to make an unsolicited public presentation at that time.

"If we had, we would have poured more fuel on that emotionally-charged fire," he says.

Lovell, however, notes the uproar dissipated after state health officials held a press conference in Fayetteville and branded the anti-gay rhetoric false and irresponsible.

"That took a lot of arguments away from the anti-gay crowd," Lovell says.

AIDS fears apparently also prompted onlookers at a University of Texas parade last spring to verbally assault and pelt gay marchers with beer bottles, rocks and garbage.

"The violence was justified," a liberal arts major subsequently wrote to the UT student newspaper. "At least greets give aid to the community instead of AIDS."

But Keeling ultimately hopes college officials can repeat their recent success in calming fears about herpes.

"At one time," he says, "people thought herpes was the end of the world."

Additionally, students living in close dorm quarters may be more frightened of catching the disease.

Decisions about letting AIDS victims live in dorms should be made on a case-by-case basis, members of the task force Keeling heads said in a preliminary statement issued last month.

"There is no medical reason whatever to alter dormitory assignments simply because of a gay or bisexual roommate," the statement added.

There's no need to isolate afflicted teachers, either. There is no medical reason to keep professors with AIDS from teaching classes, San Diego State's Patrick says.

Keeling declines to identify schools where officials learned they had students, faculty, or staff who either had or had been exposed to the AIDS virus. Between five and 20 percent of those who test positive for the virus later develop the disease.

But a University of Colorado student was diagnosed as having AIDS several years ago. The victim soon thereafter was unable to attend classes, and died some 20 to 22 months later.

San Diego State literature professor Carl Keller was allowed to continue teaching after university officials learned he had AIDS in 1983. Keller died last summer.

AIDS DISCUSSION HELD AT UNCW

Monday night, Dr. Peter Pappas, a Wilmington physician practicing in the field of internal medicine and infectious diseases, spoke to a group of concerned students, faculty, and administration about AIDS problem facing the country today.

Acquired Immuno-deficiency Syndrome (AIDS) has raised concern in not only the homosexual and drug using societies, but in heterosexual and non-drug using societies, as the disease has spread to all groups.

If a patient who is basically healthy suddenly appears in the doctor's office every month or so with serious pneumonia, with no known reason for this infection, then a physician would begin to suspect that the person may have AIDS. This, and purplish-red bumps appearing like a rash on the skin, are the two most commonly used ways one can spot a possible AIDS victim, Dr. Pappas stated.

Those with highest risk of catching this fatal disease are homosexual men and IV drug users. In a small proportion, roughly about one percent, heterosexuals are at risk, should they engage in sex with a homosexual who is carrying the virus.

Dr. Pappas explained that the virus responsible for AIDS attacks the lymph nodes and destroys the immune system. This virus (called the HTLV-III in the U.S., LAV in France) does not always manifest itself in the disease AIDS. Of 100 people infected with this virus, only 10 will get AIDS. 30 of those infected will just develop an AIDS-like illness. Sixty of those will not develop any signs of AIDS, but they will still be infectious and can pass this virus to someone else who may then develop AIDS.

To further illustrate the seriousness of the AIDS problem, Dr. Pappas cited the number of known cases for 1984 and compared this with those in 1985. In 1984, there were 6720 cases, but in less than one year, this number has more than doubled, with 15,000 cases currently diagnosed.

Finally, Dr. Pappas stressed that AIDS and the virus responsible for AIDS are either sexually transmitted or transmitted through the blood. One cannot become infected through toilet seats, shared classrooms, shared living quarters, breathing the same air as someone else, sharing the same toothbrush, a misquito, or by giving blood.

PSYCHIC TO VISIT CAMPUS

The UNCW University Program Board will present Craig Karges and his Magic of the Mind Show at 9 pm, Thursday, Dec. 5, in room 100 of the University Union. Admission is $1 for UNCW students, faculty and staff with I.D., and $2 for the general public.

Karges was previously scheduled to appear Sept. 26 but was postponed due to Hurricane Gloria.

Since the age of twelve Craig Karges has been mystifying and entertaining audiences. Craig began his career as a magician but later became fascinated with the world of ESP. After discovering that his uncle was a retired vaudeville mind reader Craig turned to him in search of ways to bring out the magic of the mind. Craig studied under his uncle for one year, spent another year polishing his skills and in 1974 combined his magic and ESP talents into an incredible performance which Craig calls the Magic of the Mind Show.

During a performance Craig demonstrates his skills by revealing spectators' thoughts, reading serial numbers off dollar bills while heavily blindfolded, levitating tables and linking finger rings together, borrowed from members of the audience. In a special demonstration Craig risks his life, the money being returned to the sponsor if he fails. Craig's Magic of the Mind Show is an unbelievable blend of illusion and psychic happenings that has astonished audiences from coast to coast.

Since he launched his career as a psychic entertainer Craig has captured the imaginations of people throughout the United States by predicting newspaper headlines days in advance, walking blindfolded through city traffic and even piloting a motorcycle while blindfolded through an obstacle course. His work has been the subject of newspaper, radio and television interviews carried in the United States as well as in other countries.

Although Craig refers to himself as a psychic entertainer he claims no supernatural powers nor does he try to convince his audience to believe in anything. Craig sees his role as being an entertainer and that is his primary purpose once he walks onstage. If Craig's performance goes beyond entertainment he hopes that it may motivate people to explore their own minds and face the possibility that there just might be more to the human mind than is usually thought possible. Yes, Craig Karges is every bit as intriguing as the show he presents!

UNCW NEWS BUREAU

For the nature-lover on your Christmas list, a new book by three UNCW Professors will be a perfect choice. Mammals of the Carolinas, Virginia, and Maryland, just released by the University of North Carolina Press, will be a welcome addition to any backpack or bookbag for those who are thrilled to catch a glimpse of the animals which live around us.

The authors are Dr. William David Webster, assistant professor of biology and curator of mammals; Dr. James F. Parnell, professor of biology and co-author of Birds of the Carolinas; and Dr. Walter C. Biggs, Jr., professor of biology. The book is a natural follow-up to Birds of the Carolinas and Amphibians and Reptiles of the Carolinas and Virginia, published earlier by the UNC Press for general interest audiences.

This beautiful book, with 117 color photographs mostly by Parnell, also features range maps of the mammals' distributions. Written as a popular guide, the book will acquaint readers of all ages with the great variety and abundance of mammals in the four-state area.

Three years in the writing, Mammals of the Carolinas, Virginia, and Maryland describes in detail the 88 terrestrial mammals as well as 33 marine species that inhabit the area's offshore waters.

With mountains, piedmont, and coastal plain present in all four states, the region is rich in fauna. In a brief overview, the book describes each of the three regions, gives description of characteristics and adaptations of mammals, offers hints for observation and study, and discusses conversation efforts.

The bulk of the book is devoted to accounts of all species of wild mammals known to occur in the region and in the Atlantic Ocean adjacent to the four states. The mammals are grouped into these categories: pouched mammals; shrews and moles; bats; armadillos; rabbits and hares; gnawing mammals (rodents); meat-eating mammals; cetaceans (whales, dolphins, and porpoises); manatees; and hoofed mammals (even-toed, non-domesticated).

In each species account, there is a description of the mammal, including size, physical characteristics and coloring; distribution and abundance; particular habitat considerations; and natural history of the animal, giving what it feeds upon, its activity cycle, how it relates to other animals, and reproductive biology.

Among the tidbit one learns from reading the book is that 17 species of bats occur in the Carolinas, Virginia and Maryland, including Townsend's Big-eared Bat, an endangered species. While not seen very often this far north, the nine-banded armadillo is expanding its range northward and eastward and has been reported in South Carolina (other reports of the armadillo from the Piedmont of the Carolinas and Washington, D.C. probably represent animals that have escaped or released from captivity). And, did you know that armadillos are susceptible to leprosy, making them valuable in medical research?

The photos themselves make the book worthwhile. Photos of the star-nosed mole, a fang-baring big brown bat, the adult eastern cottontail and four juvenile eastern cottontail rabbits in a nest are excellent. Getting the photographs required a number of field trips to capture animals for the photos. Other pictures were taken in zoos such as at Brookgreen Gardens, and Charles Town Landing where the animals are kept in more or less natural surroundings. The bear was photographed at Grandfather Mountain. A lot of small animals were caught in live traps and placed in a terrarium set up to resemble the natural habitat.

While the book was purposely designed for the general audience and is not written as a scholarly work of scientific research, the book is accurate and contains new information on several species not previously published. The book is also unusual in that it is one of the few books on mammals that covers marine mammals as well as terrestrial mammals.

Mammals, which sells for $16.95, is available in area bookstores now. The Bookery in the Cotton Exchange in downtown Wilmington will hold an autograph party for the authors from 1 - 3 p.m., Sunday, Dec. 8.

This is an officially unofficial formulated list of a few phobias, diseases, and illnesses that run rampant on even the most prestigious of our college campuses. Yes, my naive friends these are the potential destroyers of the natural functions of college life. Mindless entities that seek to discourage the defenseless student, attacking all ages, sexes, statuses, and classes, neglecting no one!! Let us reveal these demons as they are in an attempt to banish them with the knowledge of their contemptuous existence.

1.) THE TOOTHASTE INTENSICIDE SYNDROME (the great intestine killer) is a foul toxin found in many dorms. The usual victims are unwary freshmen. It is caused by overcrowded bathrooms, small sinks, and a busy schedule. It appears the individual is forced to swallow the acidic contents (toothpaste) because of the previously stated sanitary problems, therefore over a time, amounting to a few months, the intestines give out and sickness sets in.

2.) POLYTESTINGITIS (inflammation of the mind caused by multi-testing within a limited period of time)-this frightful apparition attacks freshmen and seniors alike. It is caused by overzealous professors with a passion for killer exams two days a week, every week for the rest of the semester. Facts are beginning to prove that the professors are meeting secretly to plan the tests on the SAME days. It causes the overloading of the students' mind's, which in turn causes headaches, body aches, no social life, depression, and possible suicide.

3.) STUPERSOMNIA (drunken sleep)-is the affliction that attacks mainly fraternities and sororities and is wide spread among the campuses. It is caused by permanent celebration, partying, ladies nights, and happy hours. It creates an atmosphere of headaches, vomiting, failing grades, tardiness, and it eventually rots the grey matter in your cerebrum.

4.) HYDRO-MORTIS FOLIAGEPHOBIA (fear of dead wet grass)-primarily attacks females but can occasionally inflict males with new shoes. It is caused by the constant wet cut grass and weeds. It has been known to result in insanity if not treated properly.

If you have been or are afraid you may be afflicted with one or any of the above please seek assistance at once. But not from me, I've already had them.

CAMPUS REPUBLICAN

While our college Democrat columnist writes about the past concerning what the Democratic party did, the Republican party continues to do and look to the future.

The Republican party is without a doubt the party of the present and future. In the sixties, an embarrassing time in U.S. history, the Democrats led America. Student protests, a contempt for the government and a general disrespect for oneself and one's surroundings, was the norm.

Today, the Republicans lead with patriotism, constructive criticism and a pride for oneself and one's country.

While the Democrats have always believed they had the high ground with respect to social programs, economic policy and representing the poor. This has changed. The Democrats realize that most of their programs hurt those they sought originally to help.

Who would think that the Democrats would be arguing with Republicans on how low the maximum tax rate should be. I believe the Democrats might be realizing, as the Republicans have for years, that you do not have to make rich people poor to make poor people richer. Nor do you have to spend 50% of the federal budget on social programs, but rather stimulate the economy to create jobs. The fact that there are rich people demonstrates that the American dream still exists and gives people something to work for.

Who would have ever thought that the spend, spend, spend Democrats would now be in favor of a balanced budget? It seems that the Democrats are now supporting traditional Republican issues.

In the area of defense, the Republicans continue to press for development and implementation of the Strategic Defense Initiative

(SDI) Defense Shield. The Democrats are finding it harder and harder to argue against SDI and for Mutual Assured Destruction (MAD).

Lastly, remember when everyone's excuse for being a Democrat was that they could vote in the primary? Well who has the primary now? The Republicans! With Ambassador Funderburk and congressman Broyhill, the Democrats have yet to come up with a viable challenger in the 1988 Senate race. The four qualified Republican candidates in the 1988 presidential race are Jack Kemp, Bob Dole, Howard Baker and George Bush. The best candidates that the Democrats have is Jesse Jackson, Gary Hart, Mario Cuomo, Ted Kennedy. As you can see not much here.

While the Democrats are playing catch up, the Republicans continue to lead the nation to a proud future. BY.....

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

I am writing this letter in rebuttal to the letter concerning the Miss UNCW Pageant. I feel this is a good idea and I congratulate the Fledgling staff on the idea and the hard work that is going into it.

If this pageant was meant to be degrading to women then the criteria that is being used would not be used. Instead of evening gowns it would be swimsuits, instead of causal clothing it would be shorts and tank tops. Also talent and interviews would not be important. They are in this pageant. The idea behind bringing in professional judges is that they can be impartial and can look at each contestant fairly. If the judges we have gotten from UNCW are from the community around us there would be the possibility of them knowing one or more of the contestants, therefore clouding their judgement and biasing the pageant.

I personally see no difference between having a Miss UNCW Pageant and having a homecoming queen. I also admit (to the Women's Faculty Network) that there are other alternatives to honor students but no one has ever done it.

In closing I would like to mention two things. First, I would like to make a plea to the Faculty Women's Network. Please come down off your horse and ask the students what they want.

Because if it wasn't for the students you wouldn't have a job, because there would be no university. Second I make a plea to the students: Support the Miss UNCW Pageant because if it is a success, there is the possibility of a Mr. UNCW Pageant. I can't wait to hear the Faculty Women's Network's reaction to this.

Sincerely,
A Female Student

Dear Editor,

After reading Bob Haywood's "Stillpoint" column, I began to understand the real problem facing America in the 1980's. It's not pornography, discrimination or abortion. It's LIBERALISM! How can any patriotic American not support the contras? Men and women fighting to purge communists from their country and establish a democracy that will allow such basic human rights as freedom of religion. Maybe Mr. Haywood has forgotten that it was the communists that turned thousands of bibles into toilet paper in Rumania, that they killed 70 million Russian citizens between 1917 and 1950 for simply speaking against the government, or that they killed millions of Cambodians for being able to read and write. Compared to these atrocities, the contras attack on a pro-marxist village in northern Nicaragua is minor.

The Boland amendment for fiscal 1986 would set western countries back years if it were to pass. If you want to see communism wiped out of our own hemisphere, write your congressman and senators and tell them to continue aid for the FREEDOM FIGHTERS!!

CAMPUS DEMOCRAT

It has been 22 years since that November noontime when John F. Kennedy was murdered in Dallas.

His brief days in the White House were days of steady growth--growth in confidence, in understanding, and in purpose. The Kennedy days were not Camelot. He made mistakes, the Bay of Pigs invasion was perhaps the biggest. But Kennedy candidly acknowledged his mistakes and always learned from them. He knew the world was changing, and he had the courage and flexibility to adapt to change.

A recent poll of college-age students reveals, three-quarters of us rate his presidency good to great, and 30 percent wish he were president now. No one else is close, not Washington, not Lincoln, not FDR, not Reagan.

Only a few people think of sexual abuses or the abuses of CIA power when they think of him. Kennedy we remember is instead the young gallant who inspired the youth, helped the black, cared about working people, stood up to the Russians, and brought a touch of style and glamour to the White House.

And when we remember Kennedy, we should remember his words, words as true today as they were then:

"Let the word go forth from this time and place, to friend and foe alike, that the torch has been passed to a new generation of Americans -- born of this century, tempered by war, disciplined by a harder bitter peace, proud of our ancient heritage -- and unwilling to witness or permit the slow undoing of those human rights to which this nation has always been committed today at home and around the world.

Let every nation know, whether it wishes us well or ill, that we shall pay any price, bear any burden, meet any hardship, support any friend, oppose any foe to assure the survival and success of liberty.

And so, my fellow Americans: ask not what your country can do for you -- ask what you can do for your country. My fellow citizens of the world: ask not what America will do for you, but what together we can do for the freedom of man."

STILLPOINT

BOB HAYWOOD

Thanksgiving calls us to be mindful of blessings. That is really not so hard for most of us to do, for in spite of all our complaining, most of us can very quickly come to a place where we celebrate all the little and big things that add up to a feeling of being fortunate.

I mean, really, don't you feel fortunate when you get around to adding up your checkbook and discover there is a whole $1.98 left? Or when you get the test back that you were sure you have failed and wind up with a C? Or when you drive on campus and find a parking place right in front of the building where you are having class? Aren't you overwhelmed with Thanksgiving?

Even at a little deeper level, most of us have reflective moments in the midst of our busy days when we become aware of our blessings. A beautiful day, a walk on the beach, a time of closeness with a good friend or loved one all causes us to be aware of the goodness of our life.

If we are willing to think more deeply even than this, perhaps we might consider some of the blessings that come from experiences which, at first examination, wouldn't find us expecting much thankfulness. Have you ever been sick and had your plans and activities fouled up for a significant period of time? Yet, if you look back on that experience, I wouldn't be surprised if you would be able to recall the love and concern shown by friends and family who supported you in such a time with thankful heart. Some of you who have experienced breaking up with someone you have cared for a long time or even a divorce. When the pain has passed and you are able to reflect on that struggle, isn't possible to begin to appreciate the strength that you have discovered in yourself or new found skills in coping with a difficult problem? Those things, too, warrant a thankful heart. Have you not discovered those deep personal and spiritual resources that sustained you from within until your life moved into a better space? The discovery of such inner strengths or a God who is at the center of your being is also worthy of thankfulness.

Please don't hear me as being simplistic. I'm not saying that bad times are not bad or shouldn't feel difficult. I'm simply pointing to the consideration that we can discover much for which we can give thanks in the dark shadowy times of our life as well as in the bright and beautiful up times. Find some time to be alone this Thanksgiving. Remember the highs and consider the lows of days passed. Be thankful!

GREEK LIFE TASK FORCE

JOSEPH PRESSLEY
MANAGING EDITOR

In November 1984, the Task Force for Greek Life was appointed by Dr. William Bryan, Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs. He states in his original charge to the Task Force, "the purpose of this Task Force is to gather information that might give assistance as we look ahead to the expansion of our Greek system and as we provide assistance to the growing number of Greek organizations."

Dr. Bryan emphasized the need for the Task Force to offer specific recommendations in the following areas:

- 1) Greek expansion at UNCW
- 2) Housing for Greek organizations
- 3) Alumni involvement
- 4) Governing bodies for Greek organizations
- 5) Pledge/associate member programs
- 6) Institutional relationship and responsibility of UNCW with Greek organizations
- 7) Hazing and alcohol concerns that may exist in our present system.

An Illinois State administrator with AIDS died in September, prompting concern among staffers in the admissions office where he'd worked. ISU held an AIDS seminar for them, noting it is highly improbable any of them contracted the disease from the administrator. They were not urged to get AIDS tests.

And at California-Berkeley at least three people have died of AIDS, and several other are being treated for the disease.

Following is the first part of a recent interview concerning the report submitted by the Task Force.

Question: Who initiated the idea of a Task Force?

Dr. Bryan: I initiated the Task Force upon discussion with staff and others on campus.

Question: What was the reasoning behind the Task Force?

Dr. Bryan: The Greek system is young on campus and is growing. It is in the important development stage. The Greek system should be able to use the Greek Life Task Force report in a positive manner.

Question: How were the members of the Greek Life Task Force chosen?

Dr. Bryan: We wanted a representative group of people from campus to be on the Task Force to represent the entire campus.

Next week: Dr. Bryan's reaction to the report of the Task Force.

College Press Service

A number of schools have protested the presence of Central Intelligence Agency recruiters and money on their campuses in the last two weeks, and some observers think the anti-CIA activity is a spillover from the anti-apartheid movement.

In October, students at Arizona State, Minnesota and Harvard demonstrated against CIA recruiting efforts on their campuses.

Harvard students also protested that a professor used CIA funds to sponsor an international affairs conference on the campus.

The protesters say their actions are an outgrowth of the anti-apartheid movement, which, after years of languishing, began building dramatically on scores of campuses last April.

"There is no doubt that the South Africa issue has transformed the political scene on American campuses," says Harvard student activist Damon Silvers.

"It's helped foster a general climate of activism on a number of issues," asserts Joshua Nessen, student coordinator for the American Committee on Africa, which helped organize the Oct. 11 National Day of Protest against South Africa's apartheid system.

But others aren't convinced.

"I'm not sure you can say that there is an increase in protests. It may be premature to say that," CIA spokeswoman Patti Volz says.

Campus protests of the CIA and its operations are hardly new. During the past year, Yale, Tufts, Colorado, Michigan, Iowa, Oregon and Brown students, among many others, have mounted demonstrations against the agency, frequently leading to arrests.

Activists believe the October protests, however, are different.

Nessen says students are making a connection between the CIA and American policy in Central America, South Africa and Angola. "CIA involvement and U.S. policy are designed to entrench U.S. corporate interests," he contends.

For example, Gray Hale, a leader of the anti-CIA protest at Arizona State, says the CIA is training police officers in South Africa.

"There is more concern about the CIA the more one looks into the South African or Central American issue," observes Elizabeth Burpee of the South Africa Awareness organization at the University of Colorado.

Additionally, "Reagan for the first time has given the CIA legal power to operate in the United States," Hale says, referring to Reagan's decision to allow limited CIA domestic operations.

Hale believes last year's discovery of the CIA manual instructing the contras -- the U.S.-backed group trying to overthrow the Nicaraguan government -- on how to conduct terrorist acts also turned student opinion against the agency.

"The news of the CIA manual last year alarmed people," he recalls.

But Nessen thinks the South Africa issue is responsible for sensitizing people to CIA policies because apartheid "is less clouded by Cold War obfuscation" than, for example, U.S. policy in Nicaragua, which the Reagan administration says is an ally of the Soviet Union.

Whatever the reasons for the recent protests, CIA spokeswoman Volz says students interest in working for the agency "has never been higher. Protests have not deterred our recruitment."

Congratulations go to Julie Buffaloe-Yoder, Vicki Lennon and Kim Westerman. These three poets finished respectively in the Creative Writing Program's Poetry Contest. The winning poems were, "Song of the Migrant Workers," "Brother" and "New York Redneck."

Julie, A Jr. English Major, won $50 for her poem. Vicki and Kim won $30 and $20 for their works. A reception will be held for them on Tuesday Nov. 19 at 7:30 P.M. in Room 210 of the University Union.

Judge Kathy Smith-Bowers, a poet-professor, at Queens College in Charlotte said, "Many of the poems were moving and skillfully crafted and I will be looking for poems written by the winners in literary magazines."

For those of you who prefer short stories a contest is being sponsored by the N.C. Jr. Sorosis and the Creative Writing Department. All entries should be in Dr. Fort's box, in the English Department, by Nov. 22. A reception will be held on Dec. 4, same time and same place.

THALIAN CLOSSES SEASON

The Thalian Association closes out its 1985 season with the musical comedy "Bring Back Birdie" on Dec. 4 at Thalian Hall.

This satire of the 1980s lifestyle of Rock 'n Roll star Conrad Birdie and his friends should serve to whet the appetites of local theatre fans and prepare them for the Opera House Productions presentation of "A Christmas Carol." The adaptation of Charles Dickens' holiday classic is set for Dec. 20.

Performance of "Bring Back Birdie" runs Dec. 4-8, with a matinee Dec. 8. Curtain time is 8 p.m. for the evening performances and 2 p.m. for the matinee. Tickets go on sale to the public Nov. 25, and admission prices are $10, $8 and $6.

Performances of "A Christmas Carol" are slated for Dec. 20-23, with a matinee Dec. 21-22. Curtain time is 8 p.m. for the evening performances, and 3 p.m. for the matinees. Tickets are already available to the public with admission prices $10, $8, $6 and $4.

For reservations or more information about either performance, call the Thalian Hall Box Office at 763-3398.

BENEFIT CONCERT

TRISH MCHENRY

Winston-Salem based band, "Let's Active" will be appearing at the Mad Monk Sunday, Dec. 8th in a benefit concert for WSEA, the UNCW campus radio station.

The college Media Journal has nominated "Let's Active" as band of the year along with nominating their second album "Cypress" album of the year. The band is beginning their national tour here in Wilmington.

Opening up for "Let's Active" will be the "Connells" from Raleigh.

WSEA is hoping for a big turn out, as the money raised will be used to get the station off the ground.

Admission will be $4 in advance and $5 at the door.

DEAN BUCHAN
SPORTS EDITOR

When Georgetown, St. John's and Villanova made the NCAA Tournament Final Four a private Big East party last March, there was little doubt which conference was the premier basketball league in the country.

As the 1985-86 season gets underway this week the question rages again--what conference is the toughest? The Big East? The ACC? The Big Ten?

Northerners feel that the Big East is still on top. One Big East writer wrote: "The Big East will remain the same this year--the premier basketball conference in the country."

The final story will be told in late March, but how could the Atlantic Coast Conference not be considered America's best as this season begins? depending on the poll or publication, North Carolina and Georgia Tech are ranked 1-2, or 2-1. Duke is in just about everybody's top ten, and N.C. State and Maryland are top-20 teams. The ACC was a junior-dominated league last year, while the big East was saturated with seniors.

Georgetown, minus Pat Ewing, is no longer the dominant team it was last year. St. John's, without Chris Mullin, is down this year. And defending national champion Villanova will be hard-pressed to win 20 games this season.

There is talent in the Big East. Syracuse has Pearl Washington and Rafael Addison, Reggie Williams is at Georgetown, and Seton Hall has high-scoring Andre McCloud.

But compare to the ACC's lineup of Kenny Smith and Brad Daugherty (UNC), Len Bias (Maryland), Mark Price and John Salley (Georgia Tech), Olden Polynice (Virginia), and Johnny Dawkins (Duke). A record seven teams from the ACC could receive bids to the NCAA Tournament this year.

*****

Colonial Athletic Association teams play ACC and Big East teams on Tuesday, Nov. 26.

William and Mary hosts Duke at William and Mary Hall, George Mason entertains Maryland at the newly constructed Patriot Center, and Richmond travels to Providence in Big East country.

The CAA could gain some respect in these early dates. But already the league is suffering from the Rodney Dangerfield syndrome. William and Mary and George Mason are both 15-point underdogs, while Providence is favored by seven over Richmond according to Basketball Weekly.

*****

UNCW could possibly meet Virginia of the ACC and/or Tennessee of the tough South eastern Conference in invitation at tournaments at both schools.

At Virginia's Tip-off Classic Nov. 30-Dec.1, the Seahawks play Virginia Commonwealth in the first round, while host Virginia plays Towson State. At Tennessee's Volunteer Classic Dec. 20-21, UNCW has a first round date with Baylor, and Tennessee takes on Furman.

UNCW's first-round opponents could find the Hawks tough to handle. VCU lost four starters and some top reserves off a talented 1984-85 team. Baylor is predicted to finish near the bottom in a down year for the Southwestern Conference.

*****

The latest rumor in the CAA is that American may add 7-foot-1 Tito Horford to its roster in December.

Horford, who was heavily recruited nationwide last year, was kicked off the Louisiana State team Nov. 3 and left school.

The Eagles are predicted to battle East Carolina and William Mary for the cellar spot in the CAA.

*****

Navy's 6-foot-11 center David Robinson is making headlines nationally early this year. Many consider the Midshipman junior the third-best center in the country. What does that mean? Well, three years ago the top two centers in the country were Ralph Sampson and Pat Ewing. The third-best center at that time was Houston's Akeem Olajuwon, or Kentucky's Sam Bowie, had he been healthy.

UNC-Wilmington's 68-49 season opening win at Army is more significant that it may appear on the surface.

The Seahawk victory, which dampened the dedication of Army's new multi-sports facility in West Point, was one of the biggest wins in recent UNCW basketball history.

*The win came on the road. UNCW won only three times on the road last year (3-10). The Hawks could easily win the majority of its games on the road this year.

*In the first week of play, Brian Rowsom, UNCW's unheralded center, scored 29 points and grabbed 17 rebounds in an impressive performance. It was Rowsom's 31st consecutive game of scoring double figures.

*Rowsom's stats are neck and neck with those of highly touted David Robinson of Navy, who scored 27 in a losing effort against St. John's in the Big Apple NIT.

Army coach Les Wotke said "Rowsom is as fine a pivot man as I've seen, and yes, that includes David Robinson."

How big was the win over Army? Head coach Mel Gibson: "This is the biggest major, positive thing that has happened to this program in a long time."

UNCW was scheduled to host Coastal Carolina last Tuesday, a game the Hawks should win. This would give UNCW a 2-0 record heading into the United Virginia Bank Tournament in Charlottesville, Va. this weekend. A good showing in that tournament will give the Hawks some recognition that they deserve.

UNCW's first-round match-up is with Virginia Commonwealth and a win would give it the opportunity to play Virginia in the championship game. The Hawks could be 7-2 after December, heading into Colonial Athletic Association play.

WELL NOTES

"I know I should stop-- and I will one day." If you've just quit smoking, or about to, you deserve a lot of credit. It's not easy to do, but it can be done.

Some smokers refuse to quit smoking because they are afraid they will gain a lot of weight. Some others return to smoking after stopping for awhile, because they gain some weight and think they are better off smoking. But the truth is you're never better off smoking. There are better ways to cope.

Scientists have found that smokers are apt to weigh less than non-smokers of the same sex, age and height, and that many smokers gain weight on an average, five to seven pounds when they quit smoking. Smoking may affect the amount and types of food that smokers eat, and how their body processes food, causing them to have a lower body weight. Quitting smoking can trigger changes in eating habits and the body's processing of food, resulting in weight gain.

There are many things you can do to help yourself succeed at quitting smoking and controlling your weight. But before you make changes in your diets and exercises, you need to make non-smoking your #1 priority. After you have done this:

- *monitor your weight-once a week
- *know what you are eating-- think what triggers your eating

- *eat well-balanced meals regularly
- *don't eat more than you use-- find the balance between calories you eat and those you burn
- *snack well; avoid sweets
- *when you eat out, eat well-- don't order foods full of oil, sauces and salt
- *eat slowly-- it takes 20 minutes to digest a meal
- *exercise regularly-- start slowly, make it fun

Remember that you are better off in terms of your health, your appearance, your sense of well-being - not smoking.

Miss Manners

For all talk about feelings in this society, people only seem to recognize two emotions in anyone other than themselves.

These are: Mad, and Not Mad.

Not Mad is the one you needn't do anything about.

Analyzing and expressing one's own infinitely varied and subtle feelings has been the national sport for some time now, and naturally it is a nuisance for anyone so engaged to be interrupted to deal with anyone else's. The common solution, Miss Manners has noticed, is to sort other people's feelings into these two rough categories, and then to ignore the second group.

The first cannot be safely ignored. Mad people do all sorts of unpleasant things, such as screaming, making scenes, slamming or breaking inanimate objects, and demanding to stay up all night talking things out.

You must therefore placate the mad person, which is a lot of trouble. You have to find out why he or she is mad and what he expects you to do before he will agree to cease being mad. Then, if you do not agree that the stipulated requirement is fair, you must bargain with the person, perhaps using anger of your own tool, until you establish mutually satisfactory terms for a truce.

The fear of bringing all this on is a powerful deterrent. So if you know something you do or fail to do will make another person mad, you will probably adjust your behavior accordingly. (If, on the contrary, it encourages you to get that anger going, for the entertainment value, Miss Manners only asks you to find a partner who likes it too, and stay out of the way of more peaceful souls, such as herself.)

But what about that other category, Not Mad? What about those who, like Miss Manners, do not employ Going Over the Brink as a method of guaranteeing that their preference will be treated seriously?

Gentle souls have wishes and rights, too. They are not necessarily timid about stating these either. But they state them politely, however firmly, and they therefore find themselves in the category of Not Mad.

Does this mean that the requests of polite people are more apt to be ignored than those of people whose ordinary behavior includes Getting Mad?

Yes, it does.

In the interests of promoting courtesy, Miss Manners has occasionally gone so far as to cite instances when politeness is more effective social protection from rudeness than is more rudeness. "Thank you, how kind of you to mention it" is a better retort to "You're putting on weight, aren't you?" than is "Well, you don't look so hot yourself."

One morning, Miss Manners was on a crowded bus, where an angry man shouted an obscene command to those in the aisle to move back. People stubbornly stayed where they were, bunched up in front, until someone replied, "Good morning, sir." Then everyone, including the suddenly sheepish shouter, smiled and then politely moved about to accommodate others.

However, Miss Manners has never meant to claim that etiquette is a foolproof form of self-defense, another of those tiresome techniques for assertiveness and selfishness.

And it is sadly but undoubtedly true that the world is full of spouses, lovers, friends, colleagues, employers and even employees who feel it is safe to ignore the reasonably stated requests of individuals who can be assumed not to go - or rather act - mad.

As a result, some disillusioned souls desert the ranks of the Not Mad and retrain their associates to treat them as carefully as they treat the Mad. Then there is so much less gentleness and sanity in the world.

Others, who can't quite bear to do that, try an intermediate stage: Sad. In other words, they moan or cry when disappointed, hoping that pity for sadness will accomplish the same results as fear of madness.

But in both of these unfortunate cases, the person who formerly tried to make himself heard without getting mad will encounter bewilderment: "I didn't know you felt that way." "Yes, I guess you did mention it once, but I didn't know you meant it." "How was I to know you felt so strongly about it?"

Miss Manners hereby requests everyone to cooperate in lessening the anger level in this society. Getting mad, and failing to pay attention to the needs of others unless they get mad, only creates a world in which ever more violence will be required to make oneself heard.

She is only going to say this once, in her little, mild, ladylike voice. But she means it.

DEAR MISS MANNERS: Whenever she drives, a certain member of my car pool plays easy-listening radio stations. I have no objection to the music, but it is invariably accompanied by piteous groans and gurglings that, evidently, are her attempts at humming.

These vocal embellishments are not such easy listening, since they suggest wounded animals, and I am a sensitive person. But how can I ask her to stop humming without offending her sensibilities?

GENTLE READER: Miss Manners agrees with you that tuneless humming is maddening. It's all the more infuriating because the person probably doesn't realize she's doing it - so asking her to stop might well be ineffective.

However, you can politely ask to kill the music that inspires her: "Do you mind if I turn this off so we can talk?" Then engage her in conversation. It is physically impossible to talk and hum at the same time.

DEAR MISS MANNERS: What is the proper mailing address for the non-traditional household? There is John Jones and Mary Smith, elderly widowed brother and sister who now make their home together. There is Betty Brown, widow and her daughter, Greta Green, divorcee, and Greta's daughter by her first marriage, Whitney White, college student. And the list goes on.

We considered wedding invitations addressed to "Occupant" or "To Whom It May Concern," but decided that would be poor taste.

What about a gift that is meant for the whole family, such as a basket of fruit or flowers? Do we send an orange to Betty, and apple to Greta, etc., or the basket to one with a note admonishing her to share like a nice girl?

GENTLE READER: Pardon Miss Manners' titter, but do you consider blood relatives living together to be non-traditional households? My, my.

Whether they are traditional, unconventional or positively weird, households of unmarried adults are addressed with the individual names, ladies' names appearing before gentlemen's, and ladies of different generations in order of seniority. When you put all the names on in that fashion, you needn't specify who gets which grape in the fruit basket.

Judith Martin's "Miss Manners' Guide to Rearing Perfect Children" (Atheneum) is now available for etiquette emergency consultation.

Feeling incorrect? Address your etiquette questions (in black or blue-black ink on white writing paper) to Miss Manners, in care of this newspaper. The quill shortage prevents Miss Manners from answering questions other than through this column.

UNC-W STUDENT RECEIVES RED CROSS AWARD

WOODY GUTHRIE
STAFF WRITER

On March 28, 1984, Patrick Henagan and some friends decided to go someplace different than the usual fast food restaurant.

Arriving at a local steakhouse he found Carrie Cavanaugh suffocating to death. Patrick, trained as an instructor in Red Cross first aid and cardiopulmonary resuscitation, proceeded to administer back blows and abdominal thrusts to Ms. Cavanaugh dislodging a piece of steak and saving her life.

For this act Patrick, a UNCW Chemistry major and member of Alpha Pi Omega Fraternity, has been named to receive the highest award presented by the Red Cross, the certificate of merit. It is given to a person who saves or sustains a life by using skills and knowledge learned in a volunteer training program offered by the Red Cross in first aid, small craft

PATRICK HENAGAN RECEIVING AWARD FROM CHANCELLOR

or water safety. The certificate bears the signatures of the President of the United States, Honorary Chairman of the Red Cross and George F. Moody, Chairman of the Red Cross. Chancellor Wagoner presented this award along with 13th District Congressman Harry E.

Payne to Henagan and another recipient, Donald Jackson, in a ceremony in their honor Tuesday at the Student Union.

The award was established in 1911 and originally involved a cash prize but was later deemed inappropriate because the recipients received no lasting moment of the award.

Other local awardees have gone to Ty Cobb, Rickey Benton, and Mark Denning for a water rescue at Carolina Beach. Jackson received the Certificate of Merit today for an April 30, 1984 incident in which he applied direct pressure to and elevated the arm of Richard Dieteman after he fell through a plate glass window. Donald not only stopped his arm from bleeding, but in the process saved man's arm from amputation.

Patrick serves as a volunteer for the Red Cross as an instructor in First Aid and CPR and man's first aid stations at public events.

Speaking of the incident at the steakhouse, he explained that the Red Cross has tried to get area restaurants to train their employees in obstructed-passageway procedures but usually it is to no avail. "The procedure takes only 5 minutes to learn," says Patrick.

PROFESSOR PLANS TRIP TO BRAZIL

Professor Robert Brent Toplin of the History Department at the University of North Carolina at Wilmington will lead a special one week study group in Brazil. Participants will depart for South America on March 1, 1986. The program is open to the public as well as to students (students may obtain three credits for their participation in the program; the dates for the trip coincide with the University's spring break).

Professor Toplin plans to emphasize three themes in the visit: The history, culture, and economy of Brazil. Participants will learn about Brazil's unique history and visit some of the sites where the past is still evident. The side-trips will include a visit to Petropolis, a quaint mountain town which served as the Emperor's summer residence in the nineteenth century. Principal travel for the group will be in and around Rio de Janeiro, a city which many describe as the most beautiful in the world. In Rio the group will examine examples of Brazil's diverse ethnic heritage and see an authentic macumba service, the ceremony which combines Christian and African religious traditions.

Because Rio de Janeiro lies south of the Equator, the seasons are reversed. March 1 will represent late summer in Brazil, and the weather will be pleasantly warm.

Before the group leaves for Brazil, Professor Toplin will hold meetings at the University to discuss historical, cultural, and economic background to modern Brazil. Local citizens who are not participating for credit may attend these meetings if they wish.

The base price of $795 covers round-trip air fare from New York and seven nights in a hotel on Ipanema Beach with breakfast. Individuals seeking further information about the program should contact Professor Toplin at 395-3318 as soon as possible.

"THE PLAIN TRUTH" ABOUT AIDS

PASADENA, CA --

While AIDS and herpes have received a great deal of media and public attention in recent years, an article in the current issue of THE PLAIN TRUTH magazine points out that these are only part of a growing number of sexually transmissible diseases causing concern among health officials and doctors.

THE PLAIN TRUTH senior writer Donald R. Schroeder declares in the article that close to 30 ailments are now known to be transmitted by sexual contact, and that many people are experiencing a "rude and painful awakening to the number one serious communicable disease problem of our age."

One of the most alarming realizations of the current wave of sexually transmissible diseases is that sexual contact is not necessary to spread the disease organisms. AIDS -- for "Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome" -- is an example of how grave a threat these diseases pose. The most widely publicized of the newer sexually transmissible ailments, AIDS is known to have been contracted through blood transfusions and the sharing of infected hypodermic needles, as well as sexual activity.

Thus, AIDS can victimize individuals who have never been sexually active. Also, while AIDS has thus far been concentrated in the gay populations of the U.S., Canada, Europe and Australia, the disease is found predominantly among heterosexuals in Africa. THE PLAIN TRUTH notes that the question about AIDS in Western countries is "how rapidly it is going to spread among 'sexually active' heterosexuals."

But health experts can point to a number of other afflictions which are commonly transmitted through sexual contact -- as well as more resistant strains of more familiar forms of "venereal disease" -- which are adding to the danger of nonmonogamous relationships. Forms of gonorrhea have been found on which penicillin has no effect; a bacterium known as Chlamydia trachomatis is now believed to be an important cause of sterility among women in the United States, and of blindness and pneumonia in infants. Genital herpes has come to be feared as a painful and embarrassing ailment that can also affect newborn children.

The fears raised by these diseases -- now known as "STD's," for "sexually transmissible diseases" -- appear to have changed the sexual habits of many Americans. THE PLAIN TRUTH quotes the president of the U.S. Conference of Local Health Officers who declares: "I believe the sexual revolution is just about over."

Perhaps most alarming are the estimates of the numbers of people who will be infected with STD's. According to the American Social Health Association, one in four Americans between the ages of 15 and 55 will acquire a sexually transmissible disease at some point in his or her life. Some 10 million Americans seek medical treatment for these diseases each year.

THE PLAIN TRUTH article points out that, though some of the diseases can be contracted through non-sexual activities, the most effective way to stop their spread is to practice "hygienic living," including monogamy and virginity.

THE PLAIN TRUTH, with a circulation of over 8.1 million, is published by the Worldwide Church of God and is available free at 150,000 waiting rooms and newsstands across the nation.

"A CHRISTMAS CAROL" WILL BE PLAYED AT THALIAN HALL DEC. 20-23.

MINORITY VISITATION DAY HELD

UNCW NEWS BUREAU

More than 100 prospective students and their parents were expected to attend Minority Visitation Day at The University of North Carolina at Wilmington Saturday, Nov. 23 at the University Union. Registration began at 12:30 p.m. in Room 100, and the program was underway at 1:05 p.m.

Diane Zeeman, director of undergraduate admissions, said that invitations to attend

Minority Visitation Day were sent to minority students within a 150-mile radius of Wilmington.

The first session of the afternoon program featured a welcome by Dr. William H. Wagoner, chancellor of UNCW, and talks by Zeeman and Ralph Parker, director of minority affairs. Information was also presented about activities planned for the day and admission criteria and financial aid.

During a break at 2:30, planners hoped to have enrolled students, present a brief musical program. Break-out sessions began at 2:45 and focused on student life featuring enrolled students and a session for parents. From 4-5 p.m., campus tours were conducted. Prospective students and their parents were guests of the university for dinner in the cafeteria.

While not a part of the official program, there was a dance that evening sponsored by the student NAACP chapter to which the young people were invited.

***CAMPUS REPUBLICAN

MICKEY GAHAGAN

It is agreed that apartheid in South Africa is an evil which must be eventually done away with. How to solve this problem is the major argument between liberals and conservatives. The plan forwarded by many anti-South African leaders is complete and total disinvestment in corporations doing business in South Africa. While I commend the ultimate goal of these forces for change, they are very misguided and have no understanding whatsoever of economic principles. The result these disinvestment proponents hope is a collapse of the economic base of South Africa resulting in, I guess, revolution which would then lead to an end of apartheid. It seems to me that these liberals would look at such sudden violent revolutions as Ethiopia, Iran, Mozambique, Angola and Nicaragua and realize this type of revolution does not usually render the results desired.

Disinvestment will not work! Why? First of all when someone sells stock there is someone on the other end to buy the stock. A study done by The Investor Responsibility Research Center shows that while stock prices will suffer initially from a disinvestment sale, as soon as those who are unconcerned with non-economic issues realize this, they will drive the prices back to market level, thus no impact on the corporation itself.

Another question we need to consider is whether we even want these companies out of South Africa. Ford and Goodyear broke laws in South Africa by indenturing black apprentices which eventually led to the end of "white only" job reservation. Other United States corporations lead the way in will close by quoting the mayor of Soweto, the largest black township in Africa, in a conversation I had with him this summer. "If you take any message back to America I would want it to be reforms for the betterment of blacks and their way of life. If these corporations are forced out of South Africa, a very important and influential voice will be lost in the fight to end apartheid from within South Africa."

What South Africa needs is more investment not less. To bring about a peaceful end to apartheid increased investment will be vital. In explaining this one must understand that 50% of all blacks in South Africa are 18 years and younger. Because of the young age of the population, to continue the current unemployment rate of 13% the economy of South Africa will have to grow five percent every year. Through a growing economy white labor will become scarce thus more black skilled labor will be hired. The result of the increased black skilled labor will be the continued formation of a black middle class which will lead to an increased political voice and eventually will render apartheid obsolete.

I would be the first to speak out in favor of disinvestment if it would work. I witnessed the horrors of apartheid firsthand while attending a conference in South Africa this past summer, and would like to see an immediate end to this institution. There is, however, no immediate remedy to this problem. I be this-- first, do not forget us, please continue to push for change and lastly please do not use disinvestment as a tool because it will hurt my people-- severely-- and strengthen the government of P.W. Botha.

CHRISTMAS CAMP TO BE HELD

A Christmas Camp for Kids ages 7-11 will be offered by UNCW's Office of Special Programs on Monday, December 23 from 8:00 am - 5:00 pm. A full day of structured activities will feature making Christmas gifts, a field trip, a movie and much more fun.

"This will be ideal for those parents who have to work or do last minute shopping or chores," remarked Sally Zimmerman. "The activities are designed with Christmas fun in mind."

Children may be dropped off in the parking lot next to the Marine Science building by 8:00 am and should be picked up by 5:20 pm in the same area. Weather-appropriate clothing should be worn and participants should bring a bag lunch and their own juice (no foods or beverages containing refined sugar, please).

Fee of $14 will be discounted to $11 if registration occurs prior to December 16. No fees will be refunded after December 17.

For more information, contact the Office of Special Programs at 395-3195 between 8:00 am - 5:00 pm, Monday, Wednesday and Friday and 8:00 am - 6:00 pm, Tuesday and Thursday.

EDITOR:

After reading Mickey Gahagan's "Campus Republican" column in the Nov. 19th edition of the campus newspaper, I first concluded that the author is just another narrow minded ultra-conservative, but upon reading his obvious propaganda regarding Nicaragua, I realized that he is simply misinformed. While he babbled on about the non-existence of personal freedoms in Nicaragua, perhaps he was failing to recall the November 1984 election in which 75% of the population voted, and the FSLN won with 67% of the total vote. This

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Upon reading Mickey Gahagan's "Campus Republican" column in the Nov. 19 issue of THE SEAHAWK, I would like to respond to Mr. Gahagan. I will begin by complimenting him on his consistency. He never fails to insult or offend the thinking members of our campus community. In the latest edition of THE SEAHAWK, he has attacked political liberals, feminists, homosexual people, and others who are sensitive to the problems of gay men and lesbians. He seems to think such concerns are "out of place" in the 1980's and that those who express them are dissatisfied refugees from the social and political turmoil of the 1960's. He does not stop to consider that the ideals he opposes might be valid and that some concerns may cross the boundaries drawn by conservative politics.

In particular, Mr. Gahagan devoted a large portion of his column to denouncing the Faculty Women's Network for its protest against the "Miss UNCW" pageant. As a woman and a student, I agree with the Faculty Women's Network's position on the Miss UNCW issue and appreciate its protest against the pageant.

While I agree that the FLEDGLING staff's desire to raise money is commendable, I find it highly unfortunate that they chose a beauty pageant as their fund-raising vehicle. And, regardless of the pageant's name, it was a beauty pageant and concentrated on the physical appearances of the contestants. Although the pageant was called a scholarship competition, scholastic averages were not considered in the selection process.

One look at The SEAHAWK's front-page coverage of the competition reveals attractive young women wearing glittering, cleavage-revealing gowns, and lots of makeup. Among the prizes awarded to Miss UNCW were a bicycle and a month's membership at a health club, presumably to help her keep her slim and trim figure. She also received 20 sessions at a tanning booth, so that her slim and trim figure and pretty face can also sport a "sexy" suntan. Even these prizes reinforce the idea that a woman should first and foremost be physically attractive and that physical appearance should be her main concern.

Mr. Gahagan may be interested to know that he is following reactionary tradition in referring to the Faculty Women's Network as an "unattractive" movement. Women who speak out in our society have frequently been called "unattractive." Perhaps we would prefer that, instead of exercising our minds and concerning ourselves with political and social issues, we should keep quiet, sit in the sun, and exercise. Perhaps by doing so, we would realize our "true" positions as women--pretty ornaments to be put on display for our physical attributes.

In closing, I would like to say to you, Mr. Gahagan, that as long as there are folks like you around, who consider opposing political views to be un-American, and attempts at understanding others "morally repulsive," there will be humanists to stand up and tell you that we find you insensitive and narrow-minded.

Donna S. Pope

campus because Gahagan and his peers seem to get all their international knowledge solely from the "Wilmington Morning Star."

Regarding his attack on the Women's Faculty Network, I have only to say that I regret that it's just the women faculty, and not the students, that are angry about the "Miss UNCW" pageant. Furthermore, if he feels that ERA is the only facet of the women's movement, or that the defeat of ERA signaled the end of the women's movement, he is sadly mistaken.

And finally, as Mr. Gahagan said, this is 1985, and it's time he got a handle on it. Lesbians, gays and bisexuals make up a substantial portion of our campus population, and in my opinion, a support group would benefit us all. It cannot be the idea of a special interest group he objects to, for Campus Republicans (College Republicans) is just that, so I am left to conclude that he is an intolerant homo-phobic. It is a frightening notion to accept that one individual could reduce her/himself to the point of condemning another's sexual preference. Perhaps Mr. Gahagan should seek counseling.

STILLPOINT

BOB HAYWOOD

The Christmas Advent season has begun. Advent means "coming toward" and we are certainly in a "coming toward" time. We are "coming toward" exams. It is a real time of stress with papers to be completed, reading to be done and tests to be taken. Some are "coming toward graduation which carries its own combination of joy and stress when jobs are not readily discovered.

But, in the main, it is the advent of Christmas, a season that takes us back to the ancient days when the Hebrew people were looking and waiting for a Deliverer, the Promised One whom they expected to bring them freedom from the stress of Roman oppression and personal hopelessness. Wise men from outside Palestine looked into the heavens for a sign of the One to come. Holy men looked into their scriptures. Common folk looked to the places of power. The anticipation of all was focused on the places of wonder and holiness and power.

It behooves us to remember that when the Deliverer did come and was found, it was in the most ordinary of places. That moment, which for all Christians is the most holy because it is the intersection of eternity with human history, is a moment centered on the birth of a child to an ordinary family in a common stable in an obscure village in an occupied country.

The holiest, the most special moments of our life are often found in the most ordinary places. I hope you will not overlook them. Some very ordinary moments become transformed into times of high holiness through acts of love simply done. Find the housekeeping staff in your dorm, say thank you and see how it feels. Thank a professor when you discover that you have learned something new. Look at your friends one by one; figure out one thing you appreciate about them and tell them. Find the cafeteria staff and tell them about a meal you did like. Write down ten things you do like about yourself and celebrate. Stop a policeman and tell him that you appreciate him. If love lives in you, wrap it in swaddling clothes, the ordinary stuff of life, and give it to someone.

Every time you do, you will be taking a short, quick journey to the lowly Holy place deep inside each one of us. Such little acts of love feel good because they touch our own loving center. And, perhaps, during the stress of exams and in the midst of whatever other anxiety is affecting us, we need to remind ourselves that what happened almost 2,000 years ago is irrelevant unless there is a Holy loving place within us. Let part of your advent journey be a new "coming toward" your deeper holier self.

TRAVEL AND STUDY IN IRELAND

REGISTRATION SET FOR ON-CAMPUS HOUSING

TOUR OF CITY AND COUNTRY PLANNED

The University of Detroit and Oakland University in combination with University College, Cork and Trinity College, Dublin offer a new kind of Travel Study Program in Ireland.

"Irish Studies in the West," 10 May-20 June, located on the west coast of Ireland in County Kerry for five weeks and in Dublin for one week, gives a rounded picture of Ireland--its history, its literature, and its people--in two distinct environments--the country and the city.

It blends the teaching of history, literature and culture (an amalgam of archeology, music, folklore, geography, and art) with course-related field trips to such truly Irish cities as Cork, Dingle, Killarney, Tralee in the west as well as to myth- and history-laden sites in and around bustling Dublin.

The flavor of the west springs from the very locale of the program--ocean-front cottages on the Dingle Bay and the Ring of Kerry, amid the ancient customs of the country. Exploring and understanding the magic of rural Ireland--its language, its rugged terrain and breathtaking scenery--reveals the beauty of the unspoiled Irish nature.

Exploring and understanding the magic of urban Dublin with its huge population reveals the sophistication of the Irish nature. These "natures" together are what it means to be truly "Irish."

The Irish enjoy some of their balmy weather during May and June. Free time can be spent nearby indulging in a wide variety of sports--swimming, fishing (sea and river) wind-surfing, kayaking, tennis, horseback riding, bicycling, mountain climbing, jogging, walking, or just enjoying the spectacular sunsets over the Dingle Bay.

This happy immersion in Irish culture can gain graduates or undergraduates 3-8 semester credits or can be audited for $1,950 (including room, all meals, ground transportation, entrances, and theatre), plus $517 round-trip flight from Boston.

All University of North Carolina at Wilmington students who wish to live on campus during the 1986-87 academic year must register for the residence hall/apartment lottery before Jan. 24, 1986.

Registration will be conducted in the housing office in Belk Hall from 8:30 a.m.-4:30 p.m. Monday through Friday Jan. 15 through Jan. 24, 1986.

The drawing for on-campus housing will be held Jan. 27, 1986. Results will be posted in each residence hall/apartment lobby that evening.

There will be an information session to discuss the lottery and housing options for 1986-87 at 7 p.m., Wednesday, Dec. 4 on the second floor of the residence hall.

BIKING SAFETY

JULIA RANKIN
CONTRIBUTOR

Biking is beneficial to all healthwise, however, it can be equally as hazardous when abused. With approximately 2,000 bikers on campus, there are sure to be some accidents. "Only a small percentage of the bicycle accidents are reported," says Chief Joseph Johnson of the UNCW Campus Police. For every reported accident, there are around five unreported accidents. While most of the accidents are not so serious, we can prevent all by following safe driving rules.

Bikers are supposed to follow the same rules of the road as do drivers of motorized vehicles. These include riding with the traffic (close to the right side), obeying all traffic rules and signs, yielding to pedestrians, and the list goes on. Proper parking is also extremely important. Racks are provided in front of all the buildings on campus, but if you choose not to use them, don't block walkways! This can be hazardous to the handicapped as well as to pedestrians.

ZETA ALPHA XI HOLDS CONFERENCE

The Zeta Alpha Xi chapter of Phi Beta Lambda at UNC-Wilmington hosted the official North Carolina Phi Beta Lambda Fall Membership Training Conference. The conference took place at UNCW on Saturday, November 2, 1985. It gave Phi Beta Lambda members from all over the state an opportunity to meet one another, learn more about their fraternity, and share ideas. One hundred fifty-six students from twenty different schools attended the conference. The annual attendance award was presented to Piedmont Technical College for having 77% of their members present.

Mr. Bob Tillman, Lowes' Regional Vice President of region two, delivered an enlightened speech on the birth of a business enterprise. Other distinguished guests to appear were Dr. William Byran, Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs; Dr. Norman Kaylor, Dean of The Camerom School of Business; and Monte Zingleman, National Phi Beta Lambda Secretary. Monte came all the way from the University of North Dakota.

The next Phi Beta Lambda get-together will be April 4-6 at the North Carolina Phi Beta Lambda State Leadership Conference. This conference will be held in Charlotte, North Carolina.

BIKES, SEEN HERE, ARE EASY TO STEAL IF NOT CHAINED.

Drivers of motor vehicles should remember that bikes have a right to part of the road and respect the drivers part of the road also. As Chief Johnson put it, "Any contest between a bike and motor vehicle--you know who will win!"

Protecting your bike is also important. One important way is by registering your bike with the Campus Police. This can help insure the safety of your bike. With approximately 2,000 bikes on campus, only 300 are registered. If your bike is stolen and hasn't been registered, your chances aren't favorable for getting your bike back. It wouldn't take but a few minutes after class to go by and register your bike--and it would be worth it! Locks are another important way to protect your bike. Invest in a reliable lock. "If you pay only a dollar for a lock, you'll only get a dollar's worth of protection," points out Chief Joseph Johnson. The Citadel is a brand he recommends.

Take responsibility for your bike by registering it and buying a proper lock and take responsibility for your self by following the proper traffic rules! DO IT TODAY!

WORK STUDY PROGRAMS OFFERED

A number of College Work Study positions will be available for the spring semester. Students in the sciences are particularly needed. To be eligible a student must demonstrate financial need. Students with forms already on file may check with the financial aid office. Students wishing to apply may pick up forms in the financial aid office.

CHRISTMAS AT HARDEES

Steve Traut
Contributor

I recently laughed hysterically at the idea that a five-foot plastic imitation of a pine, adorned with blinking lights and colored balls and wound with a length of shredded white plastic, was not a Christmas tree at all, but rather was an X-mas tree. I was tired. The idea was funny because the "tree" was in Hardee's and because it was the only seasonal decoration in the place. As a solitary decoration, it seemed a little extreme for fast food.

Generally, it is hard to be extreme in Hardee's. It is especially hard at 1:30 a.m. At 1:30, people might be wearing leather or fur or denim or sequins, and they might dance on the wet floor or play "Dungeons and Dragons" or light up a joint. They might study accounting.

One night last May when I was there cramming three chapters of adolescent psychology, a party of four gave me frowns and quizzical looks. They sat down and wondered (within my hearing range) how anybody could study "in Hardee's." That they were dressed in tuxedos and evening gowns was obviously beside the point.

This guy in leather was sitting two booths up from me. He kept getting up and going to the counter, leaning down on it until someone in uniform spoke to him. If they did not speak to him, he would go outside and ride his Garelli moped around Hardee's for a while. He walked with a limp. He looked to be about seventeen. When he sat down in his booth a third time and lit a cigarette, I honestly wanted to ask him what was the point. I was tired.

Of course there was no point. Though I could have asked, it would have been absurd to expect an answer. I have seen girls 12 or 13 years old stay in Hardee's for hours in the middle of the night. During this time they do not giggle as they might during the day. They talk quietly. It is not natural to me.

On a Friday night I studied in Hardee's from 11:30 until just after 3:00. I saw the cycle. Between these times certain events occurred.

At 12:00 the library at UNCW closed. Three people toed book bags into the place. Generally students make a bee-line for the back, where it is relatively isolated and well-lighted. But those booths were full. Instead, the three found places along the sides, where there was light from the parking lot through the windows. In a minute tables are covered with paper and books. The students talk to no one. They all order coffee.

At 1:00 the bars closed. Soon after one the invasion trickled in. Wearing their dark jeans and their sweaters and shoulderless dresses, they came in from the cold. After a while the Muzak was inaudible. The press at the counter was a laughing, dancing mass that camouflaged the hustle behind. In line and walking to tables, women talked loudly, staring at the students and at the guy in leather. Yet when they were all seated, the men began. The conversation was the same for both. It was all so quick and so full of the moment's minutiae that it was not remembered, even by them.

Of course, there were still the odd ones out. Two men arrived in a taxi, came in to order, then took it all out and ate with the driver in the cab. An overweight man squeezed into a booth with an apple pie and a medium Pepsi. For these people the after hours gang was at once entertaining and intimidating. They had only to keep a safe distance. For the students the gang was merely temporary.

In an hour the first round was over. Before 2:00 Hardee's was quiet again save for the raging of the Muzak. But shortly after the hour a second wave hit. With one or two exceptions, this group was identical to the last. They were loud and full of motion. They were all in style. Yet unlike the 1:00 rush, they all arrived at the same time and they were all black.

Often when I have been in Hardee's for a few hours I begin to feel a fear creeping on. When many people have come and gone and I am tired, it occurs to me that I have not moved even to look at the clock. When the students are all asleep in their booths and even the guy in leather has gone, I become unable to remember what brought me there--what, in essence, the point was. That is when I leave.

SKI TRIP STILL OPEN

Dr. Dean Allen has announced that the ski trip to Boone is still open for registration. The trip is planned for January 5-9. It is offered by the Health and Physical Education department and can be taken as a class with one credit hour. It can also be taken as a recreational trip and is also available to non-students. The cost is $180 and includes lessons, equipment, lodging and lift tickets for the five day trip.

"The trip will be an excellent trip for beginners," says Dr. Allen. "Most of the class will be beginners making it a learning experience and an enjoyable trip for all." For more information call Dr. Allen at 395-3768 or stop by at Trask 103.

GREEK LIFE TASK FORCE

Continuation of interview with Vice-Chancellor of Student Affairs, Dr. William Bryan concerning the Greek Life Task Force.

Q: Has the office of Student Affairs developed and adopted a statement of "Institutional Relationships" as recommended by the Task Force?

Dr. Bryan: I discussed this with the Greek Life Task Force and see no problems with their recommendation and agree that a policy is needed. A Committee on Institutional Relationships (CIR) has been formed to study and formulate an Institutional Relationships Statement with this Greek System. The committee will report to me by Feb. 15, 1986.

Q: What is being done on the academic recommendation?

Dr. Bryan: We can only request some type of academic standards for the Greek system, we can't mandate a set of standards. The CIR is going to make a recommendation in its report dealing with the area of academics.

Q: Was this report responsible for the new program of allowing two Greek organizations housing on campus?

Dr. Bryan: It is partially due to this report and also due to the Residence Life Task Force Report. At this present time, 3 Greek organizations have requested housing; no other clubs have requested housing.

Q: What are your feelings on the Alumni recommendation?

Dr. Bryan: The Greek system needs to improve contacts with alumni overall. They need to keep in regular contact with alumni, not just when they are needed. The alumni role needs to be defined by the Greek system.

Q: Will all Greek organizations have to be members of the Interfraternity/ Panhellenic councils?

Dr. Bryan: This is being studied by the CIR.

Q: What is being done for the image of the Greek System?

Dr. Bryan: We have asked the IFC and Pan Councils to look at the first, second, and fourth recommendations under "Image," and report back by Feb. 15, 1986. These recommendations are:

1. Greek organizations should solicit the involvement of faculty and staff in their activities.

2. Greek organizations should be more visible and participate in a variety of university functions.

3. Greek organizations should develop and expand their public relations so that the University and the community are aware of the variety of projects and activities in which they participate.

Q: Could you please give me a general overview of the Task Force and its report.

Dr. Bryan: The Task Force report is very worthwhile, and gives positive input for the Greek system. When the Task Force was formed its purpose was to help the system, not control it. An important aspect will be the Institutional Relationship Statement recommendation between the Greek System and the University. These policies will be analogous to a road map, and give direction to this system. The future of the Greek System is in the hands of the Greeks themselves; they are the key.

Next Semester: The views of the Greek Advisor and a few members of the Greek System.

JOSEPH PRESSLEY
MANAGING EDITOR

THEATER TRYOUTS TO BE HELD

The University Theatre will hold tryouts on January 13-14 at 6:00 p.m. and 7:30 p.m. in the S.R.O. Theatre for John Van Druten's "I Am a Camera." There are parts for three men in their twenties and four women of various ages.

"I Am a Camera" is an exciting tale of unusual people brought together in pre-war Berlin. It presents a coming of age of youth in a bizarre world that is moving toward total catastrophe. A young English girl, Sally Bowles, is declaring freedom while the people around her move toward slavery. It is a world of contrasts that make it possible for fascinating characters to exist. The play is an actor's play but always the hold of the stage will visually support it.

The production will be under the direction of W. Terry Rogers with scenic design by Walter Thompson. Kevin Moore will coordinate all technical elements while designing original sound and light. Bonnie Rogers will design and supervise the construction of 1930 costumes.

If you have any desire to be a part of a creative theatre production please contact the Creative Arts Department. You will be welcomed with open arms. Remember, the University Theatre is "your" theatre.

WELL NOTES

It's that time again-exams, and exam anxiety that leads to headaches, upset stomachs, infections, diarrhea, and possibly a few other symptoms that are brought on or made worse by stress. Stress is your body's response to pressure, strain, and threats. It can be pleasant and productive, or unpleasant and harmful.

The bad news is that your health, your well-being may suffer because of pre-exam stress, and/or exam anxiety. The good news is that you are in charge of how you choose to react to personal pressures, and how to accommodate your educational goals to personal goals and desires. Obviously, if you feel that your whole life and future hinge on how well you score on an exam, you are building a situation that can cause severe anxiety and physical symptoms.

SYMPTOMS OF TOO MUCH STRESS:

headaches, irritability, loss of appetite, overeating, always rushing, inability to relax, sleep disorders, digestive disorders

There are several ways you can plan now on how to take charge of your body's response to stress these next few weeks.

Make a commitment to:

- *eat well-fruit, vegetables; cut back on the junk food (sweets, fried foods, sodas, etc.)
- *take breaks from studying; go for a walk, get fresh air
- *reduce or eliminate tobacco, caffeine, alcohol, sugar, salt
- *get as much sleep as you need, or can possibly get
- *find a friend to ventilate your frustrations with
- *avoid self-medication-these chemicals often mask stress symptoms. The ability to handle stress comes from within you, not from the outside
- *take one thing at a time-don't tackle everything at once
- *go easy on yourself; try not to be too self-critical
- *get physically comfortable, close your eyes and choose a place or memory that helps you relax-build a daydream
- *imagine yourself calm and confident as you "practice" taking your exam in the classroom.

Since no one can build a life completely free from stress, it is important to develop some ways of dealing with it; now and in the future.

PARKING FRAUD BECOMES ISSUE

MONA FRANKLIN

The use of fraudulent parking stickers and guest parking passes has become an issue at UNCW. Ms. Margaret Taylor of the UNCW Parking Administration office says that there are some individuals who have tried to use stolen or fake parking decals in an attempt to get around the required $46 parking fee that faculty, students, and administrators must pay to park their cars on campus. Unofficial speculation is that these fraudulent actions are causing the current price for parking decals to increase. According to sources at the Parking Office their primary concern is to keep the price of the decals from increasing. However, attempts by such persons who try to use the fake stickers simply adds up to more paperwork and consequently higher prices.

Since the incidents have occurred, the Parking office has begun efforts to crack down on these attempts at cheating. So far several persons have been implicated and caught in various schemes. Michael Godfrey, a student at UNCW, was caught using a UNCW Guest Parking sticker rather than purchase a UNCW student parking decal. Godfrey's scheme was discovered by campus security who first noticed his car was parked on campus every day with a Guest Parking decal attached to his rear windshield. Upon further examination of his car police noted UNCW notebooks in the backseat. Security ran a check on Godfrey's license plate to determine ownership of the vehicle. Godfrey was immediately fined $15 on the spot. After being fined Godfrey indicated that he did not use his car regularly, but he had taken the Guest parking decals when he worked with the Office of Special Programs last summer. According to the handbook on Student Life there is no means to prosecute such behavior. Godfrey has been told that if his car is seen again without a decal on campus the Dean of Student's office will be notified.

Along with the misuse of Guest Parking stickers comes the problem of theft of decals from those students who purchase them. Chuck Hobgood's on-campus parking decal was removed from his car before Thanksgiving. No progress has been made on recovery although Mr. Hobgood has been issued a new decal at no further expense.

The UNCW student identification card has been redesigned. It looks much like the current card, but has two big differences: the photo is much larger and brighter in color, and there is space for your birth date. The new cards will be pre-printed by computer for all new students arriving in January.

Students who need a replacement ID card from now through the end of the semester will be issued the new card. Birthdate can be included with driver's license proof of age.

HOMEcoming EVENTS PLANNED

WOODY GUTHRIE
STAFF WRITER

At schools with major college football teams, homecoming is held in the fall in connection with the game including the marching band, the crowning of the queen and the return of alumni back to reminisce their undergraduate days. The University Program Board Special Events Committee hopes to capture this same kind of spirit with UNCW's Homecoming activities taking place January 20-23, culminating with a Saturday night basketball game against James Madison University at Trask Coliseum.

Nominations are being compiled for King and Queen candidates and voting will take place January 20-22 at the University Union.

Thursday evening marks the first of the festive activities with "The Mad Hatters Ball," which is a hat party featuring live music by The Boneshakers. They are expected to mix cover music by The Cars, Kool and the Gang, REM, The Romantics and Billy Idol with some of their own original music and new rock. The dance will take place at the Union, Rm. 100 from 8 pm to midnight. There will be prizes for best hats, with punch and hors d'oeuvres served. Admission will be $3 for the party.

On Friday evening, a more traditional Homecoming event will be the bonfire/pep rally, complete with the UNCW Cheerleaders to bring support for the Seahawks Saturday Night. The Seahawks have experienced low attendance despite a winning season with the exception of the Navy game.

BRIAN ROWSOM ELECTRIFIES THE GYM WITH ANOTHER SLAM. ROWSOM WILL LEAD THE SEAHAWKS IN THE HOMEcoming GAME SAT.

A bigger crowd could be expected Saturday night when the Seahawks face the Dukes and the Homecoming royalty will be announced and crowned.

Following is a complete schedule of Homecoming activities: Mon.-Wed., Jan. 20-22, voting for King and Queen from 10-2 and 7-9 in the University Union Foyer; Thurs., Jan. 23, 1st Annual "Mad Hatters Ball, 8pm-midnight live music, punch and hors d'oeuvres, BYOB. Admission $3; Fri., Jan. 24, 6:30 pm, Bonfire/Pepp Rally at Brooks Field beside the Tennis Courts. Hot refreshments, Free; Sat., Jan. 25, 7:30 p.m., Homecoming game. UNCW v/s James Madison with the crowning of King and Queen at halftime.

STUDENT AID POSSIBLY CUT BY 60%

COURTESY CPS

Congress' new budget-balancing bill, passed in December, could mean student aid soon could be cut by as much as 60 percent, some college lobbyists here warn.

The first round of cuts is due March 1. Various sources estimate the first round could mean decreases of anywhere from two to 40 to 60 percent in all student aid programs.

The new laws, usually called the Gramm-Rudman law after senators Philip Gramm (R-Tex) and Warren Rudman (R-NH), who co-sponsored it, forces the federal government to balance its budget by 1991.

But in doing so, Congress is not allowed to cut spending for Social Security, some welfare programs, many defense programs or to pay off the federal debt.

So, unless the government tries to help balance the budget by raising some taxes, education programs will be tempting fiscal targets, lobbyists say. Just how deep the first round of cuts will be is open to debate.

By calculating current Gramm-Rudman targets and the escalating deficit, Susan Frost of the Committee for Education Funding figures the U.S. Dept. of Education will have to shave all its college program funding by 4.6 percent in March and another 30 percent in October.

Educators are reluctant to specify just how many students would be forced out of school by the cuts, or to estimate how much schools would have to raise tuition to compensate for them.

They do, however, think the cuts will hurt badly.

"Consequences of Gramm-Rudman's possible 40 to 60 percent cuts in higher education (by next fall) will be absolutely disastrous to millions of current and future students," observes Kathy Ozer, legislative director of the U.S. Student Association (USSA).

The same pressure to reduce spending could also force Congress to reduce college program funding in the upcoming Higher Education Act of 1985, which sets spending levels through 1990, adds Pat Smith, legislative analyst for the American Council on Education (ACE).

Under the new law, Ozer estimates Congress will have to trim about $11.7 billion from the 1986 fiscal year budget by March.

If it doesn't President Reagan would "sequester" funds, deciding by himself which programs not to fund in order to save money.

Based on what he's done before, the president would seem likely to cut education programs to do it.

In each year since 1980, President Reagan has proposed cutting federal student aid programs by as much as 50 percent. Congress historically has rejected those cuts, choosing instead to freeze most programs at or near their 1981-82 levels for the last three years.

The federal government will spend about $8 billion on student aid programs this year -- about the same as in fiscal 1985 before a supplemental appropriation bill funding Guaranteed Student Loans passed.

After March, the Gramm-Rudman law then mandates the government to find ways to keep reducing the federal deficit by $36 billion a year through the rest of this decade.

One way to reduce the deficit, of course, is to raise taxes. More and more people are talking about a tax increase. It will be the only way," reports Tom Gleason, a spokesman for Sen. Gary Hart (D-Co).

"I don't think there is a proclivity toward cuts," agrees Bob Sneed, an aide to Sen. Ernest Hollings (D-SC). "Most people think drastic reductions" without accompanying tax hikes "will be dead on arrival" in Congress.

Gleason thinks some conservative senators will endorse tax hikes if they help spare the defense budget from cuts, though he doesn't expect them to publicly support the hikes until after next falls elections.

Ozer worries fall may be too late for many student aid programs.

"Clearly cuts will be triggered before possible tax legislation," she says.

ACE's Smith, moreover, doesn't think states readily will replace federal student aid cuts with funds of their own.

"We haven't heard of any quantum leaps in state aid," Smith says. "It tends to go up with inflation, and that's it."

WLOZ ANNOUNCES PROGRAM SCHEDULE GUIDE FOR LISTENING TO WLOZ

The spaces indicated in black on the program guide will consist of modern music as 2 of 4 in our rotation, and classic old music as one song in 4, reggae, funk, punk, and heavy metal will conclude the other 1/4 of regular rotation.

A lunchtime feature, "Rock Back" will be presented from 12pm to 1pm on Monday thru Friday. This feature will consist of classic rock from the 50's, 60's, and 70's.

Monday nights will feature a 2 hour program beginning at 9pm entitled Springtime "Metal" odies. Springtime "Metal" odies will satisfy the requests for hard rock, or metal.

Tuesday night from 9pm to 10pm, "The Lone Groover" will give a solid hour of a single artist or group. The show will emphasize music and information on the band, which will vary from week to week.

Thursday's feature is, "Virgin Vinyl", will debut a new album each week. The album will be the recording which WLOZ feels is the best release of the week.

On Friday's at 9pm the telephone lines will be opened up to the audience for requests. At this time we will also be able to evaluate our audience's response to our format.

"Not for Squares Only" is produced and distributed by Intercollegiate Broadcast System. "Not for Squares..." is a non-technical program of standard classical music. This program is perfect for us as we do not have a sufficient classical music library to produce our own show at this time.

At 11am on Saturday morning, A three hour jazz session called "The Blue Note."

Immediately following the jazz program, The late 50's and 60's will be revisited via "Head Shop." "Head Shop" will emphasize many form and ideas of the era through rockabilly, folk rock, hard rock, and pop.

"Punk & Disorderly", a highly requested, sorely missed (in our area) look at some of the music that doesn't even attempt to try and conform to any standards. Not for everyone, but certainly worth checking out.

At 9pm on Saturday nights, it's "The Radio Stew Comedy Hour." "Radio Stew" comes to us through IBS from KAIR at the University of Colorado.

Sunday Mornings at 9am, Something very new will be presented to our audience, "Dreamstreet 6" is a half-hour show with some of the fine poets of our time, and deals with such subjects as love and death, war and peace, the natural, and visions.

Owby's World" is half hour interviews on topics of general interest. This series is hosted by broadcaster Jim Owby.

"Outside Interests," an archaeological/biological oriented program covering things from political awareness in children to film genres to the temple projects in Greece.

Discussions of contemporary issues from the perspective of the humanities will get the spotlight each Sunday morning on a program entitled "The Public Eye." Discussions include civil rights, ERA, justice in America, heroes, totem and taboo, American culture, and more.

"Cambridge Forum" is a continuing series featuring authoritative speakers confronting issues of public concern. The show will be an hour long beginning at 11am on Sunday morning. Such guests as B.F. Skinner, John O'Connor, E. O. Wilson, and Pete Seeger will be but a few of the personalities hosting this event.

"UNCW Forum" is our local spotlight which will host campus interviews, lectures, debates and other subjects of interest to the university community.

At 4pm on Sunday, "Fresh Session" will feature funk and dance music, as well as blues and popular music.

PROFESSORS AID TOURISM EFFORT

UNCW NEWS BUREAU

Two professors in The University of North Carolina at Wilmington health, physical education, and recreation department have been awarded a grant of $1,800 from the Greater Wilmington Chamber of Commerce to assist in developing a press kit for travel writers. The kit will be designed to promote the Cape Fear Coast.

Dr. Robert Wolff, recreation curriculum coordinator, and Dr. Nancy J. Gladwell, assistant professor of health, physical education, and recreation, will develop a survey to be sent to travel editors to determine the most effective items to include in a press kit. Following the actual press kit development and distribution, a follow-up survey will assess its effectiveness.

Grant funds will be used to purchase a micro-computer and printer for the recreation and park management curriculum within the HPER department to enable the investigators to more effectively conduct these assessments.

The $1,800 is part of a $5,000 grant to the Chamber of Commerce from the N.C. Department of Travel and Tourism.

SUMMER TRIP PLANNED TO COSTA RICA

Looking for an exciting way to spend your summer break?

Dr. James Sabella of the Anthropology Department is offering (May 17-June 24) a trip to Costa Rica as part of a joint program with ECU. Spanish is not required, nor a particular major. Classes will be offered in anthropology, geology, and Spanish.

Costa Rica is a country located in Central America and borders both the Pacific Ocean and the Caribbean Sea. Besides these attractions, students will visit banana plantations, national parks, lowland tropical forests, volcanoes, coffee farms, and the cultural centers of San Jose and Cartago.

"It's a wonderful environment," says Sabella. "The fruit and vegetables grown there are like none other." Sabella also says the climate is ideal and

SWEDISH ACADEMY FUNDS RESEARCH

UNCW NEWS BUREAU

Dr. Robert Y. George, professor of biology at The University of North Carolina at Wilmington and the Institute of Marine Biomedical Research, has been awarded a grant of 25,000 Swedish Kronor (approximately $3,240) by the Swedish Royal Academy of Sciences. The funds will support research at the Kristineberg Marine Biology Station in Sweden in July 1986.

Kristineberg Marine Biology Station is the oldest marine lab in the world, said George. Located north of Goteborg, Sweden's second largest city, Kristineberg is situated on a fiord due east of Oslo, Norway.

George's research will focus on studies of the Arctic krill in the Scandinavian fiords. During his time there, he will give a series of lectures at Stockholm and Lund University under the sponsorship of the Nobel Foundation.

Dr. Jarle-Ove Stromberg, director of the Kristineberg Marine Laboratory and professor of oceanography, has visited UNCW's Institute of Marine Biomedical Research twice when he and George were working on krill research here. Stromberg and George will be working to develop an educational exchange at the graduate level for UNCW marine biology graduate students and students at Kristineberg. Accompanying George to Sweden this summer will be at least four UNCW graduate students.

Professors George and Stromberg have collaborated in the publication of two important papers on egg development of the Arctic krill. George said they plan to do the same type of work on the Antarctic krill and look at the deep sea life in the fiords.

CAMPUS DEMOCRAT

JEFF BARNHILL

Lee Iacocca, in his recent autobiography, talks about the difference Democrats and Republicans:

"I realize that I'm stereotyping. I'm the first to admit that when things are going well, when I've made a lot of money, I favored the Republicans. But ever since coming to Chrysler, I've learned toward the Democrats. Overall, I'm for the COMMON-SENSE PARTY, and when the chips are down, that is usually the Democrats. The Democrats put PEOPLE ahead of ideology. They deal with people, they deal with jobs. Republicans deal with trickle-down theories of investment."

I believe the Democratic Party still more nearly reflects the thinking, hopes and aspirations of the majority of the people because it is as Mr. Iacocca says, the party that believes in people. Unlike any other party, the Democrats embrace men and women of every color, and every economic class.

Democrats have always "stood up" for those among who lack rank, power or privilege, and, at the same time, have provided opportunities for those with initiative and wealth.

Now for fifty years the Democrats have created a better future for our great country and state, using traditional Democratic principles. Truman's NATO and the GI Bill of Rights; Kennedy's intelligent tax bill and the Alliance for Progress; Johnson's civil rights; Carter's human rights and the nearly miraculous Camp David Peace Accord.

Please remember that fifty years of progress under Democratic Presidents never cost us what the last five years of Ronald Reagan have.

In our great state, Democrats have created and expanded job opportunities for our citizens.

Thirty years ago, a Democratic Governor, Luther B. Hodges, envisioned a modern park devoted to scientific and industrial research and created the world renowned Research Triangle Park.

Democratic Governors since then-Terry Sanford, Dan Moore, Bob Scott, and Jim Hunt-have moved our state to the forefront nationally of economic progress.

Today a new generation of Democratic leaders in Washington and in the state are fighting for fairness, for what is right. People like, Sen. Bill Bradley and Congressman Richard Gephardt. In 1982 they presented the first major proposal to simplify our tax laws and make them more fair.

In North Carolina leaders like Lt. Governor Bob Jordan and Rep. Harry Payne (of Wilmington) believe we should put our money where our mouth is on education, transportation, water supply, waste and sewage disposal, public safety, and the preservation of the small farm.

I am proud to be an American and I am proud to be a member of the Party which got us where we are, The Democratic Party.

If you would like to join the Young Democrats of New Hanover County and help start a college group here at U.N.C.W., please contact Jeff Barnhill (763-9534) or John Stuart (675-3075).

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

TO THE EDITOR:

In the November 19 issue of the Seahawk, Mr. Gahagan, of the College Republicans, attacked (with bold print, yet!) me and my views about Nicaragua as well as "feminists" and "gays." The more I thought about his column, the sadder I have become, for I recognize a kind of thinking that seems to me to be "clear and present danger" to our American Democratic process. My letter is not so much a reply as an alert to a way of thinking of which we must all beware.

First of all, Mr. Gahagan uses the tactic of lumping people into categories as a means of judging and discounting them. Simply labeling people as "feminists" or "gay and lesbian" or "peacenik" does a disservice to individuals with personal dreams and ideals. Likewise, pejorative terms like "Gloria Steinham clones" or "band of murderous Sandinistas" or even the simple word "liberal" used like a club is a way to discount groups of people without taking their ideas or feelings seriously.

Secondly, Mr. Gahagan uses the tactic of setting forth statements that are false and expecting them to be believed simply because the strident tone with which those ideas are set forth. The belief is, evidently, that if you shout a lie loud enough, people will believe it! The evidence does not bear out the statement that Nicaragua has a totalitarian form of government, the Nicaraguan citizens have no rights, that gay students all need counseling. That those who disagree with the Sandinistas "are sent to relocation centers and never seen again" is a distortion of truth. If Mr. Gahagan would check with Amnesty International or the International Red Cross, he would discover that the human rights record of Nicaragua since the revolution 1979 is a hundred times better than that of El Salvador or Honduras or Guatemala.

Thirdly, it saddens me that Mr. Gahagan is so sure of himself that he chooses to be condescending in his analysis of me and my views. Both my faith and my understanding of American citizenship teaches me the value of tolerance of others of differing views. I feel no tolerance from Mr. Gahagan.

Worse, and most importantly, I see in this article no interest in truth. Young people need to learn that dealing with an issue is not a matter of taking a stand and shouting everyone else down, but a process of seeking facts, hearing opposing views, and weighing evidence, all in an effort to discern the truth as best we can.

I am glad for Mr. Gahagan's interest in public policies issues. More students need to struggle with such matters. Whatever weakness exists in his style, it is better than apathy.

But our American way is based on a two-party system and the interaction of people with differing views. The tactics Mr. Gahagan uses-- judgemental categorization of people, strident proclamation of opinion as truth and condescension towards serious thinking persons are most commonly found in the totalitarian regimes Mr. Gahagan espouses to abhor. They have no place in our Democratic process and yet they are being seen and heard more and more. It is scary!

BOB HAYWOOD

TO THE EDITOR:

The members of the Interfraternity council would like to express our views and concerns over the newest group of UNCW, the ΦFJs.

We would like for it to be known that we, the members and organizations of the IFC, are not opposed to any group getting together in social aspects to have a good time. Quite to the contrary. We feel that the social life of a college student is a very important and vital part of the college life. However, we are opposed to the use of Greek letters that the group is exhibiting, and the image that they may cast over the entire Greek system.

The Greek Letter organization dates back to 1963 on the campus of UNCW. During this time, we have constantly strived to set forth a positive image to the scholastic community and the Wilmington area as a whole. However, the 1985 year has found the Greeks stronger than ever. Through community service projects, public relation efforts, and increasing harmony within the system, many more students and Wilmington residents are beginning to see the true meaning and advantages to being a Greek. We fear, however, that any group wearing "Greek letters" that is not a member of the IFC or Panhellenic may set us back in our efforts.

To the unknowing public, these men wearing the ΦFU letters are just as much a part of the Greek society as are the true and deserving members. This is our concern. As Greeks, we have certain codes of conduct that we strive to follow in order to promote a positive image. Any group wearing letters and failing to follow this code could bring the system down. The work put into the Greek system over the last seventeen years is far too great to see one group of men come along and unknowingly begin to tear it down.

Another issue of concern is their use of the Greek Letters. To the unknowing eyes of the public, these letters are as Greek as any others walking around campus. This could not be farther from the truth. Only one of the three letters displayed could be called Greek. The letter representing F--- is in reality an upside down Lambda, while the U is an upside down Omega. Every Greek organization's letters have a special and significant meaning. They are worn with pride and honor. We feel that this new group is displaying the exact opposite meanings and therefore are taking away from the honor of all other Greek Letter Societies.

All true Greek Letter Societies have a great amount of responsibilities that go along with wearing the letters. As stated before, they are community and public relationships, financial obligations, ritual responsibilities, academic duties, and knowledge of the Greek system. The ΦFJs demonstrate none of these vital aspects.

We would welcome the men of this organization to talk with us and state their case. If they are interested in joining the IFC, we would be glad to help get their club organized in order to be recognized by the university and community. There are many great advantages to being a Greek in today's society. But such advantages occur only through hard work and effort. If these men are interested in our offer to come before the council and state their opinions, they should see Ellen Seretnick in the Student Activities office to set up such a meeting.

We do encourage and sincerely hope to meet with this group. We feel that they could indeed help strengthen the Greek system at UNCW and make this a better campus and community if they would focus their energy in a positive direction and come up with real Greek Letters that have a meaning.

In closing, we would like to make it perfectly clear the ΦFU organization is in no way recognized by the university or by the Greek system. We do not approve of their use of letters, of what the letters stand for, or the actions of the group. We would like to stress that THESE MEN ARE NOT GREEKS. Please do not interpret their symbols, meaning, or actions as such. IFC

CAMPUS REPUBLICAN

MICKEY GAHAGAN

Why Republican? I am always asked, Why am I so adamantly vocal in my conservative beliefs?

In the last five years there has been, to quote President Reagan, a second American Revolution. Having suffered through the humiliation of the Carter Administration, Americans were ready for a big change. We were tired of taking flack from the Soviet Union, Libya, Iran and many third world countries. The Carter Administration buckled under to every foreign policy challenge encountered. Especially in the case of the Soviet Union in Cuba, and the hostages being held in Iran. Americans were horrified and humiliated with President Carter's lack of control in these crisis.

Not only was his foreign policy in shambles, Carter's domestic record was even worse. President Carter, when defeated, left the country with 9.5% unemployment, double digit inflation and 21% interest rates, lead the way for the worst recession since the great depression.

As a result of these democratic failures, Ronald Reagan and Republican Senate were elected in 1980. The Reagan Administration acted swiftly and directly to restore a strong economy, national defense and a greater pride in the nation. Worthless social giveaways, passed by self-righteous liberals to make themselves feel good, were cut. A strong and growing economy then provided jobs for those people who had been trapped in a perpetuating welfare system.

Under the direction of President Reagan the United States once again has become a respected world leader. We support those freedom fighters battling communism in our own hemisphere and around the world. The United States forces rescued medical students living in Grenada and liberated that country from totalitarian rule such as those in Nicaragua, Libya, and Angola.

America has truly come back as promised by the Republican Party; prouder and stronger and better.

Many people have expressed concern over the surge of interest in the Republican party. Perhaps they should get accustomed to it. A 1985 Gallup poll showed 38% of 18 to 29 year olds prefer the Republican and only 31 Republican membership increased last year (a non-election) year from 75,000 percent lean to the Democrats. College students on 900 campuses to 100,000 students on 1200 campuses. Democratic clubs have 55,000 members on 580 campuses. Students are going to vote with the party that will provide them with the brightest future. They are more interested in low interest rates, low unemployment, and low inflation than high spending on usually worthless social programs.

Many students are also concerned with the abundance of liberalism at most universities. Many instructors in their college days were more comfortable screaming "down America" from behind a barricade than working in the classroom to brighten their future. Because of this liberal bias on campuses Accuracy in Academia was founded. This conservative group combats blatant liberalism that may effect the quality education we pay for.

All of the above reasons are adequate explanation for my involvement as a Republican and why I voice my opinions so strongly. If you would like to become a member of the largest student political organization in the free world, College Republicans, look for our membership table in the Student Union or call me at 256-9153.

BOB HAYWOOD

Life passes by so swiftly. 1986! And January is half over already! Events that a few years ago kept me totally preoccupied have now become vague memories; conflicts that a few months ago seemed so crucial in my life now seem futile and hardly worth the energy; inner turmoil that robbed me of my sleep only a few weeks ago has become a strange emotion of the past; thoughts that kept my mind active just last night have lost their power and have been replaced by others.

If January invites reflection, perhaps it would be worthy to reflect on our rapidly shifting sense of priorities and how what seemed so very crucial and significant quickly fades into obscurity and forgetfulness. Why is it that we are trapped by such a sense of urgency and emergency so that every activity, every encounter, and every task gets stamped with emotionally controlling labels like "crucial", "important",

"must not fail". And with such labels comes anxiety, fear, and worry.

I need, I believe we all need to develop a sense of perspective. We are cursed with and driven by a sense of immediacy on the one hand and, on the other, worry about our worth which forces us to always be proving our value by doing, doing, doing. Let me invite you to reflect on your deeper values and goals as you move further into 1986 and become intentional about what you label as urgent and important. For me, spiritual, journey toward God which yields among many things, a sense of a timeless and eternal love of God, is slowly helping me break free of some of the daily urgencies that leave me so highly scheduled and exhausted. My hope is that both you and I can free ourselves from some of the shoulds, ought to's and musts of daily life in favor of some deeper connection and commitment that will nourish in us the wellspring of peace.

COMMENTARY

The issue which I shall raise in this address, and in reply to welcomed responses, is by no means unimportant, nor is it so important that it should cause an immediate panic, which many, I am sure, will claim is my hidden aim. Furthermore, I ask all to use fairness in regard to the administration, and I ask that no unnecessary, improper, or unjust language be levied against the administration in any attempt to accuse them of malicious guilt.

I charge the administration with, either intentionally or unintentionally, placing the issue of lighting for campus security too low on their list of priorities. Standing by the principle that no one should be accused without evidence, nor convicted without proof, I shall offer documentation.

On February 3, 1985 Pat Leonard, Associate Dean of Students, presented a four page memorandum to Bill Bryan, Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs. The subject of the memorandum was "Lighting and other Safety Issues on Campus." It consisted of twenty-six designated areas of needed lighting improvements over the entire campus.

On January 7, 1986, one year after the memorandum, I took it upon myself to personally check all of the designated areas in order to determine if the memorandum had been followed up on. The results were as follows. One of the areas was correct by completion of a building project that was under construction at the time of the memorandum. Another was corrected by the lights that the S. G. A. put up at the dorm basketball court. There appeared to have possibly been some improvements in two other areas. The only definite improvements were the installation of a few sidewalks and the clearing of some woods dangerously close to a path which is now a sidewalk. Other than these few examples the rest of the unit areas are in the same condition as they were a year ago.

I invite anyone from the administration with proper knowledge to write a response in order to answer the charges of neglecting the subject of lighting for campus security. I would like to know why the conditions have not been corrected in the past year? Is the administration planning to put up more lights as the memorandum recommended? If they are planning to put up more lights, where and when will they be put up?

ST. JOHNS MUSEUM OF ART ANNOUNCES MEETING

WILMINGTON, NC -The annual meeting of the Tri-State Sculptors Educational Association, Inc., will be held in Wilmington Oct. 3-5, 1986. In conjunction with the conference, the sculptors will bring examples of their work which will be on exhibit for the months of October and November.

St. John's Museum of Art will host the exhibit of members' indoor sculpture and some outdoor work. The University of North Carolina at Wilmington will host the conference, workshops, and exhibition of some works.

Conference coordinator is Stephen D. LeQuire, assistant professor of creative arts at UNCW. Among the themes being explored for the conference is "Neo-Primitivism: Relic, Ritual, and Celebration," LeQuire said. Final plans and names of speakers will be announced next summer, but planners are working toward a nationally known panel of artists and art critics with some sessions open to the public.

The Tri-State Sculptors Educational Association, Inc., was formed in 1978 by a group of sculptors from Virginia, North Carolina, and South Carolina. The purposes of the organization are to promote public awareness and appreciation of sculpture and to provide a forum for the exchange of ideas and information among its members' work to interested groups and publishes a newsletter for its members.

For additional information about the meeting, contact LeQuire at UNCW, 601 South College Road, Wilmington, N.C. 28403 or Norman Keller, president, 422 W. 4th St., Greenville, N.C. 27834.

PROFESSORS RECEIVE FUNDING TO SUPPORT RESEARCH

UNCW NEWS BUREAU

The UNCW Faculty Research and Development Fund Committee has awarded grants to support four faculty development projects. Individuals receiving the funds and their projects are as follows:

* Dr. T. Earl Allen, professor of physical education at UNCW, will receive up to $300 in tuition reimbursement to attend a course entitled "Gross Human Anatomy of the Trunk and Limbs."

* Dr. Lawrence Cahoon, assistant professor of biological sciences, will receive up to $500 to allow him to participate in an Institute for Professional Education Seminar, "Applied Multivariate Methods Using Popular Statistical Computing Packages."

* Dr. David Royce, research physiologist at The Institute of Marine Biomedical Research and associate professor of biological sciences, was awarded a maximum of $840 to participate in a short course in computer language for biologists at Woods Hole, Mass.

* Dr. Larry Uisilton, associate professor of history, will receive up to $400 to support course development for a project entitled "A Medieval Institution: Monks and Monasteries in the Modern World."

Faculty Research and Development Funds are awarded in the fall and spring, with selection determined by faculty peers. Approximately $15,000 in grant funds are awarded each year to support faculty research and development, said Dr. John J. Manock, director of research administration at UNCW.

UPB OPENS SEMESTER WITH MANY EVENTS

UPB NEWS

Welcome Back! We hope you all had a wonderful holiday, and are ready for a semester filled with a lot of exciting entertainment.

We opened up the semester with four exciting events. On Sunday, January 12 we had a double feature with "Raiders of The Lost Ark" and "Indiana Jones and The Temple of Doom" On Wednesday, January 15, the arts and lectures committee in coordination with WHSL presented "The Roots of Rock-n-Roll", a lecture and multimedia production. On Friday, January 17, Jill Holly, a singer, songwriter, who accompanies herself, put on a mini concert. On Sunday, January 19 we presented the film "Witness", which is about a big city cop, and a small country boy that have nothing in common but a murder.

That wraps up last week, we hope you enjoyed these activities, now let's move to upcoming events.

January 23 starts off the Homecoming festivities with our first annual Madhatters Ball, a hat party, featuring live music by the Boneshakers. Prizes for the best hats will be awarded, so purchase your advanced tickets for $3 at the information center. The ball will be held in Room 100 from 8pm-12am and you will be permitted one beer per hour w/L.D. Tickets will also be available at the door.

The second event of the Homecoming basketball game on Saturday, January 25 at 7:30 pm. A parade of banners will open the halftime ceremonies and we urge all clubs and organizations to submit a banner. The banners will be judged on neatness, creativity, originality, and reflection of theme.

Lastly on Sunday, January 26 we will be showing another double feature, "The Other Side of the Mountain part 1 and 2", and it is free of charge.

We encourage everyone to take part in these activities and if you have any questions or suggestions do not hesitate to call us at 395-3842.

ECONOMICS SIMPLIFIED

North Carolina students studying economics for the first time will find the subject a piece of cake, thanks to a new teaching series soon to be distributed by the UNC-Wilmington Center for Economic Education and the N.C. Council on Economic Education.

"The Curse of the Inflated Cake," one of the lessons in the series, which was developed by the Council and funded by the Blue Bell Foundation, helps teachers introduce the concept of inflation using the example of a cake sale with fewer cakes that cash-paying customer. An accompanying cartoon poster shows a black-garbed villain using a bicycle pump to inflate a decorated cake to disastrous dimensions.

To make economic education a learning adventure, a special teachers' task force created "Let's Talk About Economics," five lighthearted lessons and posters on such concepts as socio-economic systems, supply and demand, and productivity.

The task force was directed by Beth Eckstein of East Carolina University's Center for Economic Education. Ten social studies teachers from across the state participated in the project.

The UNC-Wilmington Center for Economic Education will conduct workshops to acquaint local teachers with "Let's Talk About Economics," which will be available for use in classrooms statewide by early 1986.

RESIDENCE HALLS NOT DORMS

LIONEL MITCHELL
CONTRIBUTOR

Sitting at her desk in a navy blue suit, she quickly answers the phone. For two or three minutes she talks with whoever is on the other end of the line about the problems of two students. She hangs up the phone and apologizes for the interruption, when a student wanting to chat stops by. Meet Ms. Laurin Baker. She is the residence Life Director at Galloway hall. Her and Ms. Gail Young have the full time job of running the residence halls.

Seahawk: What is the biggest misconception about your job?

Baker: The biggest misunderstanding is that a lot of people think that I am a student here. I am not, I am a full time professional. I have a Master's Degree from Indiana State University. Another problem that we have is that people do not know what we do down here.

SH: Well what do you do?

Baker: We are a part of Student Affairs. The best way to describe us is as a jack of all trades, expert at nothing, good at many things. We are here to make sure things run smoothly. Of course, we have to discipline students, but we also plan programs, counsel students, and keep the students informed. The students spend most of their time down here in the halls, so we have more or a responsibility. We are not glorified babysitters, as some people see us.

SH: You say programs. What do you mean?

Baker: Programs are discussions on current issues, tournaments between floors, and other events. For example, the new hall had a tuck in service. The student was tucked in bed and read a story.

SH: You said you had to discipline students. What do you do and why the misconduct?

Baker: Well, of course for some this is the first time away from mom and dad and they do not know how to act. We had the freshmen come in a few days early so they could get to know the campus and get used to college life before the upperclassmen got here. And I feel that it has helped. Also alcohol can be accounted for about 95% of the infractions. When I ask them would they have acted the same way sober they say no. Out of the approximately 150 students I have talked to only 5-6 have been back. We do not care if they drink as long as they do it responsibly. You know next October the drinking age goes up to 21 and we do not want to penalize those old enough to drink. If we can control the drinking with the age at 19 then people can not wonder how we can control it when it turns to 21. Whether or not the campus will go dry is a big issue. If it goes dry I expect the problem drinkers will go into the closet, instead of asking for help. Like they can do now.

SH: What do you like the most about this job?

Baker: I like watching people grow. They come in here as naive freshmen and walk out as seniors who can relate and understand other people. I like knowing that I had a small part of that. The same would have to said about my RA's. They are a great bunch of people. The $1300 a year no way comes close for the problems they have to deal with. Here there are 72 people to a hall, which means a lot of problems.

The USSA will be organizing a letter campaign around the country for students to write their representatives. The target time will be around St. Patrick's Day, when legislators will be making key decisions. "We will be working the green back in the education budget," Ozer says.

A similar nationwide letter writing campaign helped defeat a presidential proposal to cut federal student aid programs in 1982.

Didi undergoes eye surgery on OLTL

By Nancy Johnson

ALL MY CHILDREN: Natalia crawled into bed with a drunken Jeremy, who later insisted they didn't make love. R.L. Payton found Erica, who escaped from the avalanche. ANOTHER WORLD: Chris realized that Mac is dying from the same symptoms that Chris's father did — the poisoned dust in the amphora. Jake is suspicious of Michael (Ralph). AS THE WORLD TURNS: Dog insisted that even if his dead wife, Caroline, were alive, he would love Fran. Steve and Betty talked about having a baby of their own. CAPITOL: Tyler rescued Julie from Sandy. Sherry was killed in the shootout. Sloane told a shocked Tyler that Julie was the person who shot Mark. DAYS OF OUR LIVES: Shane was shocked to learn that the I.S.A. thinks he's guilty of selling U.S. secrets to the Russians. Kimberly suffered abdominal pains.

GENERAL HOSPITAL: Frisco has a new police partner, Samantha. Mike nixed reconciling with Rick and Ginny. Anna learned Patrick inherited his Uncle Moody's estate.

GUIDING LIGHT: Kurt is tired of Mindy's immature behavior. Ed and Maureen want to be husband and wife again. Billy and Kyle accepted the fact that they're brothers.

LOVING: Spider, who's out of jail, pursued Cecilia and taunted Trisha. Keith proposed marriage to Dolly. Link still insists that he didn't get Zona pregnant.

ONE LIFE TO LIVE: Bo, who wasn't killed by Chip, helped to arrest Chip's boss, Mr. Hanover. Pamela told Jeb/Ann that she's dying. Didi had eye surgery.

RYAN'S HOPE: Melinda insisted that she's an old friend of Dakota's. A hospitalized Dakota was upset to see Frank and Johnny arguing. Jill slept with Frank.

SANTA BARBARA: C.C. stopped Gina's attempt to jill him with a drug overdose. Mason pretended to be asleep while Mary was telling him that she loves him.

SEARCH FOR TOMORROW: Patti and Hogan learned that informant, Bankston, who was found murdered, had worked for Lloyd. Rivera plotted to buy Stephanie's TV station.

THE YOUNG AND THE RESTLESS: Lauren was shocked when Shawn admitted that he's impotent. Jill is confident that she's going to take John for a big bucks divorce.

Miss Manners

DEAR MISS MANNERS: My daughter, who is getting married soon, has informed us she is with child.

I have had a long list of disappointments and am fighting my own emotional battles, but I feel acceptance is my only choice. I love my daughter, am otherwise proud of her character, and do not want to risk losing our closeness. I will continue to help her plan the traditional wedding she wants.

She is not planning to announce her pregnancy prior to the wedding, because she doesn't want people to think they're getting married merely because of the pregnancy. I feel that it is her responsibility to inform whomever she wants whenever she wants, and to suffer the consequences of her decisions.

I am disturbed, however, because a very dear relative is involved in the wedding planning, both emotionally and financially. I feel confident that this person would be morally outraged at all the implications of a white wedding and a pregnant bride - she is etiquette personified - and will feel taken advantage of if she is not told and given the chance to back out.

How can my husband and I honor our promise of confidentiality and still respect our dear and enduring relationship with this relative? How may I honor my various obligations without us all being hurt?

I realize that this issue is as old as fertility, but it's in my family now and I am perplexed.

GENTLE READER: That's funny. Miss Manners was under the impression that she was Etiquette Personified.

As such, she has always decreed it the height of vulgarity to imagine that the color of the bride's dress should be an advertisement of the condition of the body inside. A white wedding dress is symbolic of the bride's first marriage, not the details of her courtship. Bridal pregnancy is a reason for encouraging, not discouraging, a wedding.

Miss Manners is not disputing that your relative has those ideas - only that those represent the Voice of Etiquette.

You are right that she should be told. However, the secret is not yours to tell.

Your daughter is now grown-up. You can no longer make her decisions for her - indeed, she is about to be a mother, making parental decisions herself - but can strongly advise her of your feelings and opinions in the matter.

Should she elect not to tell the relative, the consequences to the relationship will fall upon her. You are free to tell the lady afterwards that you disagreed with your daughter's decision. No lady who even aspires to personify etiquette could blame a parent for refusing to violate the confidence of a grown daughter.

DEAR MISS MANNERS: I live in a fairly large apartment complex and I am asked out by a lot of bachelors in the building. As a rule, I don't date anyone from where I live. How can I decline these invitations without being rude or making up excuses?

GENTLE READER: A lady does not need to explain why she is declining a date, even with a real excuse, much less a made-up one. She need only thank the gentlemen and inform him that she is unable to accept.

The ordinary reasons for this are that it is undignified to open the question to argument, and only too likely to hurt the gentlemen's feelings. In your particular case, this all goes double. The gentlemen knows, and Miss Manners knows, even if you don't know, that you would waive this rule in a minute for the right person.

Planning a wedding? If you need Miss Manners' advice on whom to invite, what to wear, who pays for what, etc., send two dollars for her "Weddings for Beginners" pamphlet to: Miss Manners, in care of this newspaper, P.O. Box 2385, Cincinnati, OH 45201.

Feeling incorrect? Address your etiquette questions (in black or blue-black ink on white writing paper) to Miss Manners, in care of this newspaper. The quill shortage prevents Miss Manners from answering questions other than through this column.

Do I have a simple cold, or do I have something more serious? If I do have a cold, how can I make myself feel better? Sound familiar?

Sniffles, coughs, sore throats seem to be everywhere this time of year and the STUDENT HEALTH AND WELLNESS (SHAW) CENTER has begun an innovative service for students who feel comfortable treating their own cold.

The SHAW Self Care Cold Center is a series of four stations where students are able to evaluate and treat their cold symptoms by following some simple step by step directions.

STATION A provides a checklist to aid in deciding whether to treat yourself or seek medical assistance.

WELLNOTES

STATION B shows how to take your temperature properly. (If it is 101°F or more, you need to see a health care provider)

STATION C "Say AH" and check your own throat with mirror and tongue depressors.

STATION D is the AUTOMED, a vending machine machine where you can get free over the counter cold medications.

If, after completing each station you think you need further assistance, you can sign in at the receptionist desk located in the same area. This new service can be a valuable time saver for both students and staff. While, we all feel lousy when we have a cold, many times we run too quickly to a doctor, when often, we can safely treat ourselves. Learning about ourselves also helps us to become responsible Health Care consumers.

So, next time you get a cold, why not take a walk over to the Self Care Cold Center in the lobby of the Student Support Center. It is quick, painless, and free-helping to catch a cold in its early stages, while also helping to improve health habits.

LIVE AND LEARN IN THE ALPS

The University of New Orleans will sponsor its 11th annual session of UNO-INNSBRUCK, an international Summer School in Innsbruck, Austria. This educational and travel program will involve 250 students and some 30 faculty and staff members for the summer of 1986.

"UNO's popular Alpine summer school attracted students from 51 different universities and four foreign countries last year," says Carl Wagner, Assistant to the Dean of the International Study Programs office at UNO. "As a result, UNO-INNSBRUCK is now the largest overseas summer school offered by any American university."

Applicants are already lining up for the 1986 session. Part of the secret may be that more than 70 courses in 19 different subject areas are available in the magnificent Innsbruck setting in the heart of Central Europe. While you earn up to nine semester hours of credit, your classroom is surrounded by the Tyrolean Alps, whose peaks are always snow-capped.

Naturally, courses focus on the cultural, historic, social and economic traditions of Europe. But geology, business, and education classes are also taught. All instruction is in English, and faculty from American universities as well as the University of Innsbruck participate. All credits are fully transferable.

In addition to college-age students, the UNO-INNSBRUCK program is increasingly popular with adults, who may enroll either for credit or audit.

During the session, students are housed in the Studentenhau at the 300 year-old University of Innsbruck. The school is a five-minute walk from the many inns, cafes, and beer gardens in the "Old Town"—popular with Austrian students since the Middle Ages.

Three-day weekends offer ample time for UNO-INNSBRUCKers to travel, backpack, or ski on the nearby glaciers. It's a unique way to combine summer study with European travel.

UNO-INNSBRUCK convenes with gala opening ceremonies June 29th and ends on August 9. An optional three-week tour of Western Europe is offered prior to the summer school.

Registration for the program is already underway and interested applicants should apply as soon as possible. Information and a color brochure describing UNO-INNSBRUCK in detail can be had by writing to Carl Wagner, c/o UNO-INNSBRUCK, Box 1315, University of New Orleans, New Orleans, LA 70148. You can also call (504) 286-7116 for more details.

MUSEUM ANNOUNCES PUBLICATION OF POTRAITS OF FAITH

UNCW NEWS BUREAU

The museum of World Cultures at the University of North Carolina at Wilmington announces the publication of Portraits of Faith: A Pictorial History of Religions in North Carolina. The book traces religion in North Carolina from the colonial period to the present, from the earliest Indian churches to the twentieth century Bahai religion.

Authors Anne Russell and Marjorie Megivern, with photographs by Kevin Coughlin, have prepared for the first time in one volume the history of all the major religions practiced in North Carolina.

Just released by Donning Co. Publishers of Norfolk and Virginia Beach, this beautiful book is not just a history of religion, but a study of North Carolina cultures, lifestyles, and the bonds formed between members of all faiths.

With 350 captioned photographs, many never before published, along with an entertaining and informative text, history comes to life in the faces of religious forebears, the accounts of struggles to establish diverse denominations, and the importance of religious beliefs in the separate church and state. The book follows the evolution of religion with 23 denominations represented.

The authors and Coughlin are Wilmington residents. The foreword is by Dr. Gerald Shinn, UNCW professor of philosophy and religion and acting director of the Museum of World Cultures at UNCW.

Russell originated the idea for Portraits of Faith while teaching a literature course for Duke University, which was attended by Mennonite students. "I didn't know we had Mennonites in North Carolina and realized how little I knew about religions in our state. When I began research, I could find no cumulative volume of religious history," said Russell.

Two years of work followed aided by Megivern's statewide research in church and university archives, museums, libraries, and homes of ministers and lay persons.

"In my 4,000 miles of travel, I was educated by ministers, rabbis and priests. Information came from historical records and from the personal belongings of a long ago church member," said Megivern.

Many of the historic photographs came from private collections. All were reproduced by photographer Coughlin and will be donated to the Museum of World Cultures at UNCW. The oldest photograph is one taken in the mid-nineteenth century which shows students at Salem Female Academy, established in 1772 as the first women's college in America and now Salem College.

The bulk of the book highlights the importance of North Carolina religions in the cultural fabric of the United States and reveals some little-known facts. The first two Christian baptisms in the new world were in 1584 in North Carolina at

DR. DAVIS RECEIVES GRANT FOR RESEARCH

UNCW NEWS BUREAU

The University of North Carolina at Wilmington has received a $15,000 grant from the Research Corporation for Dr. Brian F. Davis, assistant professor of physics, to conduct research in the field of theoretical atomic physics.

The Research Corporation, founded in 1912, is a nonprofit foundation dedicated to the advancement of science and technology. It is noted in particular for its grants program which supports young scientists who are initiating research careers.

Theoretical atomic physics studies the structure of atomic systems by performing high precision calculations which include energy levels in atoms, autoionization rates, ionization and photon decay processes, and atomic scattering processes. Davis's research specialty is in highly excited states of atoms.

The Research Corporation grant funds, along with $5,000 matching funds from UNCW, will be used to purchase a computer dedicated to carrying out theoretical computations of certain highly excited energy levels in the lithium atom.

Davis explained that at the present time, the experimentally measured lifetimes of these atomic states are much shorter than what previous theoretical calculations predict. His research seeks to resolve these differences.

Apart from its fundamental theoretical importance, this research finds application in X-ray lasers, diagnostics of fusion plasmas, and in understanding processes taking place in the sun's atmosphere and in other astrophysical objects.

Davis, who has been at UNCW since fall, 1982, collaborates in the summers with Dr. Kwong T. Chung, professor of physics at N.C. State University. During the summer of 1985, Davis was one of more than 800 physicists from around the world who attended the Fourteenth International Conference on the Physics of Electronic and Atomic Collisions at Stanford University, Palo Alto, CA. He presented a paper there.

Davis holds the bachelor of science degree from Bowling Green State University and the doctorate from North Carolina State University.

DUET TO PERFORM AT KENAN

UNCW NEWS BUREAU

A concert of classical saxophone and piano music will be given by Jamal and Pamela Rossi at 8 p.m., Thursday, Feb. 6, 1986 in Kenan Auditorium on the UNCW campus.

The recital will feature original and transcribed music for the saxophone in the classical medium. Works by Rachmaninoff, Paganini, Debussy, Creston and others will be performed. The recital is free and open to the public.

Jamal Rossi is currently teaching woodwind instruments and directing the jazz studies program at UNCW. A graduate of Ithaca College and the University of Michigan, Rossi is currently completing his doctor of music degree from the Eastman School of Music in Rochester, New York.

Par.ela Rossi, also a graduate of Ithaca College, is currently teaching Suzuki piano and oboe in the Wilmington area. She is a registered Suzuki teacher, and has served on the faculty of Daemen College in Buffalo, New York.

SCIENTIFIC STUDY TO BE INSTALLED

UNCW NEWS BUREAU

The Wilmington Sigma Xi Club, a new affiliate of the national scientific research society, will be installed Wednesday evening, Jan. 22, at the Riverboat Landing Restaurant in downtown Wilmington. Installation will follow a social hour at 6:30 p.m. and dinner at 7:30.

On hand for formal installation ceremonies will be Dr. C. Ian Jackson, executive director of Sigma Xi, headquartered in New Haven, Ct. The organization, whose membership is limited to those individuals actively engaged in scientific research, is observing the centennial year of existence.

Jackson will deliver the formal charge during chartering and installation and will discuss the function and history of Sigma Xi.

Officers to be inducted Wednesday evening will be Dr. Ronald K. Sizemore, associate professor of biological sciences, president; Dr. Robert T. Brown, Professor of psychology, secretary; and Dr. Robert Roer, associate professor of biological sciences and research physiologist at the Institute for Marine Biomedical Research, treasurer.

ENROLLMENT HOLDS STEADY FOR NATIONS COLLEGES

COURTESY CPS

The great enrollment drop of the eighties stalled somewhat this year, new head counts of the American student body indicate.

Despite continued shrinkage in the number of 18-to-24-year-olds -- who, of course, traditionally have made up the bulk of college enrollments -- enrollment on the nation's campuses managed to hold fairly steady last fall, though not without significant shifts of students from two-year and private colleges to four-year public schools.

Last week, an association of college registrars released a survey showing more than a third of the nation's campuses suffered population declines this year. It was the latest in a series of contradictory overviews of a tumultuous year that has schools in some regions prospering, while other colleges close dorms and plan dramatic tuition hikes to cope with big enrollment drops.

In November, the National Center for Education Statistics predicted enrollment this year effectively would be the same as last year's.

And in December, the American Council on Education reported the student population decreased one percent this year.

But the drop was minimal only because of small increases in the number of freshmen, which helped offset a worrisome 4.2 percent enrollment drop at junior and community colleges, the ACE found.

Administrators, moreover, speculate the small nationwide drop is just a temporary reprieve from a long-term enrollment decline extending into the next decade.

It began with a 3.3 percent decrease in 1982 and a 2.5 percent drop a year later, they say.

Overall, 36 percent of the nation's colleges lost at least five percent of their full-time freshmen, reports the American Association of Collegiate Registrars and Admissions Officers (AACRAO). But thanks to five percent or more increases in freshman classes at 28 percent of all colleges, enrollment nationwide has managed to remain steady, the AACRAO's Dr. Bert Ackerman explains.

As the numbers suggest, previously insignificant demographic shifts can make campus populations bump up and down wildly these days.

An unforeseen influx of part-time students at public, two-year institutions last year helped push enrollment nationwide up one percent, the College Board found, but the influx hasn't happened this year.

In Tennessee, for example, a whopping 34 percent drop in freshmen at the state's community colleges contributed to a 16 percent overall decrease in freshman enrollment at state colleges and universities for 1985-86.

Mississippi's Division of Junior Colleges reports full-time equivalent students dropped four percent last fall, says spokesman Bill Bunch.

Junior and community college enrollment nationwide is, indeed, "at a screeching halt," Ackerman observes.

Economic prosperity, ironically enough, seems to be the culprit.

"We went through a period when a lot of students said there was no point in four years of school, especially if they just wanted to get a technical degree and then work," he says.

In Tennessee, officials also blame an exodus from community colleges on boom times.

"The increased availability of jobs is playing a big role here," says Matte Campbell of the state's Higher Education Commission. "It's easier to get a job now, so a lot of people are choosing immediate work over technical schooling."

Freshman enrollment at Tennessee's four technical colleges dropped 25 percent last fall, but Campbell hopes a slow increase at four-year schools will make up for the decrease.

California's new tuition charges at community colleges deter some prospective students there, state officials say.

University of Montana officials also blame tuition for pushing students away.

The school closed two of its 11 dorms this fall, when 2.4 percent fewer students enrolled after out-of-state tuition went up to $2,913 from $2,715.

West Georgia College also soon may close nearly empty dorms as enrollment continues to decline.

At Southern California, a tuition increase spurred an

STUDENT SPEAKS OUT AGAINST APARTHEID

This past Sunday (1/19), I traveled to Durham, NC to hear an address by Bishop Desmond Tutu of South Africa. I listened to the words of this renowned leader and Nobel Prize winner as he called for unity amongst all the peoples of the world against the atrocities currently being carried out in his native land by a government of foreign invaders, and I wondered what the 2,000 or so individuals could really accomplish beyond putting a couple of dollars into the collection plate as it went by. Moreover, I wondered what I, as an individual, could do to combat the evil in South Africa.

As fate would have it, such an opportunity has manifested itself. It has come to my attention through an article in the Wilmington Star News, that UNCW is investing heavily in firms which trade with white-owned South African companies that support the Apartheid government. The largest investment is one of some $55,000.00 with Queensboro Steel, the manufacturer of the steel girders, which comprise the superstructure of the new wing of Randall Library, and perhaps many other buildings on our campus. The white trademark emblazoned upon those girders is as a "brand of Cain" upon our university community and ourselves for our administration's unscrupulous support of the heinous activities of that racist regime.

Bishop Tutu's words came as a challenge to those of us who heard him that evening. I now extend that challenge to you, the members of the university community, to do your part against Apartheid by actively protesting these practices and demanding that the University divest itself of investments in Queensboro Steel and all other firms with South African holdings. Only by divestment can we cleanse ourselves of this blight and outrage.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

STILLPOINT

FOR HARWOOD

Over the holidays I read "The Minimal Self" by Christopher Lasch. His basic thesis is that we are bombarded by all sorts of issues like hunger and the arms race and on and on, and pulled by so many societal pressures to succeed and acquire a certain lifestyle that we adopt a psychic survival position by pulling in our attentions and concern in order to focus on the smallest world that we feel we can manage—self, friends and family, work or studies and all that in terms of today or this week. We may be mentally aware of the world at large, but we reduce our awareness to the smallest life space we can which results in a world centered mostly on self. It is not that we are not so narcissistic as we are feeling overwhelmed and unable to handle any more than our own daily life.

Then we are confronted with the reality of Rev. Martin Luther King, Jr. who was the lifelong victim of segregation but was able to overcome the fears and the inadequacy that stops so many of us and act as though he was a part of a larger world than his own private concerns would normally dictate. Others take on issues when their personal lives are broken into by one of these massive outside forces. A drunk driver kills a daughter and out of that tragedy Mothers Against Drunk Drivers evolves. A child is kidnapped and both legislation and the beginnings of a national network emerge out of that personal struggle.

Almost universally, those who find a way to resist the pressure to retreat to as small a personal world as we can find, testify that their life feels richer, more meaningful and more significant than they ever dared think was possible. To say it another way, most people who wind up working at a cause or an issue in a specific kind of way are surprised that they are there. They are or were ordinary people who found something they cared deeply enough to move them beyond their small isolated and protected world.

My conviction is that one of the elements that enables a life to be full and meaningful is our ability and choice to be involved in causes beyond ourselves. We don't need to take on the world. But for our own sake and for the sake of our corporate future, we do need to find that particular, specific issue that concerns us and spend part of ourself beyond ourselves. The beginning point is with our own self-examination to see what it is in our environment that genuinely concerns us. Where does the anguish or the injustice of the world or the needs of our own community touch us? I don't care whether you deal with world hunger or teenage pregnancy or the need for a new student organization. There is something out there that needs a piece of your time and energy.

The forces that push us toward the "minimal" expenditure of self beyond ourselves is destructive. To participate in the struggle to make a piece of our life better breeds energy, higher self-esteem and a deepening sense of integrity. The issue is not success, the issue is our own personal empowerment and the enrichment that trying to make a difference brings to us.

Start with the question, "Outside of my own small world, what do I really anguish over?" and go from there!

...FREE AT LAST

I learned a lesson from the day's commemoration of the late, great Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. and must tell it. In doing so, I must do it in the manner as after coached to Dr. King by his father, "Keep it plain..."

In front of Hoggard Hall many gathered to march in symbolism of the many marches and rallies led by Dr. King Jr. But I looked around, expecting many more, and questioned why the crowd wasn't larger. I answer with a simple, "they were probably tied up." I asked myself several other times questions of the sort but kept answering in the same manner.

Yet, as the march ended to the north side of the Union, I began answering critically but justifiably the same question bothering me. My answer to those who didn't want to bear the cold was that we all should be able to stand the freezing weather when Dr. King Jr. and others struggled through much colder "...winds of police brutality..." and overwhelming "...heat of injustice..." both of which created many "...storms of persecutions..." My answer to the Whites whom we passed going in our direction but did not join us was that Dr. King's definition of brotherhood included "...men of all races, of all nationalities, and of all creeds..." My answer to the Blacks who didn't participate was this was a man sent by God to deliver us from the social and economic chains put upon us by ignorant men. Yet we cannot seem to put aside obligations and pleasures for a moment to remember this man's actions and his reasons for those actions. Where were you all?

This question was answered with the descriptions of the tone of my justified and critical answers. They were too justified. I needed to remember mercy as mercy was given to me. Plus, I was reminded that although it was good to march and hold programs, it was and is more important to unconditionally, eternally, and daily love all mankind and show that love by unselfishly assisting in the deliverance of any and all of these who are oppressed.

That I know, but I am once again reminded as I meditate here in King Hall. I challenge others to do likewise for God's sake, Dr. King's sake, and our sake. "...We cannot fight alone..." Also, "...This is no time to engage in the luxury of cooling off or to take the tranquilizing drug of gradualism. Now is the time..."

OFF CAMPUS LIFE IS THE REAL STRIFE FOR COLLEGE STUDENTS

Seems like every time you turn around, someone else is writing another story about the college student trying to survive in a dormitory.

Now, I am about as worried about living in a dorm as I am about my cat giving birth to a boa constrictor - it ain't never happened, and if I can have my say it never will.

I am one of those rarely heard of college students who lives off-campus in a small - and I do mean small - apartment.

During my first year of college, I commuted about seventy miles daily. After going through a car, a truck, and a motorcycle in that period of time, I began to look for a place to stay.

My first few weeks were spent as a night watchman in an old theater. Everyone should have to spend a few nights in an old theater at least once in their life. After the first few nights of terrified insomnia, you eventually collapse from exhaustion and stop caring whether or not that strange grunting noise was going to become material and have you for supper.

The promise of a real bed and my own private room lured me away from the theater to an old warehouse that had been converted into a small engine-repair shop that was owned by a friend (?). Of course by this time I had been thrown out of the theater, but that is another story.

This new home was next door to an old railroad depot that had been converted into a very classy nightspot known as (what else?) the Depot.

Depot, indeed. Grand Central Station was more like it.

On weekend, even my and someone else's sister under the age of twenty would throng to the Depot to play video games, deafen themselves with loud music, and (gasp!) drink beer.

On several occasions these pillars of society had broken into my new home, stealing several thousand dollars worth of chain saws and lawn mowers. (Why anyone would want to steal a lawn mower is beyond me.)

My friend asked me to be his night watchman type of person, and being a nice guy (and also in need of a roof over my head) I said sure.

After all, I would have a shotgun, a flashlight, and the love of my Momma behind me. What could go wrong?

My friend (?) forgot to tell me about the vermin that inhabited his premises. Vermin of prehistoric proportions.

A centipede crawled out of my coffee pot one night, after uncurling himself several times.

A cockroach named Aristotle would stop by for a few minutes visit every night. He would dangle his legs off the edge of the bed while discussing the meaning and purpose of life.

The final straw came one night when a rat jumped on my bed. He was so heavy that the bed shook and the floor creaked when he jumped off.

The floor never creaked when I stepped on it.

local payphone) my life

finally got settled down into a somewhat less insane routine.

One of the things that had attracted me about this After several century long weeks of this arrangement, I moved in with a strange old bachelor who owned an impressive stack of x-rated video cassettes. That didn't last long.

Finally, I managed to move in with a pleasant little old lady who specialized in finding homes for lost students the way some little old ladies do with cats. She gave me a choice between a bedroom, a full apartment upstairs which had no separate entrance or telephone.

I spent about the same amount of time in each of the above, and when one of the outside tenants was committed, I moved into the little two room cave I call home.

After spending several weeks minus electricity (which resulted in several romantic dinners and many freezing showers) and minus telephone (Lots of trips to the apartment was the advertisement of central heat and air conditioning. Of course, just because you have such luxuries doesn't necessarily mean they work.

I had lived in the dark ages for so long that no AC didn't really concern me at that much. The heat didn't either, until one morning I woke up to find that the dishwasher from the night before was frozen. I became a little worried.

Although my landlady thinks all animals are vicious, I managed to charm her into letting me have a kitten for a roommate. Of course, the kitten eventually had company, but my landlady hasn't grumbled too much.

And I don't think she will if she ever wants to see her grandchildren again.

My little apartment is rather interesting. I have a scenic view of my neighbor's storage shed on one side, and on the other I have a breathtaking panorama of the rear end of a large grocery store, complete with dumpsters and stray wolverines.

My little apartment is far from perfect.

Earlier, I mentioned the intellectual cockroach Aristotle. Well, the roaches here are not quite so large, but they believe in numbers instead of size. These are small enough that you can usually crush them with a heel (unlike Aristotle).

Since this is a family oriented newspaper, I will leave out the catchy little name I have for the nighttime invaders of my kitchen and bathroom.

It will suffice to say that I refer to them as "the little ---", since I really doubt the legitimacy of the parentage of your average, everyday cockroach.

But the next time one of them carries off a chicken leg by himself, I am going to become concerned.

IN REMEMBRANCE OF KING, SET YOUR OWN DREAMS

What would the world be like if people didn't have dreams and take action to fulfill those dreams? I dare say, we wouldn't have airplanes, cars, electricity, or send people to the moon.

We need to realize that dreams are important, we should reach for the stars and believe that nothing is impossible. More so, we need to realize that striving for our dreams is what makes the difference. If the Wright brothers had dreamed of flying, but never did anything about it, they never would have achieved their dream and we wouldn't have airplanes today.

Many great chages have happened in our world in the last 30 years - blacks have gained equal rights and voting rights for all. Women have more rights and opportunities now than ever before. Children are seen as humans and not merely property.

When our parents were in school - blacks and whites were segregated. Women were expected to get married and raise children, if women did work they were limited to being teachers, nurses, and secretaries. Children were considered property, they were valuable to work on the farms. Today... the opportunities for all have increased - in our lifetime we will more than likely see a black President and female President of the United States. When our parents were young that wasn't even considered possible, today we know it is possible and likely. Why? because people had dreams and acted on them.

We need to decide what we want in life. Do we want to work, pay the bills, have a little fun, and that's all? Or do we want to make a difference in the world we live in? Do we want to improve the life our children will have? Needless to say, all of us will not do things in our life that will change the entire world, but all of us can change something in our corner of the world.

I Challenge everyone reading this to decide on something you want changed or don't want changed, and fight for it. Make a difference, stand-up for your beliefs, and make the world a better place.

THE NEW CONSERVATISM?

I would like to write concerning the hoopla associated with Mickey Gahagan, his column, and the conservative movement. Conservatives have long been derided as "The Stupid Party", to use the phrase of John Stuart Mill. This idea has been promoted to overshadow the obvious, time proven failures of liberalism. The wisdom of conservatism has been promoted through the ages from Plato to Buckley. Virtually all the creative solutions to today's problems are being offered by Conservatives-men and women steeped in the ideas that are always turned to by the public when faced with a quagmire.

What is conservatism? Or by what definition are such disparate figures as Aquinas, Burke, C.S. Lewis, and Ludwig Von Mises legitimately classified as "conservatives"? There is no pat answer. Conservatism is not an ideology. Indeed, suspicion of any sort of closed philosophical system is itself on the marks of a conservative mind. Yet neither versus pragmatism, for most conservatives believe in some sort of transcendent moral order. In brief, a course of action is not morally correct merely because a majority endorses it or it gives the greatest happiness to the greatest number.

The broadest answer one might offer is to say that a conservative values tradition, order, property, morality, and the freedom and dignity of the individual human being. As such, he speaks directly to the most fundamental concerns. Conservatives do not ignore problems (another liberal canard), nor do they pretend themselves with proposing simplistic solutions. On the contrary, it has been the liberals who for so long have given U.S. Government, by cliché, which substitutes good intentions and liberal funding for rational analysis of cost and results.

The election of 1980 proved that the failures of liberal policies were obvious to many Americans. The Election of 1984 was more or less shooting a dead horse. Government intervention to give us full employment had produced double-digit inflation and widespread joblessness; regulations to protect the consumer had raised prices and restricted choice; affirmative action programs to promote equality had enshrined new forms of discrimination; lenient criminal justice standards to "protect" and "rehabilitate" wrongdoers had made our homes and streets less safe than ever; busing to achieve 'racial balance' and better education for all had achieved exactly the opposite; and dozens of other costly and well-intentioned programs to eliminate various real or imagined ills had similarly misfired.

Nor is contemporary American conservatism a philosophy of pessimism. Our Judeo-Christian heritage is a philosophy of hope and affirmation. In addition, there is cause for hope in view of American history: In 200 years the United States has come from thirteen small colonies to one of the great nations in world history, in view of that tradition, and the wisdom of those thinkers that have gone before us, there is cause for hope.

SCHOOL KIDS RECORDS REVIEW

WILMINGTON, N.C.

The music year of '85 will long be remembered not for the tremendous albums it spawned but for the trends and news features its performers created. Who can forget 'Born in the USA', the Evolution of 'A Virgin', the breakup of Van Halen, or the pseudo-retirement from touring by a Prince. More importantly, the 'We are the World' session and Live-Aid Extravaganza pointed to the biggest happening in the world; African Famine. The emotional outpouring of rock's biggest names has given more redeeming social value to popular music than all the notoriety it claimed in its previous infancy. It is no small feat, or deed that Bob Geldorf should cap off this glorious flip flop with the Nobel Prize. Simply put this man has done more for the spirit of peace in the world in '85 than any other. It is rather unfortunate he is not a scientist or politician just a grass roots organizer. With these thoughts in mind one man's arbitrary best of the year with an alternative non-commercial list as well. Long live WLOZ!

1. Dire Straits - Brothers in Arms Though superstardom for Knopfer and Co and may have come one album too late, this LP effectively shows off the brilliance which stands this band apart.

2. Tears for Fears - Songs from the Big Chair who would have thought synth rock to be this varied and melodic? Brilliant songwriting from a talented duo and the tears best single.

3. The Cure - Head on the Door Robert Smith takes the Cure on a phantasmagorical trip from Death throes of previous efforts - and the psychedelic era is reborn.

4. John Cougar Mellencamp - Scarecrow John lights the image of the Boss and comes out standing on his own, no small feat. Second best single for "Small Town"

5. Suzanne Vega - Suzanne Vega - An unknown folkie whose mixture of innocence, poetry, charm can sneak up on you and capture your heart.

6. The Smiths - Meat is Murder I don't care if the lead singer wails and droops the ills of modern day, this bands mixture of Acoustic and Electric is Awesome!

7. Whitney Houston - Whitney Houston unbelievable vocal talent like this cannot be denied. Pure Soul.

8. X - Aint Love Grand ... but you sold out and opted for a much bigger sound...no, they just got older and now encompass the range of human expression. Aint Love Grand!

9. Talking Heads - Little Creatures Its back to a simpler beginning for the resident genius of song structure, David Byrne.

10. Wynton Margalis - Black Codes from the Underground No list is complete without jazz and this album finally proves that Wynton is just not technique.

ALTERNATIVE RADIO

1. Miraclia Legion - The Backyard Ep. An acoustical R.E.M. who outdoes their mentors for one brief hookfilled EP.

2. Minutemen - Project Mersh. The recent death of D.Boon makes this record even more special. A hardcore band on the edge of breaking down barriers.

3. Husker Du - Flip your wig. A bunch of 60's psychedelia boiled into a hard core stew of gerus!

4. This Mortal Coil - It'll All End in Tears. An overlooked jem that combined various British synth bands with the haunting voice of the Moors, Elizabeth Fraser.

5. Clannad - Macalla. An Irish folk family who turn on to synthesizers, borrow Bono for one toon, and recreate the beauty of the Irish Landscape.

6. Kate Bush - Hounds of Love Her peculiar insights into human emotion; her spiritual reverence and fear of what is don't always make for peaceful dreams.

7. Replacements - Tim. They appear to be sobering up and that could get dangerous for Top 40. I hope not, entirely.

8. Tom Waits - Rain Dogs. This street poet has been hanging around one of the first brick churches in the state was St. Thomas Church built in Wilmington and dedicated in 1828.

The book is not only a pictorial history of buildings, but also a history of people - religious leaders and followers of all races. Founder of the famous Soong dynasty, Charles Jones Soong was converted to Methodism in Wilmington returned to his native China as a missionary. His sons-in-law were Chiang Kai-shek and Sun Yat-Sen. President Woodrow Wilson attended Davidson College and lived in Wilmington while his father pastored the First Presbyterian Church from 1874-1885. Well-known television evangelists Billy Graham and Jim Bakker both reside in N.C.

The book is not a critique of religions, but is an objective view of religious history as accurately as we found it, said Russell. Each section was reviewed by an authority from that denomination. What is the future of religion in the state?

"I see a coming together of churches with less distinction between denominations or races. The major failing of religion is segregation," said Russell. Megivern and Coughlin both agree that religion is no longer the core of community life, but will continue to be a spiritual influence in many lives.

A former college educator, Russell is author of Wilmington: A Pictorial History; Seabiscuit, Wild Pony of the Outer Banks; and an award-winning play The Porch. Megivern is a staff member for Congressman Charlie Rose and a former newspaper editor and reporter. Coughlin is project manager for Training Systems, Inc. in Wilmington.

The book is dedicated to Dr. H. Shelton Smith, professor emeritus of Duke University and first president of the North Carolina Council of Churches. Available in early February in area bookstores, the book sells for $25. A portion of the proceeds will go to the Museum of World Cultures and the N.C. Educational, Historical and Scientific Foundation, Inc.

THEATER REVIEW

As everyone is starting back to school, the theatre season is beginning to gear up in the Wilmington area. So if the winter blahs are getting you down? Visit one of your local thespian groups *Thalian Hall will be presenting the mystery Something's Afoot Thursday through Saturday Jan. 30 through Feb. 1, and Monday Feb. 3. Reservations will be accepted starting Jan. 20. Call 763-3398 for more details.

*The Sampson Community Theatre in Clinton will be presenting one of American's favorite musicals, Fiddler on the Roof, Feb. 27- March 2 and March 7-9. Ticket information will be announced.

*The Coastal Playhouse in Morehead City will be presenting an original production of Godspell during the week prior to Holy Week. The play is directed by David Hardison, distinguished playwright and director.

*The Harnett Regional Theatre in Dunn (a far piece, but usually worth) will be presenting Arsenic and Old Lace March 13-15 and 20-22. Call the Harnett County Arts Council at 892-1837 for ticket information. *HRT will also hold auditions in late spring for the August production of Bells are Ringing, a musical about a New York telephone operator.

As information becomes available on campus productions, you can find it here.

If you have any specific interests in relation to theatre, if you have any suggestions, if you have information on any theatrical group or production on or off campus, just drop me a line at P.O. Box 2725 here on campus, or contact the Seahawk office.

Take a break from studying and catch a show somewhere. You'll be glad you did.

WELL NOTES

Coffee is a socially acceptable, stimulating addictive drink that helps keeps you awake and alert with practically no calories--only 5 per cup! Wonderful. In fact, coffee comes closer than any other part of the typical American diet to giving up something for nothing. It gives us the mind altering drug caffeine, which is primarily responsible for its stimulating effects.

Caffeine has some benefits (in small doses!) It helps to produce a clearer train of thought, swifter reaction time, relieves drowsiness, and create a general sense of well being. Unfortunately, many people aren't aware of the amount of caffeine they consume daily and often find themselves suffering unwanted side effects. Almost 30% of Americans consume more than 500 milligrams of caffeine a day--twice what doctors consider a large "drug dose."

CAFFEINE IS A DRUG, AND NO DRUG LACKS UNWANTED SIDE EFFECTS. SOME ARE:

*caffeine is absorbed immediately, effects are within 30 minutes, tapering off in roughly 3.5 hours.

*headaches-while caffeine helps to relieve headaches in some people, it can trigger them in others.

*anxiety-heavy coffee drinkers may experience symptoms of jitteriness, upset stomach and difficulty sleeping.

*painful, tender breasts--premenstrual women who experience this should cut back on caffeine.

CAFFEINE IS IN MORE THAN COFFEE

Coffee(5 oz.)
drip: 110-150 mg instant: 40-108 mg decaf: 2-5 mg
Tea: 20-50 mg
Soft Drinks

Coca Cola: 38 mg
Mt. Dew: 54 mg
Pepsi Cola: 38 mg
7 UP: 0 mg
Diet Pepsi: 34 mg
Pepsi Free: 0 mg

Nonprescription Drugs
No Doz: 200 mg
Vivarin: 200 mg
Excedrin: 130 mg
Midol: 65 mg

As little as 3 or 4 cups of coffee (or several soft drinks) a day can make you psychologically and physically dependent on caffeine. Abrupt withdrawal can cause severe headaches, nervousness, depression, and/or tiredness. If you want to cut down within knocking your system for a loop, do it gradually--wean yourself over a week or more, and take a juice break instead of coffee or soft drinks!

SOAP OPERA REVIEW

Bo is badly beaten on DOOL

By Nancy Johnson

ALL MY CHILDREN: Tad's boss, Bruce Emory, doesn't think Tad is cut out for a banking job. Natalie wasn't pleased to see her mother, Wilma.

ANOTHER WORLD: Rachel was hospitalized after she breathed the poisoned amorphous dust and then collapsed. Chris rushed to London to find a cure for the poison dust.

AS THE WORLD TURNS: Marsha failed to persuade Doug to return to Dallas. Iva mixed rekindling her past romance with Tad. John told Sierra that Lucinda is her mother.

CAPITOL: Josh was arrested when he threatened to kill Tyler. Everyone searched for Mark, who was wheeled out of the hospital by a mysterious male nurse.

DAYS OF OUR LIVES: Shane and Kimberly learned that the L.S.A.

dropped the espionage charges against Shane. Bo was badly beaten up in a fight on the dock.

GENERAL HOSPITAL: Rick worried that Mike will reject him as a parental figure. Anna and Bobbi's abductor, Russell, got into a shootout and Russell was killed.

GUIDING LIGHT: Reva started looking for a job after rejecting Kyle's offer to give her money. Ross gave Calia tender kisses. Simon is interested in Jessie.

LOVING: Zona's doctor told Reba that Zona isn't pregnant. Link tried to convince Lorna that he hasn't slept with Zona. Doug printed an expose on Dane.

ONE LIFE TO LIVE: Mimi doesn't trust Tracy. Pamela pretended to die after she got Asa to marry her using his real name. Viki fears the return of her Niki personality.

RYAN'S HOPE: Rick refused to date Ryan until she graduates from high school. Maggie told Dakota to be nice to the Ryans if he hopes to get Jill back.

SANTA BARBARA: C.C. cut Mason from his will forever. Cruz slept with Santana, but told her his heart is with Eden. C.C. told Gina to get out of his house.

SEARCH FOR TOMORROW: Patti remembered seeing Lloyd leave the building where informant, Bankstone, was murdered. Suz was frightened by a mysterious intruder.

THE YOUNG AND THE RESTLESS: Kay arranged to exchange big bucks for the blackmail photos. A nervous Esther forgot to leave the photos but took the money.

WHO SHOULD BE THE MAN OF THE YEAR ?

"HERE'S WHERE I STAND"

Pity the poor editors at Time Magazine, who are required each year to select a Man of the Year.

Supposedly, the Man of the Year is the person who has done the most, for good or ill, to affect the course of events in the world. But the editors usually select a person, persons, or thing that represents a revolutionary change, a trend in society, or even a fad. Thus, Men of the Year have included Adolph Hitler, the Ayatollah Khomeini, The Silent Majority, and the Computer.

Some of the choices have been just plain dumb. (The Computer? Why not pick the men who founded Apple Computers and sparked the microcomputer revolution?) For 1983, Time's Man of the Year choice showed Reagan and Andropov standing stubbornly back-to-back and the accompanying article blasted the President for not meeting with his Soviet "counterpart" -- who, as it turned out, was on his deathbed or already dead at the time the magazine appeared. For 1984, the year in which Ronald Reagan dominated the American scene like no President since FDR, Time passed over the President and selected the organizer of the Olympics.

MALE STUDENTS DOMINATE CLASSROOM

COURTESY CPS

Male students tend to dominate classroom conversations even when the instructor is female, a new Harvard study says.

Previously, much education research blamed women's classroom reticence on discomfort with having male professors.

The report is the second in as many weeks indicating colleges aren't always as hospitable to women as they are to men.

Two weeks ago Congress' Office of Technology Assessment found college teachers often steer women away from high-paying science and engineering careers with subtly-discouraging classroom behavior.

In the new Harvard study, Education Prof. Catherine Krupnick videotaped Harvard courses taught by 24 different instructors, and then calculated how often-- and how long-- male and female students participated in classroom discussions.

Krupnick, who conducts workshops on other campuses, says men dominate classroom discussions at colleges around the country.

While Krupnick notes men's and women's grades and aptitude test scores are about the same, she says male dominance in the classroom is important because "liberal arts schools are set up to imply participation is important."

She adds the same problems show up later in the workplace.

Krupnick began studying classroom speaking habits to help her figure out why women who do as well as men in college don't seem to be keeping up in their careers ten years after graduation.

Studies show that marriage and childbearing are not the main obstacles to career success, she adds.

Women's career problems, Krupnick now believes, are at least partially related to both their restraint in participating in the classroom and instructor's acceptance of what they have to say.

As this is written, I don't know what selection Time will make for 1985. The rumor is that it will be Gorbachev, the KGB operative who blackmailed and murdered his way to the top of the Soviet Communist Party. But Gorbachev's innovations -- his "nice guy" public-relations campaign and his effort to derail Star Wars -- both fizzled. Geneva was the first U.S./Soviet summit in four decades where the Americans refused to make important concessions to the Soviets. That record of non-achievement hardly qualifies him for Man of the Year.

I have some ideas of my own.

How about Bernhard Goetz, who taught us a lesson about the sorry state of criminal justice in America? Years ago, in the Miranda case, Supreme Court Justice Byron White warned us about court decisions that ignore the right of crime victims. "The real concern is...the impact on those who rely on the public authority for protection and who without it can only engage in violent self-help with guns, knives, and the help of their neighbors similarly inclined." In the Goetz case, White's prophecy was borne out.

The Goetz case also reminded us that American liberals are glib as all get-out. They went to great lengths, in TV Guide, on ABC News' 20/20 program, and in court to prove that Goetz was some sort of sick-minded gunslinger, but they didn't count on the big mouths of Goetz's assailants, their families, and their friends. Their own words-- along with other evidence -- left little doubt that Goetz told the truth about what happened in that subway car.

Or how about Bishop Tutu? Tutu, winner of the Nobel Peace Prize, risks his life to lead protests against the evil apartheid system, but calls for the recognition of the Soviet-backed African National Congress (ANC) as the legitimate representative of South African blacks. The ANC has killed hundreds of black officials and suspected "collaborators," including recently a black man whose "crime" was to celebrate Christmas. If Tutu had his way, and the ANC took over in South Africa, apartheid would be replaced with a one-party communist dictatorship far more oppressive than the current system.

Because the anti-apartheid effort was one of the year's top news stories, and because Bishop Tutu symbolizes the nobility and boneheaded ignorance of many of those who seek to bring down the South African government, he is a good candidate for Man of the Year.

Who else? Attorney General Ed Meese, who defended the Constitution against liberal attack and who worked to fill judgeships with conservatives? Bill Bennett, the secretary of education who dared suggest that we get politics out of our schools and put the classics back in? Miroslav Medvid, the Ukrainian sailor who (involuntarily) gave his life so that there might be no interruption in trade between the U.S. and the Soviet Empire?

In the years to come, when I remember 1985, the images that come to mind will be almost invariably tragic. Children buried in mountains of mud or in the rubble that used to be a maternity ward. A hillside, its trees leveled by the force of an airplane crash. Thousands of people dying right in front of television cameras...dying of starvation while grain rots in American warehouses.

Those images of despair are balanced by images of hope, of people working together to save the lives of their fellow human beings and to alleviate the suffering in the world. Rescuers digging frantically to reach the source of a tiny cry for help. Schoolchildren collecting pennies to buy food for the needy. Longshoremen, on their own time, loading grain on ships bound for Africa.

The one well-known person who best exemplifies that spirit is a rock musician named Bob Geldof. Geldof, a member of the Boomtown Rats, wrote the song "Do They Know It's Christmas?," a hit single recorded by British artists to raise money for famine relief. (American artists followed up with a record called "We Are the World.") Geldof coordinated the Live Aid concerts and another 1.9 billion (yes billion) watched on TV or listened on the radio. In all, approximately $80 million was raised to feed those who cannot feed themselves.

As a representative of all the volunteers who work in the soup kitchens, provide shelter for the homeless, and otherwise give back a small portion of the blessings that Lord has given them, I think Bob Geldof may be 1985's Man of the Year.

MUSEUM CLUB TO HOLD 1ST MEETING

The First Official Club Meeting of the Museum of World Cultures Club at UNCW will be held on Friday, January 31, at 4:00 in room #206 of the Student Union. This will be an important meeting requiring everyone's support. The Club will review its new Charter and Constitution, elect officials, form its Committees and develop the 86' Calendar of Events. Among other of this year's events discussed will be the initiation of:

"The Museum Bumper-Sticker/Logo Contest";
"World Cultures Week";
"Mardi Gras Party"; and
"Travel Abroad Programs".

Also, on sale will be our new Museum T-shirts. There are many benefits to being a Member of the Museum Club such as: automatic membership in the Museum Associates Program, reduced costs for Museum events and sales, notice of events through the "Museum Club Newsletter" and Discoveries (the official publication of the Museum of World Cultures), plus all the benefits of being involved with an organization like our own Museum. Refreshments will be offered and, after the meeting, a party will be held at the President's home.

The Club has been formed this last year to help our growing Museum of World Cultures at UNCW. The Museum (and its display cases) have been on campus for two years attaining vigorous expansion. Three individuals have been hired and have volunteered to help on a nearly full-time basis. Yet still, there is a great need for more student support. The Museum has also started its membership drive for the Museum Associates Program. Anyone who is a member of the Museum Club is automatically apart of the Museum Associates which offers a broad array of benefits including discounts on museum-sponsored events, special announcements and invitations to exhibits, receptions and activities.

The Museum Club is seeking a diverse group of students, faculty and staff to help our Museum. In just the past semester, through the Club's Museum Assistants Program, we have helped with: the refurbishing and creation of new displays, cataloging of new collections of artifacts and helped sponsor four excellent lectures. However, in order to offer better events and activities, we are need to improve communication and student involvement.

At present, we have many projects in line for which the participation can benefit a wide cross-section of majors. We are planning a "Discover World Cultures Week" that will involve many departments. We hope with assistance from professors that the Museum may provide a teaching aid which taps our student community in improvement of cross-departmental education. Also, be on the lookout for our famous "Mardi Gras Party" (Feb 7- Student Union) which was a great success last year. There is much opportunity for everyone but as in most experiences in life, it is up to us to take advantage and to get involved. The Museum has alot scheduled for this year so your support is needed. Come and join the Museum and its working arm- the Museum Club. Information concerning

JAZZ FESTIVAL HELD IN WILMINGTON

Tamara Drew

The Sixth Annual North Carolina Jazz Festival was held at the Hilton Hotel in Wilmington on Friday and Saturday, January 31-February 1. The festival featured cabaret-style concerts by a host of celebrity performers who have toured or recorded with some of the biggest names in show business.

Guitarist Bucky Pizzarelli, bassist Milt Hinton, reed players Kenny Davern and Scott Hamilton were joined by pianists Derek Smith and Eddie Higgins. Also appearing were trombonist George Mazzo, horn players Doc Chesnam and Warren Vache, Jr. and drummer Bobby Rosengarden.

The renowned musicians who formed the all-star lineup boast an impressive array of experience. A number of the players have performed with the NBC Orchestra and have appeared at the most prestigious jazz festivals in the world.

Guitarist Bucky Pizzarelli has demonstrated his mastery of the guitar in performances that range from appearances with the Vaughn Monroe Orchestra to a concert at the White House with Frank Sinatra. A former staff musician with ABC, NBC, Doc Severinson, Mitch Miller, and Skitch Henderson, Pizzarelli has also appeared on the Merv Griffin Show and the Today Show.

Bass player Milt Hinton, known as "The Judge," has been a favorite of the NC Jazz Festival for the past few years. He spent fifteen years with Cab Calloway and had numerous appearances with music greats such as Benny Goodman, Count Basie, Artie Ellington, "The Judge" has also appeared in backup groups for famed singers Ella Fitzgerald, Billie Holiday, Frank Sinatra, Bing Crosby, and Tony Bennett.

CELEBRITY PERFORMERS PLAYED AT THE SIXTH ANNUAL NORTH CAROLINA JAZZ FESTIVAL HELD IN WILMINGTON JANUARY 31-FEBRUARY 1.

Pianist Derek Smith, a veteran of Doc Severinson's NBC Orchestra, has also performed with Mel Torme, Benny Goodman, Art Mooney, and Clark Terry. A native of London, England, Smith led his own trio at Basin St. East. Smith has been featured on the soundtracks for TV features, commercials, and movies, including The Wiz, All That Jazz, and Dressed to Kill.

Pianist Eddie Higgins has worked in every jazz idiom from Dixieland to fusion. He has worked as a pianist and/or arranger for numerous names in jazz, including Coleman Hawkins, Wayne Shorter, Don Goldie, Freddie Hubbard, and Jack Teagarden, plus working opposite some legendary performers, such as Stan Getz, Oscar Peterson, Dizzy Gillespie, Errol Garner, George Shearing, Cannonball Adderley, and Bill Evans.

Trombone player George Mazzo has an extensive background in music. He has two graduate degrees in music from Boston University, and spent eight years teaching his trade. Mazzo has been featured with the Jimmy Dorsey Orchestra and with the Benny Goodman sextet. In addition, he has played in The World's Greatest Jazz Band of Yank Lawson and Bob Haggart. Mazzo also performed on the background music used for the movies The Cotton Club and soon-to-be-released The Gig.

Trumpet player Doc Chesnam has also worked with numerous jazz greats. He cut his first record in 1926 with Ma Rainey. He has played with Albert Wynn, Bobby Lee, Wilber de Paris, Chick Webb, Sam Wooding, and numerous others. He was the lead trumpet in Cab Calloway's orchestra, where he played with the likes of Dizzie Gillespie, Ben Webster, Chuck Berry, and many others.

Cornet player Warren Vache, Jr. appears regularly with Benny Goodman and also with all-star bands like Pee Wee Erwin's Kings of Jazz and the New York Jazz Repertory Company. He has performed in Carnegie Hall, on Broadway (Dr. Jazz), and in movie soundtracks--the most recent being

The Gig. Vache tutored actor Richard Gere for his lead part in The Cotton Club and was originally supposed to do the soundtrack recording. Vache's student, however, learned enough from his teacher to do the recording himself.

Drummer Bobby Rosengarden is another NC Jazz Festival favorite. He has recorded behind the likes of Louis Armstrong, Dizzy Gillespie, Duke Ellington, Errol Garner, Gerry Mulligan, Benny Goodman, Charlie Spivak, Lena Horne, Tony Bennett, Ella Fitzgerald, and many others.

Clarinet player Kenny Davern has recorded with numerous jazz greats, including Wild Bill Davison and Art Hodes, and he also represented the United States in an International Radio Broadcast via satellite, where he played simultaneously with other musicians throughout the world. Davern has recorded for television in Switzerland, and most recently performed on the soundtracks for The Cotton Club and The Gig.

Scott Hamilton, a saxophonist, was the youngest player to be featured at the festival. Only thirty-two years old, he has toured with Benny Goodman and performed with the likes of Joe Venuti and Rosemary Clooney. Hamilton has received "International Jazz Musical of the Year" in 1978.

This impressive array of talented musicians presented extremely enjoyable shows both evenings. Friday night's show included an unforgettable rendition of Misty performed by Scott Hamilton, Milt Hinton, and Bucky Pizzarelli in the third set.

The evening featured six sets of

CAMPUS FREEDOMS FADE

COURTESY CPS

Some time this week, the University of Massachusetts at Amherst is due to decide how to punish 18 students who staged a sit-in when an administrator unilaterally decided to seize control of most student fees.

And in coming weeks, more than 100 Cornell students will face trespassing charges connected to a fall anti-apartheid demonstration. North Carolina State students will find their dorms shut down to members of the opposite sex. Underage Syracuse students, meanwhile, may no longer be allowed even to be at a party at which people age 21 and older are drinking alcohol.

Student freedoms on those and dozens of other campuses across the nation, in other words, seem to be fading fast.

And the trend, which began with a massive, nationwide crackdown on fraternity and sorority activities in the fall, promises to accelerate as the school year wears on, observers say.

"I am worried that some of the 'in loco parentis' of the mid-sixties and before may be coming back," laments Cecilia Ham of the United States Student Association (USSA), a student lobby group based in Washington, D.C.

"In loco parentis" -- meaning a college has all the legal obligations "in the place of the parent" while a student attends the school -- was the rationale for strict campus control of student behavior up through the mid-sixties.

Schools, of course, carefully controlled all aspects of students' social and sexual lives by regulating dorm hours, visiting procedures, drinking, on campus entertainment, driving, political group activities and even student dress.

While the system was broken by student upheaval in the sixties, there's evidence administrators' concern for being held legally liable for students' misbehavior is helping revive at least parts of it this year.

"There is no indication of ill will on part of administrators. It's really a crackdown on administrators," contends a National Association of College and University Attorneys (NACUA) official, who asked to remain anonymous.

"Third-party liability lawsuits are one of the hottest topics on campus," adds D. Parker Young, a University of Georgia professor and legal affairs lecturer.

"Insurance companies can influence rules (on campus) by threatening to withdraw or increase premiums," notes Dorothy Stevens of Risk Consultants, a Denver insurance firm.

Northwestern, for example, is debating tough new rules on what fraternities and sororities can do, in part because insurance companies refused to renew liability insurance policies for the 28 houses at NU.

A single multi-million dollar judgment against NU in a Greek injury case could consume much of the school's endowment, and fiscally cripple it for years.

Last fall, a court did rule the financially-strapped University of Denver should pay $5 million to a student who permanently hurt himself by jumping on a mini-trampoline inside a small fraternity house room.

Courts recently have held a variety of schools liable for rapes occurring on or near their campuses, for accidents suffered by drunken football fans at their stadiums and for many incidents common to any communities -- like campuses -- the size of small cities.

"Any increase in discipline is due to drinking violations," asserts Jim Grimm of the University of Florida's housing director.

At Syracuse, an underage woman got drunk and fell off a bridge despite strict new student drinking rules.

Now the university is reassessing its rules. Its lawyer suggested there may be behavior it simply can't regulate.

Indeed, the American Council on Education last fall warned administrators not to go overboard in imposing new drinking rules.

"Unrealistic rules which are incapable of practical enforcement can actually invite greater liability by defining a set of 'duties' that schools do not and can not satisfy," the group warned.

But administrators say they can choose either to live with intolerable risk of lawsuits -- and huge settlements -- or to keep imposing new rules to prevent them.

"It's a matter of plugging the dyke to prevent a catastrophe," says Canisius College Dean Thomas Miller.

Some schools have become increasingly worried about the potential legal and insurance costs of student political activism since the anti-apartheid movement heated up last spring.

"It definitely seems like the university is clamping down," claims Peder Noguera, student president at Cal-Berkeley. "They are enforcing rules that were not enforced before, such as hanging banners on the trees."

Berkeley officials also are pressuring students to pay to clean up effigies they burned in a recent anti-draft rally. "They want $600," Noguera gasps. "That's outrageous."

More than 100 Cornell students are being charged with trespassing in an Ithaca, N.Y. court, although last spring protesters were routinely "tried" through the campus judiciary, adds activist Prof. David Lyons.

"The administration and trustees are super-sensitive about protests," Lyons explains.

"They fear they are being viewed as heavies. It's bringing back real bad memories of the late sixties," observes the USSA's Ham.

Cornell Dean of Students David Drinkwater says the "crackdown" aims to minimize the school's liability.

At a protest "shanty town" last fall, he recalls, "one of the shanties burned down, sending flames 25 feet high, which came close to one of the campus buildings. This definitely provoked concern about liability."

All-night sit-ins, Drinkwater adds, can expose a school to lawsuits if one of the students in the unattended campus building should be injured.

Fears of crime drove North Carolina State to force all dorm visitors -- including parents -- to sign in and leave their driver's licenses at the front desk, says housing Director Cynthia Bonner.

"We have a feeling of responsibility toward the students," she says.

But administrators, student Sen. Michael Parker says, refuse to add lighting to dark areas on campus, adding that campus police "don't work in areas where most muggings and rapes take place."

"It's like locking the barn door when the horse is gone," Parker maintains.

Parker feels the real impetus for the more restrictive policies originated from the moralistic whims of "some ultra-conservatives" in the state legislature who fret about sex on campus.

Students at Indiana, Alabama and Loyola of New Orleans also have expressed some dissatisfaction with rigid new visitation policies.

BUSINESS DAY HELD

Michelle Mink

Flocks of Seahawks gathered in the Bear Hall Lobby on Wed. Jan. 22. The cause of this communion was the first annual Meet Your Business Clubs Day which was sponsored by the recently formed Interfraternity Business Council. The clubs that participated were

Phi Beta Lambda, Sigma Alpha Beta, American Marketing Association, National Association of Accountants, M B A Associations, and Entrepreneur Club, and each had members stationed at the tables set up in the Lobby. Clubs informed students about their respective organizations and recruited members. Many business students turned out to participate in the six hour event. Since this project was such a success plans are in the making to conduct a second Business Club Day.

NATIVE SOUTH AFRICAN SPEAKS

KIM MURPHY

With humor, she commenced a very powerful lecture. A native of Johannesburg, South Africa and a resident of Raleigh, North Carolina, Ms. Motlalepula Chabaku continued her three-day visit to Wilmington with a focus on "Living in South Africa: The Experience of Apartheid."

Being that she was born and raised under apartheid, Chabaku knows the feeling of oppression. With no freedom of speech, freedom of movement, access to education, suffrage, nor the right to own land, she came to the land of opportunity in hope. And in mid-January of this year, she was granted political asylum. Motlalepula Chabaku, a true women's rights activist founded the Black Women's Federation of South Africa which is now outlawed. She served on the National Council of African Women, the Johannesburg Child Welfare Society, the Molapo Secondary School Boards, and the now outlawed Christian Institute of South Africa.

On Monday, Feb. 3rd, she reminded her audience to not isolate themselves from the rest of the world for we must make an imprint in the sands of time. There are those in bondage in their own land. Mothers and fathers who work for whites can only see their children after eleven months of work. It is actually a crime to use the bathroom on the job without permission. An African can be arrested without a charge and must carry a passport at all times. Unfortunately, the fact is that they must now prove their innocence in front of a white jury, a white judge, and a white system. Is this God's way? All Americans have the right to vote! None of these people have this right and privilege.

In Ms. Chabaku's stimulating delivery she kept repeating "What do you live for?" Why is it that the United States usually support the oppressor? The U.S. Steel Company has closed down many plants in the U.S. The jobs taken from Americans were forced on Africans, who are usually paid fourteen times less than the white workers.

Ms. Chabaku informed her audience that we must do something to help improve the conditions of her people. Any small part by many is considered great. As she so beautifully put it, "Drops of love can become a stream of hope." Motlalepula, meaning "one who comes with rain," came to share with us the love and concern she has for all people and the deep desire of her heart.

COMMENTARY

CAMPUS DEMOCRAT

The moment I learned of the Space Shuttle disaster will be one of those moments I will never forget. The images will haunt us all. The image of joy turned into mourning. The images of parting, to those brave people and bright dreams.

The proudest chapter in our great country's history is perhaps the space program. To me, it has come to stand for our country's best. It stands for what we believe as Americans, that one person can make a difference and every person should try. The shuttle has been a symbol to us all, of America daring, of our technological society. The space program with its 35 consecutive manned launches without a death (three died in training for the Apollo 1 mission back in 1967) has been a miracle.

We have made jokes about the shuttle, the repeated delays, the robot arms that don't work. We forgot to notice the heart-stopping bravery of the people who went routinely into danger to fulfill mankind's oldest dream. The dream that for many of us born in the 60's, was the only dream that mattered. Sometimes we forget that dreams never come without danger and cost. This past Tuesday seven people died for that dream.

What can we carry away for the deaths of Michael Smith, Ronald McNair, Ellison Onizuka, Judith Resnik, Christa McAuliffe, Francis Scobee and Gregory B. Jarvis? Yes, deep sorrow. And perhaps, a resolution to notice bravery when we see it, and to love our heroes while they live.

Jeff Barnhill

CAMPUS REPUBLICAN

"Ambushes must be prepared for policemen and soldiers... with the aim of capturing weapons from them. Our people must also manufacture home made bombs and petrol bombs with material that can be locally obtained. In addition, our people must buy weapons where possible. After arming themselves in this manner, our people begin to identify collaborators and enemy agents and deal with them. Those collaborators who are serving in community councils must be dealt with. Informers, policemen, special branch police, and army personnel living and working among our people must be eliminated."

What does this quote sound like to you? Dinner conversation at the Khaddafy home, maybe the Ayatollah mouthpiece off? No, this is a July 1985 radio communique by the outlawed African National Congress (ANC). This broadcast originated in the capital of Marxist Ethiopia.

The UPB Minority Arts Committee on February 3&4 presented Mottlaepula Chabaku, a past board member of the ANC, speaking on "Living Under Apartheid." Enjoying meeting Ms. Chabaku and hearing her story. As she spoke of the horrors of apartheid everyone was in agreement with the brutality of this form of government. The agreement stopped at this point as Ms. Chabaku turned attention to praising the African National Congress. From their July radio communique one can see the nature of this group. The brutal ways of the ANC are no better than the PLO, the Libyans or the Red Brigade. Ms. Chabaku defended the ANC saying they hit only "hard military targets." The ANC, on two occasions, have bombed shopping malls during the Christmas season. They bombed a fast food restaurant in Pretoria killing 20 and maiming 250. The ANC threatened several sporting teams in South Africa and have also been mining rural farm roads with Soviet equipment. Are these hard military targets??? This is the nature of the ANC.

Ms. Chabaku also stated that the ANC has no communist ties. The July 7, 1985 edition of The Sunday Times reports the outlawed South African Communist Party (SACP) controls the ANC by having 25 of its leading members on the 30 member ANC executive committee. One of these members being a ranking KGB official. No communist ties??

Ms. Chabaku then began her plea for disinvestment. She said we should rise against American companies who are funding the evil government. Ms. Chabaku ignored the fact that no white anti-apartheid groups support disinvestment. Mangosuthu Buthelezi, elected black leader of five million Zulus states "In the circumstances that now obtain, withdrawal of investments in South Africa by America is a strategy against black interests and not a punitive stick with which to beat apartheid." Ms. Chabaku stated Buthelezi does not represent blacks, ignoring the fact that he was elected.

Financial analysis agree if all U.S. corporations withdraw from South Africa, British, German, and South African companies will come in and buy the American companies for a fraction of their net worth. Ford and Goodyear, among others have broken national laws in South Africa through indenturing of black apprentices which helped end "white only" job reservation. South African blacks need the voice for change of American companies.

One major contradiction Ms. Chabaku was guilty of was her objection to the U.S. meddling in the affairs of other countries. In the next breath she asked us to disinvest in South Africa. You can't have it both ways Ms. Chabaku!!

The most chilling moment of the night occurred when Ms. Chabaku was asked if she thought there could be a non-violent solution to apartheid. She said there was not.

This is the nature of the ANC!

RETRACTION TO QUEENSBORO

In a recent letter to the editor, I erroneously reported that UNCW had made an investment of approximately $50,000 in Queensboro Steel, a Wilmington based firm, which was in turn investing in South Africa Corporations supporting the practice of apartheid. That investment was made with two other corporations, United States Steel, and Ingersoll-Rand, which do indeed have South African holdings, as reported in a Wilmington Star News article which appeared Sunday, January 12, 1986. UNCW has nothing invested in Queensboro Steel, and Queensboro has no South African holdings. I deeply regret having unintentionally slandered Queensboro Steel; and extend to them my apologies for any inconvenience I may have caused.

My intent in writing the letter was not to unjustly defame the character of any innocent party, but merely to raise the consciousness of the University community to the unscrupulous actions of our administration, which represents us to our larger community of city, state, and nation. Although that original letter contained a factual error, the sentiment of it was absolutely accurate. My anger and disappointment are not lessened by this incident and I reiterate my original call to the concerned people of this institution to protest this and any other investments UNCW may have in corporations with South African holdings. This university professes a policy of nondiscrimination in student admissions and hiring. I feel that the spirit of this policy extends beyond its narrowly defined scope and should encompass every facet of UNCW's operation, including investment practices. An investment is in essence a vote in favor of the policies and practices of the investee. I should hope that our administration is not so narrow minded as to support the evils of apartheid.

Edwin Powell

TO THE EDITOR:

I am writing in response to a letter by Edwin J. Powell, III, appearing in the Commentary portion of your paper on January 29, 1986. Mr. Powell argues against the apartheid system of governing in South Africa and advocates a policy of disinvestment by UNCW in firms doing business with South Africa.

While agreeing with Mr. Powell that apartheid is an undesirable political framework under almost all circumstances, I would like to offer a few observations.

a) That South Africa, while less than a republic, is certainly not run by a "government of foreign invaders." The white minority has, for the most part, occupied the country centuries longer than the bulk of the black population now engaged in overthrowing apartheid.

b) South Africa's system, while less than desirable by our standards, is less repressive than most black governments on the continent, i.e., Ethiopia, Uganda, Angola, etc.

c) Investment of endowment assets of the University should be made on the basis of what will provide the greatest return on those assets within the parameters that they are both legal and ethical. But they should not be made on considerations that are purely political, religious, or social in nature. Nor should they be made on the basis of some kind of statement one way or the other along these lines solely to appease students with high

d) To my knowledge, the University has no "investment" in Queensboro Steel any ties or investments in South African companies or with the government of that country, as far as I am aware.

e) Investment of endowment assets of the University should be made on the basis of what will provide the greatest return on those assets within the parameters that they are both legal and ethical. But they should not be made on considerations that are purely political, religious, or social in nature. Nor should they be made on the basis of some kind of statement one way or the other along these lines solely to appease students with high ideas such as Mr. Powell.

f) Mr. Powell's concern over the "blight and outrage" of dealing with racist South Africa is a little too narrowly focused. I hope to see in the near future letters from him expressing the same sentiments towards the planned starvation and relocation of peoples by the black Marxist government in Ethiopia, of the mass torture and execution of peoples by the black military despots in Uganda, etc. In short, those who espouse disgust of the white minority government in South Africa, for all its shortcomings, are too quick to ignore the even more repressive actions and policies of other black governments on the same continent.

It is all too easy to view South African apartheid in the context of our own civil rights experience without considering their differences in education, social and cultural mores, and historical traditions. There is a great danger in giving power to an opposition (the African National Congress) that openly espouses violent overthrow and the nationalization of industries among a nation of people unstable enough to be killing each other with pangas and axes.

To quote Chief M.G. Buthelezi in a recent speech at the Manhattan Institute for Policy Research, "what the West must understand is that the current struggle must be directed not only at eradicating Apartheid, but also replacing it with a free and open society."

Jimbo Fox

BELONGINGS STOLEN

I am writing to express my disappointment in some of the students at UNCW. I feel that my trust has been violated and I am hurt by that. Last night (Tuesday, January 28 around 8:30 pm) I was showering after using the nautilus facilities. I believed that I could leave my belongings unguarded and unlocked for the 5 minutes it takes to shower. However, when I returned to the locker area in the next room, I found that the UNCW sweatshirt I'd used had been taken. The girl(s) who took the sweatshirt know who they are. It was an ugly thing to do, and costly - I hope they have $20 to take away next time for someone else's childish fun and or greed.

The woman who checks out baskets, etc. says that this happens

SPEAKER DEFENDS SELF

Ms. Mottlaepula Chabaku's lecture on apartheid in South Africa was very informative, but I feel she contradicted herself one too many times. First, she said we were all Gods children and we must learn to live in peace. Ms. Chabaku even quoted the scripture where Jesus says in Matthew chapter 5 verse 44, "Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you, and persecute you." Yet Ms. Chabaku supports the African National Congress!! An organization that openly urges a violent overthrow of the South African government. An organization that tells young blacks to attack policemen, steal their guns, and kill them on the spot.

Secondly, Ms. Chabaku accused American industries of exploiting the blacks in South Africa to produce products cheaper than in the U.S., and steal jobs every day and that I was lucky nothing else was stolen. I agree and I know that, unfortunately, this is how many people operate, but it still hurts when it happens because I like to know that people are basically honest and trustworthy. Those of you who steal others' belongings could use some consideration and maturity.

Kate Bruce, Ph.D.

from American workers. This practice is common among U.S. industries to escape the outrageous wage increases and constant strike threats of union bosses. American industries pay blacks in South Africa better than other companies and provide healthier working conditions.

The crime of Apartheid must end!!! BUT PEACEFULLY!! As Americans we must demand Reform not Revolution!

DAVID KING

WOULD DISINVESTMENT HELP?

There are cries here at what is usually a peaceful and apathetic university to divest itself from U.S. Corporations that continue to do business with South Africa. These who call for disinvestment follow the notion that we are supporting the continuation of apartheid by investing, trading, and cooperating with corporations and people in South Africa. But the impact of U.S. disinvestment on the continuation of apartheid is questionable. Remember Nazi Germany (A country often compared to South Africa) carried out a war against the U.S. and U.S.S.R. without American investment. How can we be sure that disinvestment will do more than core the artificial grid of the liberals who wish to cure everyone's problems?

Lets look at the liberal contentions involving South Africa-Apartheid is morally wrong and contemptible to the United States so we as a nation should not support it and do what we can to end it. But when we focus on Nicaragua and attempt to change the moral wrongs perpetrated by that government we are told by liberals that we shouldn't dabble in other countries internal structure. We are constantly reminded of the lack of "Free" elections in Chile, Philippines, Guatemala, El Salvador, and South Africa, but liberals overlook the lack of any elections in Cuba, Poland, East Germany, North Korea, Angola, Zimbabwe, Mozambique, etc.

We give economic aid and support to the communist dictator of Mozambique, Sonora Michael, to "ween" him away from Marxism, but aid to Jonas Savimbi the leader of the freedom fighters in Angola fighting 45,000 Cuban troops is backing South Africa (that supports him for obvious strategic reasons) not weening him away from South Africa- something is wrong here. We should boycott Shell Oil Company because of their involvement in South Africa but support Gulf Oil Company because they are showing the Marxist Government the superiority of capitalism (while financing those Cuban troops). The hypocrisy needs to end on the liberal side. Maybe we should remove the economic incentives of apartheid by utilizing the Sullivan Principles more stringently and show the South Africans the superiority of the Non-Apartheid capitalism (something that the U.S. took 150 years to discover.

STILLPOINT

BOB HAYWOOD

I have long been aware of how good my life is and with what ease and comfort I live in this world. I grew up with warnings about trying to serve God and love "mammon" (wealth, riches). At the same time I am becoming increasingly aware of the power of our consumer-oriented society so that even the desire to live more simply and own fewer things seems overpowered so that commodities that once were "wanted" are now seen as "needed".

Isn't it true that when you look back on your income of several years ago, you realize that you were able to make ends meet then and that whatever increases in income have happened in the last few years have not left you with any less stress related to finances than before? It seems that the more that we get, the more we want! That's a consumer dynamic!

Again Christopher Lasch in "The Minimal Self" has helped me understand something of the power of consumerism. It seems that in the past our identity was related directly to our personal and family histories and the communities in which we grew with their histories. Parents and great grandparents, professions that went back generations and continuously stable home and community contributed to a sense of identity that was rooted in this history.

Many of the things that made our identity stable are gone. Instead we are part of a mobile, divorce-ridden, pluralistic society that forces us to look in new directions for our identity. More and more we begin to take our clues for our identity from elements outside of ourselves. As Lasch describes "As a consumer, the individual learns not merely to measure himself against others but to see himself through others' eyes. He learns that the self-image he projects counts for more than accumulated skills and experience. Since he will be judged both by his colleagues and his superiors at work and by the stranger he encounters on the street, according to his possessions, his clothes, and his personality - not as in the nineteenth century, by his "character" - he adopts a theatrical view of his own "performance" and off he goes. When people complain of feeling inauthentic or rebel against "role-playing," they testify to the prevailing pressure to see themselves with the eyes of strangers and to shape the self as another commodity offered up for consumption on the open market."

Our clothes and our cars and our houses are not purchases because they are "needed" but because they are the means by which we present ourselves to our society and establish our identity. More and more, the things that we "need" are purchases because they contribute to the fantasy image of self that we want to present. Such is the "psychology of consumerism". And such a process is the breeding ground for an awful lot of anxiety and insecurity as more and more things are bought and discarded in order to maintain the right image.

I'm quite sure what you should do with the above thoughts. I simply found it helpful as a means of clarifying the deeper issues of our attachment to "things". If it all seems all too serious, stuff his article in your trash can and go for a walk on the beach!

COLLEGES PONDER FUNDING CUTS

COURTESY CPS

Colleges around the country still aren't sure how they'll compensate for the federal funding they're about to lose because of the new Gramm-Rudman balanced budget bill.

But more schools soon may be raising tuition, increasing the amount they charge students to process student loans and intensify their fund-raising efforts, various officials say.

Under the law, which requires the government to balance the federal budget by the start of the next decade, federal college funding will be cut by some 4.3 percent by March 1, 1986.

Further cuts of up to 50 percent will start in August.

And there may be even further cuts proposed when President

Reagan unveils his new federal budget proposal next week.

There are too many unknowns. We don't know what we are up against until we see the president's budget," says Bob Aaron of the National Association of State Universities and Land Grant Colleges.

Just the initial 4.3 percent cut, however, translates into a $244 million drop in the amount of federal student aid monies available this spring.

Funding of campus research from the departments of Energy, Defense, Education, Agriculture and Health and Human Services will drop by some $450 million at the same time.

Making up for those kinds of losses won't be easy, officials say. Many say tuition increases are inevitable.

At Reed College in Oregon, for example, tuition rose 8.7 percent last year, and "it will probably have to go up at least that much next year," says Larry Large, vice president for development and college relations at the school.

The college depends on tuition for about 70 to 75 percent of its revenues, he says.

Reed, like many other schools in recent years, also has been using the interest earned by its endowment to loan to students as student aid.

But because of the huge size of the coming federal budget cuts, Large is not sure the school will be able to continue meeting all student needs.

CURTAIN CALLS

JEFFERSON WEAVER

A musical murder mystery? Okay, I'm working on it.

That was my first reaction when I saw the announcement concerning "Something's Afoot" at Thalian Hall.

Thalian Hall is, of course, the grand old theater in downtown Wilmington. Thalian is being restored bit by bit to her original grandeur.

However, the past two shows this reporter has seen there have been disappointing to a degree.

For those not familiar with the show, "Something's Afoot" is based on the Agatha Christie novel "Ten Little Indians," concerning a weekend retreat which turns to murder in an English country manor house.

The victims are disposed of in friendly interesting ways. One person is devoured by a carnivorous plant(?), another is gassed rather dramatically by answering the telephone.

One by one they are carried off into the library by Geoffrey, a college student whose boating team has abandoned him on the lake forcing him to take refuge with the guests.

Geoffrey is played by Stephen Schmidt.

I was happy to see one of my personal favorites, Mr. Vincent McKoy, playing the part of Clive the butler. Pity they had to kill him off immediately after his announcement that "Lord Rancour will not be joining us for dinner tonight. He is dead."

Colonel Gillweather, whom we find later on in the play to have once known the Lord Dudley's ex-wife (I mean "known" in the biblical sense), was played rather well by Frank Trimble - he really seemed to enjoy the part, his enthusiasm getting in the way at times.

The ongoing feud between Flint the caretaker and Lettie the maid was one of the more refreshing subplots of the show. Flint's innate ability to offend everyone was hilarious.

Caretaker Flint has a very real appreciation of the ladies, though they don't appreciate the occasional "friendly" pinch on the derrière.

Dr. Grayburn was another interesting character, though it was difficult to tell whether he meant to be British or American. As with several of the cast members, though, I couldn't hear what she said most of the time, so slaughtered scenes were irrelevant.

Rosaland Ford still gave a very provocative performance as the good lady doctor.

Hope Langdon was the good old, all-American (she didn't even try to sound British) girl next door who naturally has to fall in love with the slightly confused Geoffrey. The audience did tend to fall in love with her, as long as she didn't sing. Hope was portrayed by a very attractive Lida Williams.

Doug Dodson did a fine job of the evil, greedy nephew, Nigel Rancour, whom everyone tended to suspect of being the murderer - at least he was suspected till he was bashed over the head by a battle axe.

Lady Grace was a very convincing fallen grande dame, who was destitute, overweight, and extremely frustrated. Played by Stacey Hammond she also kept her accent consistent through the show - pity more couldn't have done the same.

Miss Tweed, the slightly dotty unseen detective (mean detective) who finally finds the identity of the murderer, is played by the delightful Denise Bass. Miss Tweed uses the process of elimination to find the murderer; one by one her suspects die, so after accusing everyone she finally gets one right.

The Orchestra, conducted by Doragene Gurganus, was well worth hearing. Of course, quite often they were all you could hear - not detracting from the musicians.

The cast seemed scared to speak up. While the set design was very well done, complete to real antiques and a mounted bison, the lighting was interesting.

Though I don't recall a solar eclipse in 1935, there must have been one. Why else would it have been pitch dark in the middle of the afternoon each time someone opened a door?

Although "Afoot" is a bit long for one act play (1 hr 45 mins.) it was still enjoyable, after the pace picked up and the opening night jitters left the cast.

SPORTS

THE 1985-86 UNCW SWIM TEAM

SWIMMERS HOPE TO PEAK FOR CAA

The men's and women's swim teams haven't had the most successful year statistically, but they have had many noteworthy performances.

The men have a record of 6-5 following their Feb. 1st wins over Georgia Tech (73-40) and UNC-Charlotte (58-50). This record also includes a very impressive 60-52 win over a talented Old Dominion squad. Besides these wins, the Hawks claim Emory, College of Charleston, and William & Mary as victims. Their losses have been some very tough ones. These include a 57-56 loss at Furman and a 62-51 loss at Virginia Commonwealth. Other losses have come to ACC powers NC State and Duke and to a strong East Carolina team.

The men have had strong individual performances. The performance of sophomore Don Hosier has been a real key for the Seahawks this season. Hosier, a native of Wilmington, NC, was a triple winner in the loss at East Carolina and has been a consistent winner all year long.

"Don is so consistent, so tough, and such a competitor. I don't care what event you put him in, he is going to go out and get the job done," said Coach Dave Allen. "If you've got a whole team of Don Hosiers, you've got yourself a championship squad."

Besides Hosier, the performances of Scott Stokes, Art Hall, Keith Hawley, Doug Schultz, and Frenchman Philippe Roth have been superb. All of these men form a very competitive squad.

"I am very pleased with these guys, and we are looking very good in spots," said Allen. "I'm just looking forward to see what they can do at the end of the season in the conference meet."

Just as much strength has come from the Seahawk divers. Sophomore Eric Pundock and freshman Kurt Candler have led UNCW with some brilliant performances. The most brilliant was Pundock's 1 meter diving performance versus East Carolina. His 471.35 score for 11 dives broke the school record. Eric has worked very hard this year," said diving coach Marc Ellington. "He has changed his attitude and because of this, he is a much better competitor. He has worked very hard on his training and technique, as well as excelling in the classroom.

And you must have a healthy academic atmosphere in order to compete."

Backing up Pundock has been Candler's performance on the 3 meter board. "Kurt is a very talented freshman," said Ellington. "He needs some refinement to be a quality diver, but he has such great potential." Candler, son of former Olympic diver and current N.C. State diving coach John Candler, and Pundock, a native of Westfield, NJ, both qualified for the Southeastern Regional Diving Championships to be held at Clemson University Feb. 14-16. They will be competing against top divers from the Atlantic Coast Conference, Southeastern Conference, Sun Belt Conference, Colonial Athletic Conference, and major southeastern independent schools including Florida State and Miami (Fla.).

The Lady Seahawks have had their share of performance also. The women have a record of 3-7 with wins over Emory, College of Charleston, and UNC-Charlotte. The jobs that Jo-Ann Brown, Kathleen Flaherty, Stacy Cramer, and diver Phyllis Wesesku have done are exceptional. Colleen Lawrence has also done a fine job coming off shoulder surgery. "They deserve tremendous credit, because they have worked so hard," said Coach Allen. "The competition has really been tough and we really aren't ready to compete versus the tougher schools in our conference."

The road hasn't been the smoothest, but the Hawks hope to take these strong performances into the Colonial Athletic Association Swimming and Diving Championships, to be held here at UNCW's Task Natatorium Feb. 12-15. "This is a great honor for our program," Allen said. "To be chosen as the site of the first-ever conference tournament means that our program and facilities are recognized as one of the finest in the league." Participating schools include American University, East Carolina, University of Richmond, James Madison, and William & Mary. "This is the focal point of our whole season," said Allen. "It is important that we make a good showing."

"It (Gramm-Rudman) will really put pressure on endowment and tuition income," Large says.

"We do not have the capacity to pick up the shortfall in federal aid cuts," adds Jon Cosovich, vice president for development and communications at the University of Michigan.

As a result, "we are implementing plans to cut spending," he adds.

Many schools, other officials add, may have to still filling vacancies on their staffs and on their faculties, raise housing fees, and even cut back the number of courses they offer if they're to compensate for the Gramm-Rudman cuts.

Major research schools like Michigan also will lose research funding monies it uses to maintain labs and pay staff.

Cosovich adds state funding in Michigan, for one, won't increase enough to replace what the Gramm-Rudman cuts will take away.

"He sees tuition hikes as inevitable. "We think there is elasticity in tuition."

And to make it easier for people to pay higher tuition, more schools may start lending parents money to pay for it.

A few -- Bryn Mawr, Washington and Penn among them -- already have lending programs.

"There is no question it's an increasing practice," says Margaret Healy, Bryn Mawr's treasurer.

Healy is confident her school can make up the difference for cuts in direct grants, though compensating for drastic Guaranteed Student Loans cuts would be more difficult.

Congressional sources indicate the "front end fee" students pay to get GSAs soon will be increased from five to five and a half percent.

Other observers think small, private colleges with relatively few resources and no state legislatures to help them may not survive all the Gramm-Rudman cuts.

But some educators have predicted the decline of small private colleges for quite a while now.

"The doom and gloom boys have been wrong by a country mile," asserts Gary Quehl, president of the Council of Independent Colleges.

They are essentially entrepreneurial institutions that are resourceful in adjusting to hard times," Quehl contends. About 65 percent of the small colleges have aggressive fund-raising campaigns to assist students.

INTRAMURAL REPORT

Lou Dicello

As you walk through the gymnasium at this time of year you will notice many students and faculty bustling about in preparation of their next intramural basketball game.

Basketball is only one of the many intramural sports programs on this campus. The program at UNCW is growing even faster than the campus itself, and with the hi-tech help of the VAX computer system Intramural Director Lea Dudley is building a very strong program.

It is not possible for Dr. Dudley to maintain the current level of efficiency without the help of her commissioners. Within this well-organized system their are commissioners for each intramural sport; the commissioners for basketball are Curtis Brigran and Lee King, these people handle the referees, score keepers, and everyday problems to allow the intramural director to concentrate on the overall program.

In the co-ed basketball program there are some 50 teams and 8 leagues. In order to have a program of this size there are referees, scorekeepers, and equipment managers to keep the situation running smoothly and continuously. The wages for these individuals usually range from $3.35 to $3.50 per game. That is a relatively low figure when you consider how many city leagues and Jr. High School referees are paid between $7.50 and $12.50 a game.

Sign-ups for spring intramural sports is fast approaching, so stay tuned to "IM News" on the VAX system. To avoid the last minute rushing you may now place your roster in the computer system for upcoming events. Remember the username is "intramurals" and the password is "sports."

ROACHES HAVE FRIENDS TOO

Jeff Weaver

A popular commercial a few years back showed Mr. and Mrs. Joe Smith of America Street spending up their living room to find a circle of six-foot tall roaches, flies and other vermin dancing around in a circle.

My landlady is still collecting royalties from that advertisement. You see, most people think that the bugs on that ad were actors in costume. Not so.

Those critters are my roommates.

I wrote a column mentioning concerning the pests that inhabit my apartment. These included Aristotle, the cockroach.

Now, everyone at some point in their life has met a memorable cockroach. The little creatures can survive anything from Roach-prufe to a nuclear holocaust, and come out swinging afterwards.

I fondly remember the horror tales of roaches finding their way into dresser drawers, always locating the one containing underwear.

My roaches behave better than that, however. I don't usually see them unless I sneak into my kitchen in the middle of the night, then I see them sitting up at the table, cooking a steak, having a drink-things that cockroaches everywhere do.

Immediately before moving into my cave, my landlady gave me a bottle of the most powerful insecticide made. The formula said to mix one capful to five gallons of water.

I said, what the heck, these are tough roaches. I stuck the sprayer contraption into the bottle and used it straight up.

Smug in the knowledge that the roaches were dying in paroxysms of agony somewhere between my walls, I left the apartment for a few days. The instructions said to leave the sprayed area for three hours, or until radiation reached low enough levels that life was not endangered.

When I returned, the roaches were there to greet me, most of them holding out their glasses for another shot of that good stuff.

Apart from a hangover or two, most of the roaches were all right when we sat down around the kitchen table to negotiate a treaty.

What finally came about was that the roaches had rights from midnight to 6 a.m. and anything edible left out was theirs for the taking.

Of course, they beganto get cocky.

The other morning the alarm clock in the kitchen went off at 3 a.m. Needless to say, I was upset, and after racing into the kitchen carrying a sawed off shotgun I found the culprits.

Several of the younger roaches had formed a radical splinter group and were violating the treaty laws governing appliances and clothes.

They had crawled into the alarm clock, losing one of their number as they were setting up a guerrilla training base. The casualty had touched the mouth of the clock, instantly electrocuting himself and overloading the clock.

Later on, after the radical roaches had been tried and convicted for terrorism, one of the older hard line cockroaches told me that the sight of a bearded, nearly naked man brandishing a sawed off shotgun and growling unintelligibly had influenced other would-be terrorist roaches that it was not worth the trouble.

Of course, there was a time when no peace existed between the cockroaches and myself.

I remember vividly the rather large cockroach by the name of Aristotle who would have philosophical discussions with me at one of my former abodes. He claimed to have written several papers on the meaning and purpose of life-from the roach standpoint, that is - and I really wanted to read them.

Unfortunately, Aristotle was killed when the owner of the machine shop we lived in used some World War I era nerve gas in a bloody hand to hand battle that ensued when the owner tried to reake the shop. The final death toll was terrible: humans, 234 dead, 29 wounded; roaches 12 dead, 9 wounded.

Getting back to the present. When I came into possession of my cats, however, the entire peace negotiations were broken off.

It seems that one of my cats fended for himself so long that he came to relish cockroaches. He makes nightly forays into the kitchen, and you can tell when he is successful - crunching noises and happy purrs add background music to the terrified scuttling of tiny legs wearing size ten boots.

My younger cat (who is expecting), began to feel as though she was missing out on some good eats, so she has staring through the threshold - known to cockroaches as the Point of No Return - and attacking roaches at random. Natasia, however, despises the taste of the wretched things, so she just kills for the sport of it.

Many of the roaches have been known to scream in terror when they catch sight of the five-pound killing machine they call Natasia the Terrible.

We are in the process of forming policies concerning house cats as weapons but since the roaches lack such technology they are attempting alliances with the fleas, though the fleas are not known for their willingness to negotiate.

I am by far not the only person having roach problems.

A friend who once lived in an elderly (circa 642 BC) dormitory has often regaled us with stories of great cockroach hunts, where the bugs were sprayed with anything from hairspray (very effective) to D-con (Useless) and then pinned to a bulletin board above the water fountain.

The sight of their dead comrades in arms pinned to a board like so many specimens is said to have had a profound effect on the dorm roaches. It also prompted the board of health to condemn the place six times.

Of course, the best roach tale of them all comes from my sister's friend in New Orleans - a place known for its cockroach air raids.

Serena's friend was asleep in bed one night when she awoke to the sound of sweetly obscene nothings being whispered in her ear.

Thinking it was her husband, and that he was feeling amorous, she tried to lightly punch him in the nose to inform him that she was not feeling like anything but sleeping.

She didn't hit him, and when she tried again she saw her husband coming out of the bathroom.

Needless to say, she was having a difficult time figuring out who was whispering the sweet nothings.

When the husband looked at the bed he suddenly found to his horror that a - guess what - had positioned himself directly behind her ear on the pillow. The roach was said to have laughed even as the husband opened fire with his deer rifle, mortally wounding the cockroach and destroying the pillow.

I would have done the same if one of the little B----- had been whispering in my wife's ear.

On a more serious note, let's try to remember the good things about the space program.

The people, the patriotism, and the pride instilled by America's Astronauts must continue, regardless of why or how much.

The seven onboard Challenger will be remembered as will heroes such as the ones who walked on the moon, and planted the flag of the United States of America where no other flag has flown. This new "Magnificent Seven" if you will, will not be forgotten.

I don't know if you cried Tuesday, but I did.

music. The musicians played "musical chairs," switching off after each set and presenting several duo and trio highlights throughout the evening.

The North Carolina Jazz Festival was undoubtedly an overwhelming success this year. The sold out crowd was delighted with the musical presented to them, and the audience will no doubt be waiting impatiently for next year's festival.

SPLIT.

Split up your training in the Army Reserve into two summers. You can do it if you're a high school junior and 17. Take your Basic Training between your junior and senior years, then your Special Army Skill Training the next summer.

You miss little or no school, and you get a big edge on the future competition for jobs, experience and opportunities.

You also get paid. You earn at least $1,100 for each summer, plus over $1,225 a year for serving one weekend a month, normally, and two weeks annual training.

Before you think about splitting for summer, think about splitting summers, and talk it over with us.

WELL NOTES

Bloating, breast tenderness, fatigue and irritability are more than just week away markers for your period. Your body may also be sending you a nutritional message. LISTEN TO YOUR BODY and take the edge off those monthly signals.

By making the following changes in your eating habits several days before you usually notice any premenstrual discomfort, you can alleviate much of your discomfort.

1.) Lighten up on salt-also high sodium foods (cheese, cold cuts, snacks). Women tend to retain more sodium before their periods than at other times of the month. 2.) Get high vitamin insurance from fresh fruits and vegetables, whole grains. Your body needs more B<sub>6</sub> and C before your period, and these foods are nutrient gold mines.

3.) Take a juice break-real fruit juice, not "juice beverage", read the label! Cutting back on caffeine and substituting water, decaffeinated coffee and teas, can help eliminate the pain of swollen breasts.

4.) Mini fuel-ups-several small nutritious meals throughout the day and a bedtime snack(banana, whole wheat toast) can help keep blood sugar level constant.

5.) Eat "mood regulators"-fish, potatoes, chicken, whole grains. These are rich in vitamin B<sub>6</sub>; the one that seems to affect certain mood regulating brain chemicals. It is thought that lowered premenstrual levels may contribute to the mood changes many women report.

6.) Avoid chocolate or sugary foods. These only cause weight gain and increase your need for B complex vitamins.

7.) Alcohol depletes the body of vitamin B; choose non-alcoholic drinks instead.

Simple dietary changes can help. Try it, and BE WELL.

Heather remains in a coma on ATWT

By Nancy Johnson

ALL MY CHILDREN: Alex is secretly hiding out in the basement of his house. The butler, Sammers, kept mum that Alex didn't die in the landslide. Benny can't forget the kiss he shared with Nina.

ANOTHER WORLD: Fayer drove his speeding car toward Victoria in an attempt to run her down. Mac's condition improved after Chris injected him with the serum he hopes will save Mac from death.

AS THE WORLD TURNS: Holden stole a kiss from Lily. Another mysterious package was left on Kim's doorstep with her name on it. Heather remained in a coma after she was beaten up.

CAPITOL: Jarrett realized that Jenny, not Julie, might have shot Mark. Andrew used hypnosis to keep Mark a "cooperative" patient.

DAYS OF OUR LIVES: Bo shocked

everyone by admitting that he, not Shane, had been arrested for espionage when he was in Stockholm. Bo later escaped from jail during a mysterious explosion.

GENERAL HOSPITAL: Mike is still acting hostile toward Rick and Ginny. Terry was furious at Anna, who quizzed everyone in Laurelton about Russell's activities. Rick and Ginny took in orphan, Jeff.

GUIDING LIGHT: Jackson vowed that he won't lose Beth to Philip. Reva lied to Roxie that Fletcher's newspaper stories about "Laura" are not really about Reva's suicide attempt. Rick got high on pills.

LOVING: Rebekah agreed to help Dane regain his business power. Link Zona to be told that she's not really pregnant. Harry taunted Ava.

ONE LIFE TO LIVE: Tracy caught Cassie, who pasted together some letters addressed to Ramona that Tracy had torn up into little bits. Tina blabbed to the press that Niki is Viki.

RYAN'S HOPE: Jack realized that Devin hired an actress to make believe she was Devin's grandmother. Dakota wants a chance to recover the sunken treasure.

SANTA BARBARA: Nick got into a fight with Dylan, who admitted that he'd slept with Kelly. Terry's smitten with Gina's niece, Hayley Blake. C.C. and Lionel engaged in a big bucks poker game.

SEARCH FOR TOMORROW: Liza realized that Lloyd and Rivera are members of the mysterious Satern Group. Hogan is beginning to like Patti.

THE YOUNG AND THE RESTLESS: Matt encouraged Nikki to talk to Victor about his affair with Ashley. Jill showed copies of the blackmail photos to Jack. Shawn failed in another attempt to kill psychic, Tamra.

Miss Manners

DEAR MISS MAN- NERS: What do you think of the intensely loud music played at wedding receptions? For several years, my family and I have attended impressive church ceremonies, solemn in the sense of being sacred, followed by receptions where we are subjected to deafening music, if one can call it music.

There should be soft, pleasant background accompaniment to the festivities instead of their being dominated by rock sessions.

GENTLE READER: What's that again? Miss Manners can't hear you with all the noise. A wedding reception is a party, not part of the solemn ceremony, and one can argue that whatever music the bride and groom guests enjoy may be played. But that is only if care is taken that no part of the arrangements should actually make any of the guests uncomfortable.

Young people sometimes fail to appreciate how offensive loud rock is to those of us who still have our hearing. Miss Manners certainly agrees that guests of all generations must be considered, not just the bride party's contemporaries, and that therefore a quiet zone must be provided for those who cannot take the noise.

DEAR MISS MAN- NERS: All my life, I was coerced into writing thank-you notes for gifts. The habit remained when I moved out on my own, until one day about six years ago.

On that day I realized, while writing a thank-you note, that I didn't have to write them anymore if I didn't want to. However, on that same day, I knew why I should write them. I was truly grateful by that point in my life for each gift I had received. I knew from my own experience the thought, time and effort, and especially the money, that went into a gift purchase.

If that amount of work and thoughtfulness did not at least elicit a thank-you, then I was truly ungrateful. The years went by, and I sent my own and my daughter's thank-yous, never really noticing whether anyone else sent them.

But now, because of the number of gifts I buy, I realize that I rarely receive thanks, and I'm sick of it. With today's prices and my valuable time and effort, I cannot understand someone not sending a thank-you note for a gift. What is right nowadays?

GENTLE READER: Miss Manners would have hated to be someone who sent you a present after you had decided you were not required to write thank-you letters, but before you concluded that you would do so voluntarily. She would have felt exactly as you do about people who do not trouble to express thanks, which is exactly the way everyone else on the giving end feels. Only those on the receiving end consider it unimportant.

In your case, your manners happened to have worked, because there was no such hiatus between your automatic thanks and your motivated ones. But your rationale doesn't work.

Miss Manners would go so far to say that the reason the whole society doesn't work these days is because people take your approach, that they should only observe the amenities if they happen to feel the genuine impulse to do so.

Small children are quite successful at separating their enjoyment of presents from any feeling of gratitude to those who gave them. That is natural behavior.

Therefore, they must be taught by rote, as you were, to do the right thing whether they like it or not. You are doing your daughter no favor by writing her thank-you letters for her.

Miss Manners happens to be of the opinion that it is the very habit of doing the right thing, unnatural as it may be, that suggests to people such as yourself the idea of improving upon their original and natural impulses.

Had you never been required to express your thanks, you might well have gone merrily through life without ever having pondered that relationship between gift and gratitude. Many a grown-up bride couple manages this with no trouble at all—except from people such as yourself and everybody else in the world who resents not being thanked.

However, had the philosophical basis never occurred to you, the habit of writing thank-you letters would have served to put a decent veneer of kindness on your natural lack of gratitude.

Planning a wedding? If you need Miss Manners' advice on whom to invite, what to wear, who pays for what, etc., send two dollars for her "Weddings for Beginners" pamphlet to: Miss Manners, in care of this newspaper, P.O. Box 2385, Cincinnati, OH 45201.

BLACK HISTORY EVENTS SCHEDULED

Nationally, the month of February has been designated as Black History Month. On the campus of UNC-W the first week of Black History Month is named Black Greek Week.

Their purpose is to promote good will among their fellow-Greeks, students, faculty, and community. This particular week gives laymen a chance to observe campus Greek fraternities.

Black fraternities on this campus want to show that they not only party and sponsor step shows, but they contribute funds and services to the community. They sponsor scholarships, community projects, assist the elderly, and aid such organizations such as the Sickle Cell Association and the Red Cross.

Along with other activities during Greek Week, the Black Greeks are to wear their colors on Wednesday, On February 9-15, even deaths in the past.

Fort Lauderdale, for one, is sponsoring an "Olympics" featuring volleyball, a tug-of-war and various dance and trivia contests.

City officials actively are discouraging excessive drinking, and have banned alcohol consumption on the strip along the beach.

Daytona Beach hopes to attract up to 20,000 students to its first National Collegiate Sports Festival. The festival, scheduled for March 8 through April 6, will feature about 20 different sports ranging from rugby to golf.

Four national corporations -- including Walt Disney -- and about 30 Daytona businesses are supporting the events.

Nolan hopes the festival also will encourage more corporations to support intramural programs on campuses. IM sports, he notes, can use some fund-raising help.

But no one precludes the activities aren't intended to moderate revelers' drinking.

"We hope the level of drinking will be lower than in the past," Daytona Chamber of Commerce representative Betty Wilson says.

Daytona also will mount a poster and radio campaign to promote sensible alcohol consumption.

Omega Psi Phi Fraternity Inc. is sponsoring a display in the University Union. The Kappa Alpha Psi Fraternity Inc. will be sponsoring a display on "African Artifacts during the week of February 16-22. Along with these displays, various black organizations are sponsoring many varieties of programs during Black History Month. Support them in their efforts.

BEACHES TO CURB DRINKING

COURTESY CPS

The capitals of spring break hedonism -- Daytona Beach and Fort Lauderdale -- are trying to change their images.

Both communities are sponsoring organized activities aimed at somehow moderating student drinking during the spring break invasions of March and April.

"What has gone on before was a Sodom and Gomorrah affair," says Jerry Nolan, spokesman for Daytona's National Collegiate Sports Festival, which is supposed to draw student into activities more constructive than those with which Sodom, Gomorrah, Daytona and Fort Lauderdale generally are associated.

"The festival demonstrates we are getting away from the tarnished image of the past," he says.

Daytona and the other vacation spots in Florida don't have much of a choice.

This is the first spring break during which the state's new 21-year-old minimum drinking age law is in effect, and rising insurance costs are forcing communities to find ways to minimize the wild partying that has led to injuries and

One Of The Nation's Leading Employers Is Now Interviewing On Campus.

One of the largest employers in the U.S. is accepting applications and scheduling appointments for interviews. The Department of the Navy is offering management opportunities in electronics, engineering, nuclear propulsion, systems analysis and other vital fields.

These positions provide strong technical and general management training, rapid professional growth and immediate executive responsibility.

To apply, you must be no more than 28 years old, have a BS or BA, pass aptitude and physical examinations, and qualify for security clearance. U.S. citizenship is required.

To make an appointment for an interview, sign up at your Career Placement Office, or call:

NCAA REQUIREMENT DISCRIMINATES

ADMINISTRATORS WORRY THEY WILL HINDER MINORITIES AND SMALL SCHOOLS

COURTESY CPS

College coaches and athletic directors predict the NCAA's new academic requirements for freshman athletes will create "whiter" football and basketball teams and give larger schools a sharper recruiting edge over smaller schools.

Members of the National Collegiate Athletic Association recently voted 206-94 to adopt a controversial plan to require freshman athletes to earn certain minimum scores on college entrance exams, and have a 2.0 grade-point average in 11 specified high school courses.

At the NCAA convention in New Orleans, black educators objected that the standardized test score measure effectively will keep minority students off teams and out of college.

Educators have long argued standardized test questions tend to be "culturally biased," dwelling on experiences and concepts associated with middle-class upbringings.

"The NCAA had good intentions and a lousy product," says Timothy Walter, supervisor of the student-athlete academic support program at the University of Michigan.

"There's definitely going to be a whitening of major schools," Walter said. "You might see other Freshmen athletes will have to score 700 on the SAT or 15 on the ACT exam and earn a 2.0 average in high school academic courses to participate in NCAA, leaving some results off the courts.

schools breaking off and a movement of minority kids to a few schools."

The requirements, which will affect NCAA Division I and IA schools, eventually will require freshmen athletes to score at least 700 on the combined Scholastic Aptitude Test (SAT) or 15 on the American College Testing (ACT) exam, and earn a 2.0 grade-point average in 11 high school academic courses.

The requirements will be phased in over three years to allow freshman athletes to offset low test scores with high grades or vice versa.

In 1986-87, freshman must have high school GPAs of 1.8, SAT scores of 740 or ACT scores of 17 to be eligible to play or even practice on NCAA varsity teams.

A freshman scoring only 660 on the SAT or 13 on the ACT must have a 2.2 high school GPA to qualify.

Then in 1987-88, a freshman with a 1.9 high school must score 720 on the SAT or 16 on the ACT, or have a 2.2 GPA with scores of 680 or 14 on his or her entrance exam to be eligible.

Freshman athletes not meeting minimum standards must sit out both practice and play until their sophomore year.

"Smaller schools will be more upset by this," says Nelson Townsend, athletic director at Delaware State College, which has 22,000 students.

"Smaller institutions can ill afford to bring in an athlete, give him a full scholarship and watch him not play," he explains. "Only the rich institutions can take advantage of that policy."

Delaware State will be doubly hit, Townsend predicts, because it recruits many of its students from major urban areas.

Inner-city high school students score disproportionately lower on standardized entrance exams, as do some rural-area students, he says.

"Whether it's a white kid from the hills of West Virginia or a black kid from New York City, you're going to have discrimination against the poor."

Coach Karen Langeland of Michigan State University favors the new academic requirements.

"I may have an ideal perspective, but I don't think it will have an effect except in a positive way," she says of the new freshman requirements.

"A smaller pool of athletes will be available," she concedes, "But I don't think that will necessarily give an edge to bigger schools. It will be who's better able to recruit."

She does confirm one of Townsend's fears in adding Michigan State may stockpile ineligible freshman athletes on a limited basis.

"If there were a real blue-chip athlete, we'd consider that," she says, estimating the school could award one out of every five scholarships to promising but academically deficient athletes.

Michigan's Walter thinks the problem can be avoided by requiring "universities to supply support programs. Don't keep students out. That's an administrator's way out and an elitist approach."

PURCHASES HALTED

WOODY GUTHRIE

The Purchasing Department at UNCW last week suspended all open purchase orders causing many campus clubs scrambling trying to find new ways to gain access to their funds. The purchase orders were supposedly suspended after one of the clubs overran their budget at Southeastern Electronics after which all standing orders were cancelled.

A meeting was held last Wednesday by Susie Goodrum, secretary in the S.G.A. office to inform the clubs of the new procedure which will require everyone to fill out a separate payment voucher each time something is needed, getting their club president to approve it, taking it back to the S.G.A. office to be typed and then proceeding to the purchasing office where a purchase order can be made.

"The procedure will take too long for clubs that need dated material," says Alan Dudley, the editor of the Fledgling. He went on to say at the meeting that organizations such as his have deadlines to meet with such things as photographs that require developing. The concern is that there will not always be all the people you will need to see to complete the orders available when you need them. The consensus of the group at the meeting was that all clubs shouldn't be punished for the misuse of one club.

Goodrum was sympathetic to the clubs but said this would be the only procedure available at this time to get request for funds. She said that after the purchasing department sees the amount of separate purchase orders that are coming through and the frequency that they need them, they may make some exceptions for publications such as the Fledgling and the Seahawk that need certain materials at once to keep on schedule with their deadlines.

CPPC PLANS FOR FUTURE

Nancy Fister

When a student asks around, do you know where you are going? The Career Planning and Placement Center (CPPC) offers UNCW students services to direct and prepare them for the job market. As a part of the Student Development Center, the CPPC offers counseling for the students who aren't sure what they want. Once this is achieved the students are then advised to learn what is expected of them once they are out of school.

Resume workshops are available throughout the semester and are scheduled at different times for convenience. The student learns how to write a correct resume, the style and categories in a resume, and what to include in the resume. A good resume is grammatically correct, has no misspelled words, has accurate punctuation, has margins and spacing, and is easy to read. It should also be relevant to the position applied for.

Interview workshops are also available to give the student an idea of what to expect and what is expected of them. A good interview is just as important as a good resume and so the students learn how to conduct themselves when they are being interviewed. An importance is placed on what body language tells other people, such as the employer, and the importance of eye contact with the interviewer.

Internships and work-study programs are offered to the students who want to work but also attend school. This gives students an opportunity to work in a given field gaining experience and knowledge. There is also a Co-op program, which is supported by the government, to give experience to those who are not attending school but still need experience in a certain field.

The purpose of these programs and workshops are to give students an opportunity to gain experience and prepare them for the competition of the working world. James Braye, Associate Director of the Student Development Center for Career Planning and Placement, believes too many students graduate without realizing the importance of these programs, and are unemployed. Going to school and getting a degree is one thing, but going into the working world and making that degree worth something is another. The CPPC is here to help students get a job and make their degree worth the time and money they have put into it.

LAW FIRMS REFORM HIRING

College Press Services

Charging law firms "distract and deflect" law students from academics with "high salaries and big dinners," administrators now want firms to help them reform and revamp the way law students get jobs by 1987.

The discontent with the way firms recruit students became apparent at the recent American Association of Law Schools convention.

The highest-paying firms don't visit many campuses, and many law students don't get a crack at the best jobs, the administrators said.

At the conference, members of the National Association for Law Placement (NALP) said firms generally ignore thousands of qualified students by focusing on just a handful of schools.

Judges trolling through law schools to find clerks aren't much better, adds Stephen Yandle, associate dean of Yale Law School.

Firms often court students only from "the most prestigious" schools, figuring they can't afford to travel to many campuses or "don't have an effective way to gather and consider more resumes," Yandle says.

While students at some schools virtually are ignored, students at the "prestigious" universities must cope with intense competition from classmates and pressure from recruiters.

It creates an adverse impact on students' values, Yandle explains. "It suggests students should make career decisions based on the highest bidder: who can pay most and buy the biggest dinner."

Students "try to make themselves appealing in those ways," in some cases by falsifying resumes, he says.

Moreover, recruiters disrupt school work by pulling students out of class for interviews, and by not confining campus visits to a few specific weeks in the spring, as NALP has suggested.

But law firms apparently don't like the process much, either.

"Some schools have a rule that (a firm) has to interview everybody who signs up," says Fred Franklin, director of the American Bar Association's legal education section.

"If the firm doesn't have that much time, (it) won't visit the school."

But just as some firms overlook low-profile schools, some students overlook less glamorous jobs, particularly in the public sector, laments NALP President Lynn Strudler, assistant dean of New York University's law school.

"It's really hard to get students in touch with public-interest jobs," she says. "Even students committed to them have a hard time, because employers won't have the money to come to campus or market themselves."

Less-moneysed firms have started their own "reasonably successful" reforms, she says.

Some have joined consortia in which a student interviews for many firms at one time. Others hire third party interviewers rather than spare one of their partners, whose time is money, Strudler adds.

Others have proposed creating data banks of resumes and other information to screen applicants without having to visit the campuses.

More and more frequently, 18 or 20 law schools will sponsor regional recruiting fairs, which reduce firms' travel costs and give students a chance to meet a wider range of potential employers.

Broadening students' opportunities is one of the American Association of Law Schools' (AALS) main objectives, says spokesman Dr. Millard Ruud, whose subcommittee is currently devising recruitment reforms.

He wants to have the reforms in place by 1987.

Ruud says judges' methods of recruiting clerks are particularly ripe for reform. Guidelines instituted in 1977 by the Judicial Conference Board were abandoned in 1979 because no one followed them.

The problem is one of finding a set of guidelines that will get very substantial conformance from judges," he says, adding "it may not be possible."

But Ruud believes law firms will adopt NALP and AALS reforms, if only for their own good.

As for the students, Ruud feels they'd be happy to have the chaotic process concentrated into a few weeks to relieve some of the pressure.

"They don't have a group with experience out there speaking for them," he says. "They're willing to play by whatever rule we come up with."

WOMEN MORE INTELLECTUAL THAN MEN

COURTESY CPS

Are women on campus more "intellectual" than men?

"Yup," says a random sample of Stanford students.

According to the survey, females classified as "intellectuals" outnumber males classed as intellectuals by a two-to-two margin.

"It's obviously not a representative sample. However, I don't think they (Stanford students) are different than students at other major research institutions," explains Herant Katchadourian, who conducted the study along with colleague John Boli.

Stanford students were asked to fill out a questionnaire on their course plans and their attitudes about what they are studying.

Depending on their answers, students were classified as "intellectual," "careerist," "strivers" or "unconnected."

While careerist men tend to ignore liberal arts courses, "intellectual" women often took a substantial number of liberal arts courses, and maintained an interest in careers.

"I am not surprised by the Stanford findings," says Barbara Hetrick, dean of Academic Affairs at Hood College in Maryland.

"I would expect more women to have humanistic values and to be more likely to seek knowledge for knowledge's sake," she says.

Hetrick herself recently finished a study of how Hood's predominantly female student body changes its political and social views after going through four years of the school's liberal arts curriculum.

Hetrick found seniors were considerably less materialistic than they had been as freshmen, that they were more concerned about community welfare and developing a general philosophy of life.

She found out by administering to Hood students the same survey given by the American Council on Education to some 200,000 freshmen nationwide.

On a national scale, the ACE survey -- created by UCLA and released in January -- found beginning college freshmen are more materialistic than their predecessors.

The Stanford survey defined "strivers" as strongly motivated fathers often hold advanced degrees.

"Careerists" are from a wide array of backgrounds, but often have parents who emphasize career success.

While Stanford students changed categories throughout the four-year period they were observed, radical changes were rare, Katchadourian explains.

While a "striver" might become an "intellectual" or a "careerist" could become a "striver," rarely would an "intellectual" become a "careerist" or vice versa.

Moreover, it was uncommon for "strivers" to become "unconnected," Katchadourian says.

While Hood students changed their attitudes, Hetrick speculates they might be predisposed toward more humanistic values than students at large state universities, toward careers and intellectual pursuits. They tend to come from lower economic backgrounds than other students.

"Unconnected" students generally come either from very high or low social status families.

"Intellectuals" usually come from families of high socioeconomic status, and their

CAMPUS REPUBLICAN

Some self proclaimed campus experts on communist Nicaragua have been leading the civil rights record of the Sandinistas. Sources being used include the ultra liberal Amnesty International. Let's take a real look at Nicaragua's human rights and freedom record.

* Approximately 400,000 people have fled Nicaragua since 1979 out of a total population of less than 3,000,000. For the period from July 19, 1979 to December 12, 1982, the Nicaraguan Commission of Jurists documented 8,655 executions, including 14 pregnant women.

* Since 1979, 20 radio news programs have stopped broadcasting. Only one radio news program is not FSLN run, but even it is heavily censored.

* In 1982, the government claimed a "right to detain and jail persons indefinitely without having proved that they committed a crime. The right to habeas corpus is suspended. Under this decree, strikes continue to be banned, no collective contracts may be signed, and no trade union demonstrations or public meetings are allowed." Free Trade Union News, March 1984.

* On December 28, 1984, Sandinista forces sealed off the town of Nagarote (25 miles northeast of Managua) before dawn. They then entered houses, detaining any young man who appeared to be between 17 and 23 years old. The soldiers carried billy clubs and sticks and parents who attempted to impede them were beaten." The Washington Post, 1/18/85.

* There is no question that the Sandinistas have very nearly completed a transition to a police state in Nicaragua. They have installed in each city residential block an informer whose official responsibility is to report to the government whenever there are meetings of as many as four or five people gathering in any home—reminiscent of Hitler's Nazi Germany." House Majority Leader Jim Wright, October 20, 1983.

* Of the 256 Miskito Indian communities existing in 1979, 139 have been burned by the Sandinistas, including 73 churches.

* "... the Sandinistas treatment of the Indians continues to be unconscionable. One third to one half of the 90,000 Indians on the coast have been displaced. Some 20,000 have fled to Honduras to escape the Sandinistas' scorched earth policy—the razing of villages along the Rio Coco—and 10,000 are confined in resettlement camps in the central coast area. Most disturbing of all, 3,000 to 5,000 have lived for two years in intolerable conditions in forced labor camps— which resemble concentration camps—in the mountainous Matagalpa-Jinotega area, where they pick coffee beans for the state." Senator Edward Kennedy, November 1984.

These human rights violations demonstrate the barbaric ways of the Sandinistas. We must support the Contra Rebels in their fight for freedom under this repressive government. The world is watching.

"If you fail in Nicaragua, we must ask, where will you fail next? If freedom and democracy are not worth defending in your own hemisphere, where are they worth defending? The free world awaits your answer. If your enemies are waiting too." Winston Churchill II, Member of Parliament.

Write your Congressmen and Senators today demanding them to support the aid package to the Freedom Fighters of Nicaragua. Write House members at: House Office Building, Washington, D.C. 20510. The address for all Senators is: Senate Office Building, Washington, D.C. 20510.

advanced "degrees" in urban terrorism in both Cuba and Moscow. Are these the friends you will remember Ms. Chabaku?

These people and their comrades are responsible for launching raid in South Africa such as the June 11, 1985 attack with Russian M-1 hand grenades which seriously wounded a newly appointed Colored member of President P. W. Botha's Cabinet Mr. Lawellon Londas and another Colored member of Parliament. Recent intelligence reports have indicated that the ANC has suicide squads briefed to assassinate non-white political leaders who participate in the new constitutional reforms of the government. Any leader who wishes to change the system from within will have to deal with these terrorist strikes.

No Ms. Chabaku you did not find some gullible student or woolly headed knee jerk liberal to back your cause; if you want change then do it as the Christian you claim to be—do it non violently and leave Iran and Uncle Sam out of it.

THE HEAR NO EVIL ORDINANCE

IT WAS THE NIGHT OF MARDI GRAS, WHEN ALL THROUGH THE UNION, NOT A CREATURE WAS STIRRING, NOT EVEN A MOUSE THE DECORATIONS WERE HUNG FROM THE CEILING WITH CARE, IN HOPES THAT THE STUDENTS WOULD SOON BE THERE;

Last Friday night, the seventh of February, the Museum of World Cultures hosted a party for the campus community. Even though there was good advance publicity, the turn out was low. Now I have been a student here, at UNCW for several years, and served in various leadership positions around the campus. And I have always heard complaints about the lack of activities held on the weekends, for us students to participate in. But this year there have been efforts made to correct this problem, activities such as Frantic Friday, Homecoming, and Mardi Gras.

These activities all have a common tie, low student turn out. Why? I am curious, and would sincerely like you the students here, to inform the Greeks, the club and organizational presidents, the SGA, and other student leaders as to what you want. Or if you are too busy to inform the leaders what you want, then have either the decency to attend campus activities or stop complaining about the lack of fun things to do around here.

Janet Lamble

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

SPEAKER CONTRADICTS SELF

Shades of the Sixties! Just when you thought it was safe to go to college one sided liberal rhetoric returns.

I am referring to the so called Anti-Apartheid Rally on Feb. 4 in the Union Courtyard. For those of you who did not attend, approx. 99.9% of campus, Ms. Motapula Chabaku a native of South Africa came to espout her views on the racial segregation there. Ms. Chabaku who belongs to the Black Women's Federation of South Africa, which is outlawed the African National Congress, which is also outlawed and the National Council of African Women came to our campus hoping to stir up Anti-Apartheid sentiment. From the turn out she was not very successful.

Ms. Chabaku was speaking out against the Apartheid system of racial discrimination. I found her speech to be one sided and highly contradictory. In one breath she preached the Gospel of Jesus and in the next the usual prattle of the Quasi-revolutionary.

Now I deplore the racial policies in South Africa and want them to change; however revolution rioting and terrorism are not the means of change. Reforms can be brought about peaceably as Dr. Martin Luther King did here in America. It might take time but Ms. Chabaku said that her people would be willing to suffer longer.

In her speech Ms. Chabaku also stressed the need for Americans to take any money invested in companies in South Africa, or American businesses that deal with South Africa and invest elsewhere. This is ludicrous. With the world boycotting South African gold the mines have laid off 30 thousand black miners. These men came to the mines and worked because there are few or no opportunities elsewhere. Now with no job in the mines they have no means of supporting themselves or their families. Who is hurt more?

Also Ms. Chabaku stated that we should not send guns to South Africa. The U.S. paced an arms embargo against South Africa since 1975. They produce all their weaponry themselves. The ANC however has no problem in accepting AK-47's and M-16's grenades from their friends in the Soviet Union. MS. Chabaku stated that "when we take power we will remember who our friends were when we were struggling." Robert Magabe remembers his friends too. He is the current president of a repressive Marxist regime in Zimbabwe—formerly Rhodesia where the economy is failing and the white citizens are now the oppressed.

"If Indians can rule India, if Germans can rule Germany, if Italians can rule Italy why can't Africans rule Africa," was another inflammatory statement made by Ms. Chabaku. The white minority holds allegiance to no other country and they are as African as she is.

The Dutch came to South Africa over 350 years ago as part of a Dutch trading and supply colony. Where would you propose to put these people Ms. Chabaku? Will they become the new oppressed under your rule? You stress Christianity but the majority of South Africa is not Christian.

The issue of people of mixed race was not brought up. The current government places these people above the blacks, but below the whites. They are in a sort of limbo. Where will you place them Ms. Chabaku? Are they not as African as you?

As for her claim that the government are terrorists, that again is another piece of rhetoric that I can not swallow. In 1975 members of the ANC's military wing—Umkhonto We Sizwe (Spear of the Nation) set off a bomb in Johannesburg's Cardetown Center when it was packed full of Christmas shoppers killing and injuring dozens. The man held responsible George Phale of the ANC hides across the border in Botswana with his fellow comrades.

One of Mr. Phale's comrades in arms is a Mr. Joe Slovo an exiled former Johannesburg lawyer who is the number two man in the ANC's military wing and has been identified as holding the rank of Colonel in the Russian KGB. Along with Mr. Slovo and Mr. Phale are Ms. Sadi Pale and Ms. Lacy Mashile who run a safe house in the Tlokweng suburb of Gabarone Botswana. Ms. Pale and Ms. Mashile have received

STILLPOINT

BOB HAYWOOD

How many of you find that making friendships or seeking relationships with someone of the opposite sex is a source of worry and anxiety? Well, you should. Uncomfortableness, attentiveness, and insecurity are fitting for people who fall into the category of early young adulthood or the category of being in some kind of transition (e.g. such as that brought on by a divorce). Now, isn't it comforting to know that? Not much, I imagine.

But do try to keep in perspective the fact that much anxiety you may be experiencing in relationships is a normal part of our human condition, particularly at certain stages of our life. People seem to founder in their felt inability to build good relationships and convince themselves that they're either unlovable or unable to relate effectively. So they retreat, isolate themselves in a whole variety of ways, e.g. staying in the dorm room or the library all the time, going home every weekend, etc.

If you're willing to consider changing the way you operate to increase the possibility of developing relationships, the place to begin is with yourself. You are one half of any relationship and you have some control over how you operate even if you don't have control over anyone else.

First, begin to know yourself. Who are you? What qualities can you claim for yourself? What are your strengths? What are your needs? If you could watch yourself, how would you describe your public self, that part you let people know and see? How would you describe your private self, the part you keep hidden?

The more you learn about yourself, the more you will have available to share about your interests, personal qualities and personal needs. And if we know these things, then we can determine what we would like to gain out of a relationship with someone else. What we all want is a relationship in which we can feel safe to be ourselves, a place that is free from fear, a place where we feel fully accepted for who we are.

But this big need for acceptance and love can be broken down into different components. Sometimes we seek relationships because we want someone to listen to us, or to provide emotional nurture and support for us, or to give us feedback about the way we cross to them or to provide a lot of approval or to challenge us when we don't live up to our potential or simply to be playful and do things with us. A relationship can meet one or any combination of these needs, but it is important to determine what it is that we do need in order that we can cultivate any given relationship in ways that are appropriate to us and to the need combination of the other person.

Many have a difficult time because they expect too much out of a relationship. Not even marriage can bear the burden of meeting all these needs all the time. In our college years, we have a chance to increase our self-awareness, identify our needs and take some initiative in reaching out to new people whom we meet and to whom we are attracted. But, again, the place to start is with yourself.

TANNING SALONS OFFER TAN BEFORE SPRING BREAK

Woody Guthrie

February 23 is right around the corner and students have started to think of spring break. Many will migrate South to the warmer shores of Florida. For these sun worshippers there is a way to look like a beach bum when you get there. Tanning salons have popped up in the area over the last five years advertising the year around tan. Many, however, may have misconceptions because of newspaper articles telling of the evils of exposing your skin to the rays of sun lamps.

Concerning newspaper articles, salons also seem to be apprehensive about any type of publicity. As one local tanning salon was approached for an interview the person on duty immediately was on the offensive asking why they were being picked on. She went on to say that everytime things settled down from an article someone else came trying to glamorize themselves by telling how bad tanning salons are.

One misconception is not knowing about the ultraviolet rays. There are three kinds of rays. Ultraviolet Alpha (UVA) rays is the light emitted by the sun that results in tanning without the dangers of sunburn; the tanning beds artificially duplicate an adequate amount of UVA light to stimulate the melanin in the skin. Once stimulated the UVA lamps act upon the melanin in the skin to produce a cosmetic tan. Tanning is the body's self defense mechanism against over exposure to natural sunlight.

The bad press associated with the salons is the percentage of UVB rays, the burning rays. UVC rays are the shortest wavelength of the ultraviolet spectrum and doesn't reach the earth's surface because of absorption in the ozone layer.

Most of the controversy surrounds the stand-up booths that had more of the UVB rays. One article in the Wilmington Star News told of two salons in Charlotte that took out their booths. The booths had a 15% UVB percentage. However, a survey of two salons in this area revealed their tanning beds with only a 2.8% of UVB and the other a .5% UVB, both very safe levels which is necessary to stimulate the melanin and allow UVB rays to tan. The standards set by the Food and Drug Administration which monitor the manufacture of the tanning beds allows 3% UVB rays. Greg Bradshaw, of Forever Tan, in an editorial to the Wilmington Star News in a reply to the Charlotte article said "Some people seem to be afraid of tanning beds because of the misleading articles regarding tanning and the bad reputation tanning booths cause." The beds used now are totally different from the booths. The new beds are wide enough to move around in comfort, cooler than older models and some are equipped with F.M. Stereo. The newest bed now on the market has a self-reflecting RUVA Bulb where the shield is contained inside the bulb allowing for 40% additional rays. Bradshaw explained that because it tans quicker, it is only used after several visits on a regular bed, with the reflective shields under the bulbs.

What should students do when they decide to go to a salon? "They should read and compare what the different salons have to offer and get all the facts," says Bradshaw. Some salons offer free visits and should give you a tour explaining about the beds. There should be trained personnel to guide you as to time in the beds. Different beds have varied amounts of time for first visits. Amelia Millis, manager of Endless Summer Tanning Salon, stated that everyone tans at a different rate and the initial visits are short. She recommends visits of 10 minutes through the first few visits, then work up to 20 minutes by the end of a 10 session period, the average it takes most people to tan under the Sun Tanning System. The beds at Forever Tan allows for 10-20 minutes for first timers, depending on hair and eye color, skin tone and a list of 13 questions that are answered about yourself.

The tanning business is also getting respect from the medical profession. The American Medical Association has released a report stating that UVA tanning under the beds is safer than sunlight. Fitness Industry Magazine in an article stated that "If you are going to tan, you should check out the tanning beds. There are cautions that should be taken. Certain drugs may cause adverse effects, and although there is no clinical evidence regarding exposure on pregnant mother, they shouldn't use the beds. Dry skin may also occur but use of oils and lotions (with no sunscreen) before, during or after will help. All these safeguards, however, involve regular outdoor sunlight as well as tanning beds. You must also wear goggles while tanning in the beds."

As the public continues to hear about tanning salons, which have been in use in Europe for 15 years, the salons, especially new

LOTTERY

This year the housing lottery was much like the New York State lottery. Over 1200 upperclassmen signed up this year. Upon signing up everyone received a lottery number, and of course if your number was selected you were a winner.

In the past everyone filled out forms and these forms were placed in a ballot box. Then a senior male and female would pick out the forms with a secretary there to write down the names. This whole process would take 3 to 4 days after getting letters out and

BIKE THEFT
A PROBLEM

Kim Tatum

Bike theft is a growing problem on the UNCW campus. Nine cases have already been reported in 1986 and that figure is expected to double many times before the year is out. A casual stroll around campus explains why. Unlocked bikes, improperly locked bikes, and bikes chained in restricted areas are a major part of the problem.

It should be obvious that an unlocked bike takes only a minute to steal. Cyclists who improperly lock their bikes by chaining only the wheel may return to find exactly what they chained- a wheel. Bike racks are provided for a purpose, so don't chain your bike to a post or street sign because they can be broken.

Some cases are not that simple. Often the responsible cyclist follows all the rules and returns to find- nothing. In cases like this the best thing to do is report the theft immediately to Campus Police, check all similar bikes on campus, and pay frequent visits to the local pawn shops.

In order for Campus Police to help, you should register your bike with the department. (No Charge) Upon registration you will receive a decal with a bike identification number. This will insure the return of your bike if stolen and recovered.

Bike theft cannot always be avoided, but the following precautions offered by Campus Police can discourage theft. Never leave your bike unattended or unattended.

-Always chain both the rear wheel and the frame to a legal stationary object

-Use a case hardened chain at least 3/8" thick and a sturdy padlock

-If leaving campus for an extended period of time put your bike inside.

-Report theft immediately

CAMPUS REPUBLICAN

Some self proclaimed campus experts on communist Nicaragua have been lauding the civil rights record of the Sandinistas. Sources being used include the ultra liberal Amnesty International. Let's take a real look at Nicaragua's human rights and freedom record.

* Approximately 400,000 people have fled Nicaragua since 1979 out of a total population of less than 3,000,000. For the period from July 19, 1979 to December 12, 1982, the Nicaraguan Commission of Jurists documented 8,655 executions, including 14 pregnant women.

* Since 1979, 20 radio news programs have stopped broadcasting. Only one radio news program is not FSLN run, but even it is heavily censored.

* In 1982, the government claimed "right to detain and jail persons indefinitely without having proved that they committed a crime. The right to habeas corpus is suspended. Under this decree, strikes continue to be banned, no collective contracts may be signed, and no trade union demonstrations or public meetings are allowed." Free Trade Union News, March 1984.

* "On December 28, 1984, Sandinista forces sealed off the town of Nagarote (25 miles northeast of Managua) before dawn. They then entered houses, detaining any young man who appeared to be between 17 and 23 years old. The soldiers carried billy clubs and sticks and parents who attempted to impede them were beaten." The Washington Post, 1/18/85.

* "There is no question that the Sandinistas have very nearly completed a transition to a police state in Nicaragua. They have installed in each city residential block an informer whose official responsibility is to report to the government whenever there are meetings of as many as four or five people gathering in any home-remains of Hitler's Nazi Germany." House Majority Leader Jim Wright, October 20, 1983.

* "Of the 256 Miskito Indian communities existing in 1979, 139 have been burned by the Sandinistas, including 73 churches.

* "... the Sandinistas treatment of the Indians continues to be unconscionable. One third to one half of the 90,000 Indians on the coast have been displaced. Some 20,000 have fled to Honduras to escape the Sandinistas' scorched earth policy--the razing of villages along the Rio Coco--and 10,000 are confined in resettlement camps in the central coast area. Most disturbing of all, 3,000 to 5,000 have lived for two years in intolerable conditions in forced labor camps--which resemble concentration camps--in the mountainous Matagalpa-Jinotega area, where they pick coffee beans for the state." Senator Edward Kennedy, November 1984.

These human rights violations demonstrate the barbaric ways of the Sandinistas. We must support the Contra Rebels in their fight for freedom under this repressive government. The world is watching.

"If you fail in Nicaragua, we must ask, where will you fail next? If freedom and democracy are not worth defending in your own hemisphere, where are they worth defending? The free world awaits your answer. Its enemies are waiting too." Winston Churchill II, Member of Parliament.

Write your Congressmen and Senators today demanding them to support the aid package to the Freedom Fighters of Nicaragua. Write House members at: House Office Building, Washington, D.C. 20510. The address for all Senators is: Senate Office Building, Washington, D.C. 20510.

advanced "degrees" in urban terrorism in both Cuba and Moscow. Are these the friends you will remember Ms. Chabaku?

These people and their comrades are responsible for launching a raid in South Africa such as the June 11, 1985 attack with Russian M-1 hand grenades which seriously wounded a newly appointed Colored member of President P. W. Botha's Cabinet Mr. Lawellon Londa and another Colored member of Parliament. Recent intelligence reports have indicated that the ANC has suicide squads briefed to assassinate non-white political leaders who participate in the new constitutional reforms of the government. Any leader who wishes to change the system from within will have to deal with these terrorist strikes.

No Ms. Chabaku you did not find some gullible student or woolly headed knee jerk liberal to back your cause; if you want change then do it as the Christian you claim to be--do it non-violently and leave train and Uncle Sam out of it.

Steven R Bowen

IT WAS THE NIGHT OF MARDI GRAS, WHEN ALL THROUGH THE UNION, NOT A CREATURE WAS STIRRING, NOT EVEN A MOUSE THE DECORATIONS WERE HUNG FROM THE CEILING WITH CARE, IN HOPES THAT THE STUDENTS WOULD SOON BE THERE;

Last Friday night, the seventh of February, the Museum of World Cultures hosted a party for the campus community. Even though there was good advance publicity, the turn out was low. Now I have been a student here, at UNCW for several years, and served in various leadership positions around the campus. And I have always heard complaints about the lack of activities held on the weekends, for us students to participate in. But this year there have been efforts made to correct this problem, activities such as Frantic Friday, Homecoming, and Mardi Gras.

These activities all have a common tie, low student turn out. Why? I am curious, and would sincerely like you the students here, to inform the Greeks, the club and organizational presidents, the SGA, and other student leaders as to what you want. Or if you are too busy to inform the leaders what you want, then have either the decency to attend campus activities or stop complaining about the lack of fun things to do around here.

CHABAKU INSPIRING

Last week something exciting happened, as a result of the visit by Motlaepula Chabaka to our campus. A call for student action was given. After all the student activism in the 60's and 70's, the 80's have become a time of social rest instead of social unrest. But signs of life may be appearing from the student body, once again. During the last day of Motlaepula Chabaka's speaking tour of UNCW, a call for a petition was made. It was the goal of the students and faculty there to organize a petition to prevent UNCW from investing money with companies in South Africa. I am not going to say that everyone needs to sign the petition, because this issue has many sides to it, but I think after you have found something that you can do, do it. Because this world is the only known home for man, and it's not big enough to hold us and all of our hatreds.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

SPEAKER CONTRADICTS SELF

Shades of the Sixties! Just when you thought it was safe to go to college one sided liberal rhetoric returns.

I am referring to the so called Anti-Apartheid Rally on Feb. 4 in the Union Courtyard. For those of you who did not attend, approx. 99.9% of campus, Ms. Motlaepula Chabaka a native of South Africa came to espout her views on the racial segregation there. Ms. Chabaku who belongs to the Black Women's Federation of South Africa, which is outlawed the African National Congress, which is also outlawed and the National Council of African Women came to our campus hoping to stir up Anti-Apartheid sentiment. From the turn out she was not very successful.

Ms. Chabaku was speaking out against the Apartheid system of racial discrimination. I found her speech to be one sided and highly contradictory. In one breath she preached the Gospel of Jesus and in the next the usual prattle of the Quasi-revolutionary.

Now I deplore the racial policies in South Africa and want them to change; however revolution rioting and terrorism are not the means of change. Reforms can be brought about peaceably as Dr. Martin Luther King did here in America. It might take time but Ms. Chabaku said that her people would be willing to suffer longer.

In her speech Ms. Chabaku also stressed the need for Americans to take any money invested in companies in South Africa, or American businesses that deal with South Africa and invest elsewhere. This is ludicrous. With the world boycotting South African gold the mines have laid off 30 thousand black miners. These men came to the mines and worked because there are few or no opportunities elsewhere. Now with no job in the mines they have no means of supporting themselves or their families. Who is hurt more?

Also Ms. Chabaku stated that we should not send guns to South Africa. The U.S. placed an arms embargo against South Africa since 1975. They produce all their weaponry themselves. The ANC however has no problem in accepting AK-47's and M-16's grenades from their friends in the Soviet Union. Ms. Chabaku stated that "when we take power we will remember who our friends were when we were struggling." Robert Magabe remembers his friends too. He is the current president of a repressive Marxist regime in Zimbabwe-- formerly Rhodesia where the economy is failing and the white citizens are now the oppressed.

"If Indians can rule India, if Germans can rule Germany, if Italians can rule Italy why can't Africans rule Africa," was another inflammatory statement made by Ms. Chabaku. The white minority holds allegiance to no other country and they are as African as she is.

The Dutch came to South Africa over 350 years ago as part of a Dutch trading and supply colony. Where would you propose to put these people Ms. Chabaku? Will they become the new oppressed under your rule? You stress Christianity but the majority of South Africa is not Christian.

The issue of people of mixed race was not brought up. The current government places these people above the blacks, but below the whites. They are in a sort of limbo. Where will you place them Ms. Chabaku? Are they not as African as you?

As for her claim that the government are terrorists, that again is another piece of rhetoric that I can not swallow. In 1975 members of the ANC's military wing-- Umkhonto We Sizwe (Spear of the Nation) set off a bomb in Johannesburg's Carleton Center when it was packed full of Christmas shoppers killing and injuring dozens. The man held responsible George Phale of the ANC hides across the border in Botswana with his fellow comrades.

One of Mr. Phale's comrades in arms is a Mr. Joe Slovo an exiled former Johannesburg lawyer who is the number two man in the ANC's military wing and has been identified as holding the rank of Colonel in the Russian KGB. Along with Mr. Slovo and Mr. Phale are Ms. Sadi Pale and Ms. Lacy Mashile who run a safe house in the Tiokwens suburb of Gabarone Botswana. Ms. Pale and Ms. Mashile have received

How many of you find that making friendships or seeking relationships with someone of the opposite sex is a source of worry and anxiety? Well, you should. Uncomfortableness, attentiveness, and insecurity are fitting for people who fall into the category of early young adulthood or the category of being in some kind of transition (e.g. such as that brought on by a divorce). Now, isn't it comforting to know that? Not much, I imagine.

But do try to keep in perspective the fact that much anxiety you may be experiencing in relationships is a normal part of our human condition, particularly at certain stages of our life. People seem to founder in their felt inability to build good relationships and convince themselves that they're either unlovable or unable to relate effectively. LOTTERY
EFFICIENT

This year the housing lottery was much like the New York State lottery. Over 1200 upperclassmen signed up this year. Upon signing up everyone received a lottery number, and of course if your number was selected you were a winner.

In the past everyone filled out forms and these forms were placed in a ballot box. Then a senior male and female would pick out the forms with a secretary there to write down the names. This whole process would take 3 to 4 days after getting letters out and

A PROBLEM

Kim Tatum

Bike theft is a growing problem on the UNCW campus. Nine cases have already been reported in 1986 and that figure is expected to double many times before the year is out. A casual stroll around campus explains why. Unlocked bikes, improperly locked bikes, and bikes chained in restricted areas are a major part of the problem.

It should be obvious that an unlocked bike takes only a minute to steal. Cyclists who improperly lock their bikes by chaining only the wheel may return to find exactly what they chained—a wheel. Bike racks are provided for a purpose, so don't chain your bike to a post or street sign because they can be broken.

Some cases are not that simple. Often the responsible cyclist follows all the rules and returns to find nothing. In cases like this the best thing to do is report the theft immediately to Campus Police, check all similar bikes on campus, and pay frequent visits to the local pawn shops.

In order for Campus Police to help, you should register your bike with the department. (No Charge) Upon registration you will receive a decal with a bike identification number. This will insure the return of your bike if stolen and recovered.

Bike theft cannot always be avoided, but the following precautions offered by Campus Police can discourage theft.

- Never leave your bike unchained or unattended
- Always chain both the rear wheel and the frame to a legal stationary object
- Use a case hardened chain at least 3/8" thick and a sturdy padlock
- If leaving campus for an extended period of time put your bike inside.
- Report theft immediately

GERDES HAPPY IN FIRST YEAR AT UNCW

Matt Shanklin

Cathy Gerdes, in her first year as assistant women's basketball coach, says she is enjoying it here at UNCW.

Gerdes joined Head Coach Marilyn Christoph's staff after serving as a graduate assistant at the University of Iowa for the past two seasons. While at Iowa, she helped turn the Lady Hawkeyes from last place to a 20-8 record and a second place finish in the Big Ten Conference last year.

Gerdes also worked for the athletic promotions office at Iowa, which was responsible for setting a NCAA women's basketball attendance record when more than 23,000 fans attended the Ohio State-Iowa game last season.

Gerdes graduated from the University of Oklahoma in 1983 after playing for the Sooners women's basketball squad for 4 years. She received her masters degree in athletic administration and coaching while at Iowa last spring.

MS: Why did you decide to come to UNCW?

Gerdes: I was looking for a program that was starting at the ground level in division I to give me a chance to grow gradually. I was also looking for a place with warm weather and a mid sized school. UNCW had all these factors together and seemed like the perfect place.

MS: Has UNCW been what you thought it would be?

Gerdes: Even more so. I was excited about getting new responsibilities, but I've been given even more than I ever thought I would and I really enjoy that. Coach Christoph has been very flexible and the people here have been fantastic.

MS: Has your first season been what you expected?

Gerdes: I came here with no expectations. If we would have won our first 12 games, it would not have surprised me. I knew Coach Christoph had a winning tradition, it is just a matter of time.

MS: What do you think of the program and the direction it is going in?

Gerdes: I think it is very positive. There have been many signs of progression. It's been slow, but that is good. You don't want to move all at one time. It will take a good 2 or 3 years to develop a really good program.

MS: What kind of plans do you have for the future?

Gerdes: I would like to be at the assistant level of division I for about 4 or 5 years so I get to know the ins and outs of the job. Later I would like to apply for a head coaching job. Further down the line, I would like to get into athletic administration as part of a large athletic program. That is my ultimate goal.

(This is part one of a two part series. Next week, men's assistant, Lee Hood.)

CURTAIN CALLS

"BLACKBEARD AUDITIONS"

Jefferson Weaver

The sleepy coastal city of Atlantic Beach will once again hear the cry of Blackbeard and his Pirates, much as he was heard more than two hundred years ago.

This time, however residents need not fear pillaging and looting. Indeed, you won't even see the cutthroat outside of the theatre.

General auditions for the historical drama Blackbeard's Revenge will be held Saturday, Feb. 22 at (Where else?) Blackbeard's Galley Restaurant from 1 to 5 p.m. Prospective actors and actresses should bring a resume and 1 or 2 prepared pieces for auditioning.

Call backs will be announced. Other auditions will be held in Chapel Hill with the Outdoor Theatre association and at the Southeastern Theatre Conference in Charlotte during the month of March.

Rehearsals begin in May with the show going up on June 16.

The production will run through Labor Day at the Crystal Coast Amphitheatre on White Oak Island.

Director David Hardison says he needs "Experienced talent as well as new and student talent." Those auditioning should be dedicated and committed to drama for the whole season.

The Colonial Athletic Association swimming and diving championships were held at UNCW's natatorium last week. Watch for results in the next issue of the Seahawk.

GREEK COLUMNS

Sally Wedgeworth

Local fraternity Sigma Delta Psi became a colony to Delta Sigma Phi national fraternity in a ceremony held on February 1. They are in the process of being chartered and a national representative of the fraternity, Bill Hooker, is down to help them achieve this goal. Their membership is growing rapidly and their rush is still going on.

Delta Tau Delta fraternity celebrated their local tradition of Dash-in-the-Suds on February 1. Panhellenic Council would like to congratulate Jay Harris, a Delta, for becoming Homecoming King 1986. The fraternity initiated 5 new brothers on January 31 and has 18 pledges this semester. They are also sponsoring Delt Night at Gators on Thursday nights. Elections were held last semester and Carl Crabtree is president, Tony Young is vice president, Larry Neal is treasurer and Skip Shultz and Jimmy Stella are secretaries.

Delta Zeta sorority initiated 16 new sisters on February 8 and will pledge in 5 new girls on February 17 which will bring DZ to a membership of 50. They will be raffling off a Cruiser bicycle from Two Wheeler Dealer for the next few weeks. The sorority just recently held elections and Kelly Hill is president, Beck Griffin is vice president of membership, Kathy Harris is vice president for pledge education, Melody Morton is treasurer, Missy Kenyon is corresponding secretary and Amy Ford is recording secretary.

Kappa Sigma fraternity initiated 6 new brothers last semester and have 10 pledges this spring. They are sponsoring Kappa Sig Night at Sgudio's on Wednesday nights. The results of their elections are as follows: Stuart Sioussat is president, Cliff Field is vice president, Scott Suggs is ritualist, Bill Rhodes is secretary and Michael Jones is treasurer.

Chi Phi fraternity initiated 14 new brothers last semester which brings them to a brotherhood of 44 and 13 pledges. The fraternity has been actively raising money for various philanthropies. Last semester they had a pole sit for Muscular Dystrophy and raised money for UNICEF. The Chi Phis have also recently built a new lodge room in their attic.

Congratulations to all the new initiates, pledges and officers of the various Greek organizations. Congratulations Delta Sigma Pi.

Next week: Alpha Delta Pi, Alpha Lambda Omega, Beta Chi Omega, Pi Kappa Phi, and Sigma Alpha Epsilon.

INTRAMURAL REPORT

The women's intramural basketball is made up of four teams this year. Macs Magic (4-0), Angelic Force (2-2), Crutchfield (2-3), and Ladies of PEK (0-4).

Welcome to the Middle Ages

Picture if you will a green field encircled by colorful pavilions, pennants flying in the breeze. Lords and ladies in medieval garb stroll about, engaged in pleasant conversation. A minstrel strums on his lute, softly singing a love song. On the field, armored knights strive with sword and shield for their king's highest honor. In the royal pavilion the King and Queen confer with their ministers. During a lull in the fighting a green-cloaked herald steps forth and announces a Royal Court. The people in all their finery begin to gather around the throne....

A scene from a medieval romance? In this case, no. This is the Society for Creative Anachronism, a non-profit educational organization dedicated to the re-creation of the Middle Ages, as they were and as they might have been.

Members of the SCA strive to recapture the ambience of the Middle Ages. This requires historical research into such topics as dress, weaponry, armor, jewelry, food, etc. But more than just doing research, the members attempt to practice what they have learned, by actually constructing medieval arts and crafts, learning to fight with sword and shield, and so on. Areas of interest are as varied as the medieval culture: heraldry, manuscript illumination, archery, weaponry, armor making, jewelry, lace making and other needlecraft arts, dance and music, poetry, cooking, brewing, costuming, equestrian arts, and much more. In addition to the historical aspect of research and recreation, the SCA also attempts to embody those lost ideals that are found in the medieval romances: chivalry, courtesy, honor, graciousness. This is re-creating the Middle Ages as they might have been, adding a note of consideration for others in an often too-indifferent world.

The Society is organized into eleven kingdoms covering the United States, Canada, Australia and U.S. Airforce bases in Europe. Each Kingdom is further subdivided into Principalities, Baronies, Provinces, Shires, Cantons, etc. Kingdoms are governed by Kings, selected by armed combat at regularly scheduled tournaments. The victor crowns the lady of his choice Queen of Love and Beauty. Similarly, Principalities are ruled by Princes who are elected by combat and who crown their princesses. Other groups are run by appointed officers. The responsibilities of administration do not rest solely on the shoulders of the monarch, as there is a well organized civil service to take care of much of the tedium of running a kingdom. Various officers encourage the practice and research of medieval arts and sciences. Chroniclers publish the newsletters, the Office of the Registry processes membership applications and maintains the mailing list, and scores of other devoted people help keep the whole organization running.

The most typical SCA event is the tournament described above. Everyone comes in medieval costume, from the simplest peasant tunic to the most elaborate court dress. For the first-time visitor who may not have a costume, the Golden Key pavilion offers information and loan of appropriate clothing. Authenticity is encouraged in as many areas as possible: pavilions, food, utensils, furniture, clothing, weapons, etc. Part of the process is selecting a persona, the creation of a personal character from a specific historical time and place. This is not an actual historical figure, nor one adopted from myth of literature. If you have always wanted to be a 6th century Celt or a 12th century Viking, make up an identity from that period, research the culture of the time and place, and come as a character from that historical period. When several persons have an interest in the same culture they often band together as a household.

The most visible activity at a tournament is the fighting. Participants study and practice the medieval martial arts, making their own armor and (simulated) weaponry. Besides the combat for the election of the King or Prince, there are also many prize- and champions-tournaments, challenge matches, melees, and other competitions to test skill at arms. Knighthood is an honor bestowed by the King and the council of knights upon those who have demonstrated excellence on the field of combat and who also embody the highest ideals of the chivalric tradition. They are entitled to wear traditional symbols: white belt, chain and spurs.

For those whose main interest lies in areas other than fighting, a tournament also has dancing, music, archery, competitions in baking, brewing, needlework, and many other activities to test the skill of the participant or to while away a pleasant afternoon. For achievement in the Arts and Sciences a person may be admitted to the Order of the Laurel in recognition of these contributions to the Society. Those persons who have enriched the Society by their service might be made members of the Order of the Pelican.

Although the tournament is the most typical activity, it is by no means the only kind of event that the Society sponsors. There are numerous revels, the medieval equivalent of a modern party. The most elaborate revel of the year is the Twelfth Night celebration where members wear their most elegant costumes and spend the evening in dancing and merriment. Banquets are held which copy the medieval high feasts with authentic recipes and entertainment. There are various crafts guilds which hold meetings for those interested in specific arts. The Society also holds public demonstrations of fighting, dancing, etc., by request. Occasional seminars are held on topics of interest to members and other students of medieval history.

Each Kingdom publishes its own monthly newsletter with news and events. The Society also has a quarterly journal, Tournaments Illuminated, which contains research articles, poetry, artwork, and other contributions by members. It is sent to all subscribing members.

For further information about the Society for Creative Anachronism, contact your local group or Danielle Woods PO Box 22004 Wilmington N.C. 28405, 675-9007.

WELL NOTES

Have you noticed that it is easier to take care of yourself in some settings than in others? Can you think of times when you had not intended to do one thing or another but, to go along with the group, found yourself joining in? Chances are good that this happens every day. All of us belong to a variety of cultures, which are simply groups of people who come together, deliberately or otherwise, and in doing so influence each other's ideas and behaviors. Social scientists call these influences "norms." Norms are standards and expectations, and there are so many norms in your life that you are probably not even consciously aware of but a small number of them. Norms affect how you dress, talk, eat, work, exercise and so on. They influence what you like or dislike.

In pursuing a wellness lifestyle, it makes good sense to think about the norms in cultures of which you are a part. It is extremely difficult for one who is not addicted to a wellness lifestyle to initiate meaningful habit changes and to continue a health enriching pattern of living without awareness of negative behavior that surround them. This is why it is always easier to start a healthy behavior than to follow through with it and make it a valued part of your life. You may have many good intentions, but the influences of the culture that get in the way often seem overwhelming. You then blame yourself for lack of will power, discipline, and self responsibility, but in a subtle way you have been overpowered by the nonsupportive environment in which you are living.

Think about the messages & expectations of your own surroundings in an apartment complex, the residence hall or wherever you call home. Is it "normal", for example, to expect:

- *to wake up tired, sore, burned out?
- *to eat high fat, low energy foods all day?
- *to have alcohol daily?
- *to have smoke in the air you breathe?
- *to accept more responsibility than you can manage?
- *to spend hours smoking, drinking, and watching television?
- *to come home tired, frustrated and uninterested in anything?

*to go to bed without some period of reflection and/or celebration? (Dr. Donald Ardell; 14 days to a Wellness Lifestyle, 1982)

Our cultures are loaded with norms that complicate healthful lifestyles, and these customs cannot be taken lightly. The first step is to be aware that norms are changeable! Stay tuned next week for a course of action to assist you in changing what is "normal" in your lifestyle.

SOAP OPERA REVIEW

Lisa is being stalked on SFT

By Nancy Johnson

ALL MY CHILDREN: Tom saved Brooke from Spiros, who was holding her at gunpoint. Robin warned Tad that her brother, Wade McCall, suddenly arrived in Pine Valley.

ANOTHER WORLD: Zane and Felicia's wedding plans nearly turned into a disaster. Mac and Rachel recovered from the mysterious virus. Chris' medical license was suspended.

AS THE WORLD TURNS: Doug, who murdered Dr. Strauss and Marie, kidnapped Frannie and Kim, and took them to his secluded house. Sierra married her former fiancé, Tom Reyes.

CAPITOL: Zed admitted to Jenny that someone had attempted to strangle her and left her for dead on their wedding night. Myrna tried to force Leanne to move out of Jordy's pad.

DAYS OF OUR LIVES: Hope went to Stockholm in hope of finding proof to clear Bo of espionage charges. Bo was furious to learn that Hope is traveling with Patch.

GENERAL HOSPITAL: Jake and Bobbi romped in the sack. Anna looked for clues to the person who killed Earl and Neil. After sleeping with Sean, Monica tried to avoid him.

GUIDING LIGHT: Beth told Jackson that she's not interested in him romantically because Lujack was her one true love. Reva can't forget Kyle.

LOVING: Lorna and Link started meeting secretly after she learned that Zane isn't really pregnant. Doug and Shana spent time together. Dolly can't escape her past.

ONE LIFE TO LIVE: Lisa and Bob were nearly killed by a gas leak. Tracy had hoped would kill Cassie. Tracy killed psychiatrist Dr. Polk.

who believed she killed Ramona.

RYAN'S HOPE: Dakota was livid to learn that Frank hired someone to bring up the stolen treasure. Maggie agreed to help Dakota try to make Jill jealous.

SANTA BARBARA: Kirk discovered the unmailed love letters Eden has been writing to Cruz. Cruz saved Pearl, who was nearly shot by a hitman's bullet.

SEARCH FOR TOMORROW: Rivera vowed to get revenge against Hogan for the death of Rivera's son. Lisa is being stalked. Quinn was charged with Stephanie's murder.

THE YOUNG AND THE RESTLESS: Lauren underwent medical tests after experiencing more dizziness and nausea. Danny made the decision to have surgery on his throat.

Miss Manners

DEAR MISS MANNERS: I would like to have a small cocktail party for about 16 people from my immediate neighborhood-casual friends-from about 5 to 7 p.m. How would you suggest I word the invitation to indicate that those are the hours only-no staying over, as some people like to do, and hanging around drinking for hours. In other words, what would be a good wording to let people know the party is over at 7 p.m.?

GENTLE READER: "Cocktails, 4 to 6 p.m."

DEAR MISS MANNERS: What is your opinion of the practice of asking for a container to take home from a restaurant the remainder of the prime rib or the fettuccini or the immense baked potato? It bothers my husband and me to leave good food to be thrown away, yet we do not want to appear gauche by asking for a doggie bag.

GENTLE READER: The custom of taking home extra food is an ancient one-Roman hosts distributed the remains of dinner parties to partying guests-although today it is applied only to commercial establishments and not to people's homes.

The term "doggie bag" has become a well-understood euphemism. If it is too cute for you, you may simply say, with dignity, "Would you mind wrapping this? We'd like to enjoy it later."

DEAR MISS MANNERS: What is the proper way to deal with a boyfriend who does not understand about engagements and weddings? He believes that:

1. A June wedding can be planned in two or three months.

2. A couple (us) are not engaged until they actually have a wedding date. It does not matter that each has decided to marry the other.

3. It is quite proper to begin preparing wedding plans for this June wedding without an official proposal.

How do I get him to understand the need to make an official proposal to me, since he obviously made up his mind? We are both 25 years old-he is a senior in medical school, and I got B.S. in nursing two years ago and we have been dating one year.

GENTLE READER: Miss Manners is sorry to tell you that it is no more obvious to her than it is to the gentlemen in question that you are engaged. A couple who have been together for nine years, with no marriage proposal and no wedding date, have no business wasting the time of caterers.

If you wish to be engaged and you believe that the gentlemen does also, you must make it clear to him that the alternative is not being engaged. If you were to inquire whether you were free to make your own separate plans for June, for example, you might find out whether he had a better suggestion.

Planning a wedding? If you need Miss Manners' advice on whom to invite, what to wear, who pays for what, etc., send two dollars for her "Weddings for Beginners" pamphlet to: Miss Manners, in care of this newspaper, P.O. Box 2385, Cincinnati, OH 45201.

Feeling incorrect? Address your etiquette questions (in black or blue-black ink on white writing paper) to Miss Manners, in care of this newspaper. The quill shortage prevents Miss Manners from answering questions other than through this column.

SEMESTER IN SPAIN

Not just for Spanish majors only, but for everyone: beginners, "in between" students, and advanced. Put some excitement into your college career!

BEGINNER OR ADVANCED: Cost about the same as a semester in a U.S. college $3,670. Price includes jet round trip to Seville from New York, room, board, and tuition complete. Government grants and loans may be applied towards our programs.

Live with a Spanish family, attend classes four hours a day, four days a week, four months. Earn 16 hrs of credit (equivalent to 4 semesters taught in U.S. colleges over a two year time span). Your Spanish studies will be enhanced by opportunities not available in a U.S. classroom. Standardized tests show our students' language skills superior to students completing two year programs in U.S. Advanced courses also.

Hurry, it takes a lot of time to make all arrangements.

AREA CLUBS AWAIT STUDENTS

Douglas Hargett

Are you one of the hundreds of UNC-W students who goes to the same places week after week? You stand in line for an hour, pay a cover charge only to sweat and fight the crowds inside. You think to yourself "am I destined to have people spilling drinks, elbowing and stepping on my feet for the rest of my college days?"

There are a lot of clubs in Wilmington, old and new, that provide an alternative to the crowded-club blues. Places with deals designed just to attract college students. For the next three weeks I will have articles about some of these places trying to give you some idea of what they're like and what kind of prices and deals they offer.

Michael's Philly deli is located in Hanover Center on Oleander Blvd. It is the ideal place to go with some friends and watch ACC Basketball. They have a wide-screen television that will be on during every ACC game and pitchers are half off. This deal will last all the way through the ACC tournament.

Another place that has been around a while is Bennigan's. They are located on S. College Rd. just north of campus. The managers Dale Albrecht and Larry Long would love to see more young college faces at their bar and restaurant. They stay open til 1 a.m. on the weekend and 12 during the week. They have a big bar and run specials on beer during the week including .99 cent draft. It's a nice place with a fun atmosphere and very good prices.

Paddy's Hollow is the last installment in this issue and probably the most unfamiliar among UNC-W students. Paddy's Hollow is located in the Cotton Exchange and is one of Wilmington's best kept secrets. They have entertainment on the weekends and stay open til 1 a.m. They have a big bar and dart boards. The place has a lot of character. A great place to check out.

These are all just some maybe new places for you to look into if you're getting tired of the same old places. Next week I'll have some new suggestions for you. Everybody has their bar. Maybe one of these will become yours.

LOTTERY

posting winners.

This whole year though it was more the lottery type deal. Everyone's number was placed into a computer which ran a "random number computer program". This idea was derived from the Internal Auditor who runs the same program to select what receipts to check out. Then the program was run and the numbers that came out won. All together they chose 482 people. This got the letters and numbers out sooner, Maragat

Taylor, head of housing, said the new way was basically "more efficient and didn't have any element of personal error" as well as speeding the lottery process up 2 to 3 weeks. This reduces the anxiety level for those that get on the waiting list. So if your on that list they should be getting to you soon. The process now used is a very good one which will take around 3 months to complete their process. By the way Chapel Hill already has their bar and is going to it next year. Ronnie L Brooks

SPLIT.

Split up your training in the Army Reserve into two summers. You can do it if you're a high school junior and 17. Take your Basic Training between your junior and senior years, then your Special Army Skill Training the next summer.

You miss little or no school, and you get a big edge on the future competition for jobs, experience and opportunities.

You also get paid. You earn at least $1,100 for each summer, plus over $1,225 a year for serving one weekend a month, normally, and two weeks annual training.

Before you think about splitting for summer, think about splitting summers, and talk it over with us.

BROGDEN ROCKS

Tamara Drew
Staff writer

Things were definitely cooking at Brogden Hall on Saturday, Feb. 8th, when Columbia Records, recording artists Full Force appeared with music newcomer's Lisa Lisa and Cult Jam to open radio station WWIL's Supertour Concert Series 86.

The well attended concert featured energetic appearances by both groups, who are jointly responsible for the smash '85 hit "I Wonder If I Take You Home." Performed by Lisa Lisa and Cult Jam with Full Force, the song hit #1 on Billboard's dance-disco list.

The concert, which opened with music by Fire Disco, took off a charge when Lisa Lisa and Cult Jam took over the stage. The band performed several songs off of their debut album, including "Can You Feel the Beat" and "All Cried Out."

The show headliner, Full Force, is comprised of six young men who are all related. Brothers "B-Fine" (percussion) Bowlegged Lou (vocals) and Paul Anthony are joined by their cousins Curt Bedeau (guitar), Gerry Charles (keyboard) and Junior "shy-shy" Clark (bass) to form a high-energy multi-talented group.

The group, who have released "Girl, If You Take Me Home" (a response single to "I Wonder") and contributed musical backing for U.T.F.O.'s hit single "Roxanne, Roxanne," have also contributed to the sequel, "The Real Roxanne."

Full Force is loaded with talent. Members of the group have worked as session men and songwriters for Kurtis Blow, opened acts for Luther Vandross, and penned the hit "Sunshine" for British teen singer Warren Mills.

The group has released an album, entitled "Full Force," which features a number of the songs performed at the concert. Most impressive is the moving "The Dream Believer," which is a beautifully melodic tribute to Dr. Martin Luther King and a beautiful song in its own right.

The combination of talent, fun, and family orientation that is obvious in the two groups makes for an interesting concert. The youth of both groups is in direct contrast with the rigor of their schedules, but their determination to make a lasting impact on the music scene appears to be incentive enough to keep on jammin' Full Force.

SPRING BREAK FULL OF EVENTS

by Janet Lamble

It's hard to believe, but another spring break has come and gone. The ways of which we students spent our break are sundry. On one end of the range, there are those burnt out students who spent this past week in a horizontal mode. This includes those who sought to catch up with the latest events on the soap operas, to those who sought to catch up on lost sleep. On the other end of the range, are those students who spent this past week doing anything but laying still. This includes students who were putting some extra hours in at work, to those sightseeing at new and exciting places.

As you can see, the range of student activities is wide, but they can be divided into three major groupings: staying here, going home, and traveling. People who stayed in the area, usually stayed due to some sort of commitment. Having to work was the major commitment students faced. But most of the students questioned had planned on at least a short vacation, ranging from one to three days, to sites around the region. These short trips included visits to ECU, Charlotte, Myrtle Beach, and Morehead City. The other major commitment keeping students in the area, were due to school activities. School activities could have been anything from games to concerts, that certain students were obligated to participate in.

Obligations were also the reasons why students headed home. In some cases students are used as a labor force, helping the family perform some special chore. For others, there was a loved one they were eager to see once again. But for other students, there was no other reason for going home except to take it easy at HOTEL MOM & POP.

Taking it easy, or at least having a good time was the reason some students traveled this year. This, of course, included the traditional travels to Daytona Beach, Fort Lauderdale or the Bahamas. But most of those students who did some traveling did not head in the traditional direction. Some of our travelers headed for England, California, Washington, New York City, and Rio.

Yes, it is over. Spring Break '86 has come and gone. But look out! Summer will be here in only seven weeks.

This beautiful ocean view can serve as a Spring Break reminder for all you party-animal beach enthusiasts who headed for warm weather as soon as you could get your car cranked on Friday.

RADIATION FOUND IN CIGARETTES

Reader's Digest

Cigarette packages already carry several warnings about the health hazards from smoking. If new research proves conclusive there might be need for one more: "Warning: radiation in cigarettes can lead to cancer."

According to the March Reader's Digest, cigarettes contain so much radioactivity that a pack-and-a-half-per-day smoker gets a yearly dose of radiation in parts of his lungs equal to what his skin would be exposed to in about 300 chest X-rays.

Although the experts are not sure of the full extent of the health risks, Dr. Joseph R. DiFranza of the University of Massachusetts Medical Center believes that "radiation alone could account for about half of all lung cancers in smokers."

Scientists have traced radiation in cigarettes to the fields where tobacco is grown. For many decades, farmers have fertilized tobacco crops with phosphates rich in uranium. By decay, this uranium generates radium-226, which in turn spawns radon-222, and eventually lead-210 and polonium-210. Tobacco plants readily absorb radioactive elements from the fertilizer and from naturally occurring sources in the soil, air and water.

Ultimately the radiation is inhaled deep inside a smoker's lungs. As a smoker consumes cigarette after cigarette, insoluble particles incorporating radioactive isotopes may be deposited at the same points in the lungs.

According to Edward A. Martell, a specialist in radiochemistry at the National Center for Atmospheric Research, these points become "hot spots" of radioactivity. Martell believes it is no coincidence that most lung cancers begin at these branch

MOST 'SUPERCOMPUTER SCHOOLS' WILL KEEP SOVIETS AWAY

The Reagan administration wants to restrict the amount of visiting Soviet-bloc scientists can use the big new "supercomputer" centers it is establishing at Cornell, Cal-San Diego, Princeton, Carnegie-Mellon and Illinois.

Now the National Science Foundation, which oversees funding of the centers, says "most" of the schools involved are about to agree "reluctantly" to limit foreigners' access to the huge machines, which will be used for various sophisticated research projects.

The administration wants an outright ban, but schools say they're mostly worried about being held personally responsible for enforcing any kinds of restrictions.

KANSAS SCHOOL PAYS REFS BY THEIR CALLS

Marion College of Kansas now pays basketball refs according to how well they call home games.

After the games, a five-person panel grades the refs' performance. For "poor" calls, the refs get $55 for the night's work. For "good" games, the ref is paid $100.

IOWA COLLEGE RECRUITS BY OFFERING FOUR YEARS OF FREE ROOM AND BOARD

Morningside College last week announced a plan to offer four years of free room and board to certain students, hoping to "expand its regional reputation."

To qualify, students must be from Iowa or the six states on its borders, have combined SAT scores of 1,000 or a minimum ACT score of 24, and graduate in the upper 40 percent of their high school class.

NOTES FROM ALL OVER:

The roach problem in Loyola of New Orleans' dorms has always been as bad as it is this year, says Women's residence Council head Becky Alfonso. The problem is an increase in complaints "from people who aren't used to bugs—people who aren't from Florida or Louisiana." The three editors Baylor fired in 1980 for disagreeing with a school ban on letting student pose nude or semi-nude for Playboy are now running a weekly paper together near Austin, the Associated Press reports.

JESSE REHDER AWARDS PRESENTED

by Nancy Fister

The 1986 Jessie Rehder short story award ceremony was held Monday night in the University Union. Awards were given to the top three short story entries. Steve Traut, a graduate of UNCW, was awarded first place for his short story Breakfast. Gloria Benson, a senior at UNCW, placed second for her short story Verities Day and Nancy Fister, a sophomore at UNCW, was awarded third place for her short story Steel Elbow.

Cash and book prizes were given to the winners and are as follows: first place—$50; Second place—$30 and Literature by Pickering and Hooper; Third place—$20 and Literature For Writing by Steinmann and Willen.

The Creative Writing Program sponsors the Jessie Rehder Short Story Contest as well as the Shannon Morton Poem Contest and the University Essay Contest. All three take place once a year and any student is eligible to submit to these contests. Professor Charles Fort said that most entries are submitted by students who have taken a fiction or poetry class here at UNCW, though it is not required.

Even though Creative Writing classes are not required for entries, most students find them challenging and helpful. There are four creative writing classes offered at UNCW—Intro and advanced Creative Writing Fiction, which is taught by Jerry Seiple, and Intro and Advanced Creative Writing Poetry taught by Charles Fort. Foundations of Creative Writing will be offered in the fall and will cover short stories, poetry, and drama writing.

The English Department is a growing department, says Professor Charles Fort, and is serving all needs in creative and technical writing.

Galloway Hall will be renovated in sections with the first three sections completed for fall.

GALLOWAY TO GET FACELIFT

by Ronnie L. Brooks

GRANVILLE TOWERS AT UNC-W Well not quite. But during the summer our own tower Galloway Hall is getting the major face-lift. This summer work will begin on the 1st thru 3rd floor with some very timely changes: First of all the ceiling will be taken out and new heavy duty ceiling tiles will be put in. Next, combination locks are going to be put on the front and end doors. Secondly the round lights in the rooms will be replaced with the long, tube fluorescent lights to add more light in the rooms. Instead of having a bathtub in each bathroom they will be taken out and 2 showers will be taking it's place. But there will be 1 tub on each floor. Then the sink next to the door will be taken out and placed in a better location. Speaking of doors the bathroom doors will now open up into the hallway giving more room. Then the toilet stalls are going to be taken out with new heavy duty aluminum stalls taking it's place. There will also be 1 trial floor which will have a carpeted hall.

Another of the big changes will take place in the lounges. The front of the lounge will have glass windows so you can see in and add more life to those dull paneled walls. Then a wall will be put up in the back part of the lounge for a study room with tables and study carrels, so you don't bother your roommate with that late night studying with the light on. All together around $200,000 will be spent on renovations this summer. The following summer will have 4th thru 6th floor getting the face-lift.

STUDENT TIRED OF WAITING 30 MINUTES FOR LUNCH

Dear Editor

The complaint of the year has got to be the cafeteria. It's one thing to just try and eat the "food" that's served there. But it's a whole totally different story standing in line for 30 minutes and then waiting on someone else to leave so you can have a table to eat at. With the addition of a new dorm and many off-campus students with meal plans don't you think the administration should reach into their budget pocket and try and find some funds for additional space in the cafeteria, the way they did for the library. With the campus growing at this record pace it's only logical. The administration is even going to ask the N.C. Legislature this summer for 200 more spaces of on-campus housing. But what about more space in the cafe. Have they forgotten those of us that have to eat here. The way I see it, if they would just take 1 month's revenue made from parking tickets they could probably build another cafe. Or are they too busy with the money we dish out every semester renovating their offices.

THE FLAGS ARE REPRESENTATIVE.

Since we often eat at the University Student Union Restaurant we have noticed the flags that hang above as we eat. Noticing that these flags represent various countries around the world we decided to find out more about these flags and what they represent. After talking to the Dean of Student Affairs, we found out that all of the flags were donated and that each flag represents a different country of a student who attends UNC-W. Since we know quite a few students from outside the United States we found these flags rather appropriate in making students aware of the different countries that are represented at UNC-W. So next time you eat at the student union take notice of the flags and honor and respect what they represent.

REAGAN OWES CARTER A THANK YOU.

Dear Editor

The "Campus Republican" article of January 22 is an unbelievable display of conservative-type distortion and misstatement.

When, during the Carter Administration, was there a particular Soviet challenge in Cuba or any "flack" taken from Libya? What is Mr. Gahagan talking about? As for the Iranian hostages, I believe they are all free and well, which is more than can be said for the forgotten Americans who have been rotting three times as long in Lebanon. What exactly has Reagan accomplished in foreign policy, except to tell us repeatedly that we are standing tall. Anything equal to the Camp David agreements or even Salt II? Reagan derides the Salt agreements, yet continues de facto observance because he has no policy at all. And how about the disastrous loss of 241 marines in Lebanon for no purpose whatsoever. Ah, but there was Grenada! Glorious Grenada! A magnificent victory of 7000 marines over a few hundred soldiers in a country the size of New Hanover County. It was a needed mop-up, but hardly another D-Day. Terrorists have attacked Americans over and over-Reagan threatens and blusters and that's the end of it. "You can run but not hide," he declaims, but Abul Abbas is still hiding.

Domestically, Gahagan needs to do his homework. Carter left the country with 7.4% unemployment-it was Reagan who got it up to 10.5%, and there are more unemployed today than when he took office. Even with all those useless "wasteful social programs," Carter cut the deficit in half--then oil prices quadrupled overnight and the whole world went into a spiral of inflation. Reagan has had the good luck to have oil prices come tumbling down--due in part to the conservation and alternative supply measure initiated by Carter.

Nevertheless, instead of balancing the budget as he solemnly promised, he has tripled the deficit.

Republicans harp constantly about NEW JOBS. Fact is, twice as many new jobs were created in 4 years of the the Carter administration as in the first 4 years of Reagan's. Look it up. And had as inflation was, wages kept even. In the past five years, however, while inflation has risen about 20%, the minimum wage has not gone up a nickel. The number of people living at the poverty level is naturally, therefore, at an all-time high. Increased family income where it exists is due primarily to more wives and mothers going to work.

I have only just begun, but so much for now. One thing I will give to Reagan and his Republicans--they have done the greatest P.R. job on the American people since the founding of the Republic. We are indeed a great nation, but it didn't begin with Reagan.

A REAL PROFESSIONAL ON CAMPUS

In the three years I've been at UNCW I've had encounters with secretaries from all over campus. Some of the encounters are not so pleasant. The pervasive attitude among secretaries on campus seems to be "These are the rules, if you don't like them talk to someone else; I'm not interested in helping you find a way around them." I've been in desperate need of information and heard replies like, "That's not my job," and "I'm not allowed to give out that information."

Besides the verbal messages I've received, nonverbally they've said a lot more. I don't like my job; Students are driving me crazy; and I'll do only what's absolutely required of me.

I'm not in any way implying that all secretaries on campus share these views. In fact, my reason for writing is Rosemary Taylor, Secretary for the Communication Department on campus, a professional who definitely doesn't fit this stereotype.

Rosemary has been with the Communications Department since September. She's always cheerful, smiling, and ready to help with whatever is thrown her way. She never replies with "that's not my job" or "I'm not allowed to give out that information," instead she says, "I don't know, but hold on and let me see if I can find out for you" and "I can't give out that information but let me find out who can".

Nonverbally, her glowing face and concerned look says, "I care" and "You're important to me". This concern isn't limited to topics required of secretaries but to anything that's wrong or bothering students. Don't think she'll forget you when you leave, because you won't enter that office many times before she's learned your name.

Rosemary isn't simply a secretary but an integral part of the close family-like atmosphere of professors and students in the Communications Department. She is an asset to UNCW and a role model for secretaries all over campus. Thanks Rosemary, for restoring my faith in secretaries and making the Communications Department a happier place to be. Keep smiling!

ST. GEORGE'S UNIVERSITY SCHOOL OF MEDICINE

GRENADE, WEST INDIES

St. George's University School of Medicine, with more than 975 graduates licensed in 33 states, offers a rigorous, nine-semester program leading to the degree of Doctor of Medicine.

In January 1985, The Journal of the American Medical Association published a report which ranked St. George's number one of all major foreign medical schools in the initial pass rate on the ECFMG Exam.

10 medical schools in the United States have accepted over 630 St. George's students with advanced standing.

St. George's has received probationary approval to conduct clinical clerkships in New Jersey subject to regulations of the State Board of Examiners.

A Loan Program for Entering Students has been instituted for a limited number of qualified applicants.

AID FALLS SHORT OF DEMAND

COLLEGE PRESS SERVICE

The gap between what college students need and what states can provide is widening, researchers report, despite record amounts of state money for higher education.

"We can't find any wholehearted evidence that states are taking up the slack from federal government cuts," says Dr. Jerry Davis, co-author of a report for the National Association of State Scholarships and Grant Programs.

"Our most important finding has been that the growth rate in state funds has not been keeping up with increases in the cost of education," he says.

"And my best prediction is more of the same."

In calling for further cuts in federal student aid last week, U.S. Education Secretary William Bennett noted increasing state aid to colleges would help keep students in college.

But reports on state aid, released just before the federal cuts proposals were announced, contradict the secretary.

Though there were record increases in state funding last year, college operating costs also increased while federal aid waned. And despite projections of continued increases, state funding growth slowed this year, Davis reports.

State governments pledged $1.5 billion for higher education for 1985-86, a record amount that Davis says is misleading.

"Growth isn't expanding across the board," he explains. "Eighty-eight percent of the increase came from only 16 states."

And while the record-setting $1.5 billion represents a seven percent overall increase, operating costs jumped 11 percent last year and 19 percent the year before, says Glen Pryune, a research assistant at the Illinois State University. Department of Education Administration, which tracks higher education costs and appropriations.

"And in the 13 years I've been a researcher, cost increases have never dropped below 11 percent," Pryune adds.

Cost and funding rates vary widely from state to state, both researchers agree.

Only a select group of states seem to be enjoying most of this year's increases, Davis says.

New York, Illinois, California, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Massachusetts, Wisconsin, Ohio and Minnesota have pledged more than $50 million each toward higher education.

The other large contributors will come in North Carolina, Indiana, Florida, Wisconsin, Texas and Iowa each appropriated between $20 million and $50 million.

That leaves $270 million, or 18 percent of the increases, divided among the other 37 states and territories.

Davis also found the number of students receiving aid has failed to increase significantly.

About 1.34 million students received state aid this school year, a small increase from last year, when about 1.32 million received aid.

"If aid growth was keeping up with the need, you'd be seeing more students getting aid," he says. "Our evidence is that state agencies are turning down more and more eligible students."

State legislatures will need new and creative programs if they are to help college students, says Ron Field, director of the National Conference of State Legislatures.

Federal budget proposals spread across his desk, Field says what he's reading only makes his "crystal ball" cloudier.

Once again President Reagan wants to eliminate the State Student Incentive Grant -- which helps states set up their own aid programs -- and consolidate College Work Study and Basic Equal Opportunity Grants.

Congress has resisted such requests in the past, Field says, and may again this year.

"But it looks like higher education is going to take the brunt of the cuts in education in general, and states will have to try to cover those losses," Field says.

Tax reforms, which promises to stop letting people deduct their state taxes from their federal tax liability, also could make it harder for states to make up for federal aid losses by raising state taxes.

"In a worst-case scenario," Field concludes, "new dollars for higher education are not likely -- conceivable, but not likely."

10,000 BICYCLIST TO CROSS USA

STANFORD U. NEWS SERVICE

The Overseas Development Network (ODN) a national student group involved in international development issues, is currently organizing a cross-country bicycle trip this summer to increase awareness of world poverty and raise money for self-help projects overseas and in the United States.

The organizers hope to involve over 10,000 bicyclists in the ride, raising $1 million dollars for self-help projects in Africa, Asia, Latin America, and Appalachia, and for fellowships for students from these areas.

Called Bike-Aid '86, the cross-country trek will begin on June 16 as groups depart from four West coast cities: Seattle, Portland, San Francisco, and Los Angeles/San Diego and from Houston and Tampa on July 12. Participants can ride for either the entire 3,300 miles or for a shorter segment.

All the groups will cross the country, meet with people in local communities along the way, give informational presentations on development, and collect pledges as they go. The groups will meet in Washington, D.C., on Aug. 5, and finish at the United Nations in

New York on August 11th with a closing ceremony hosted by James Grant, director of UNICEF.

Patrons for Bike-Aid '86 include Sens. Bill Bradley and Edward Kennedy, Robert Rodale, publisher of Bicycling and Runner's World magazines; Donald Kennedy, president of Stanford University; Rep. Mickey Leland, chairman of the House Select Committee on Hunger; Stanford alumnus Eric Heiden (bike-racer and five-time Olympic gold medalist in speedskating); Greg Lemond and Rebecca Twigg, America's premier bike racers; and Grant.

Congressman Leland notes that "Bike-Aid" will increase public attention and support for the plight of those who suffer from hunger throughout the world...many lives have been saved. Now the task is to give the survivors the opportunity to live productively."

According to John Shattuck, vice president of Harvard, "The Overseas Development Network is an extraordinary student organization...in an era when student activism is hard to find, ODN is inspiring in its seriousness, effectiveness and sophistication."

ODN is a national consortium of over 40 campus chapters founded in 1983 by Nazir and Kamal Ahmad, two brothers from Bangladesh who saw the potential of national student organization committed to constructive approaches toward ending world poverty.

Nazir is a graduate student in development economics at Stanford University; he is currently writing an action-information handbook on hunger to be published by Harper & Row.

Kamal is a junior at Harvard, is travelling in Africa and Asia looking for volunteer opportunities for American students.

Some 100 volunteers across the country are helping to carry out Bike-Aid '86. Shaun Skelton, a graduate student at Stanford, is national coordinator for the venture. He is an experienced bicyclist and founder of the Stanford Volunteer Network, a community service center.

For more information write to Bike-Aid '86, P. O. Box 2306, Stanford Calif., 94305; or call (415) 497-8559 or 725-2869.

FIRST ROUND

UNCW, AMERICAN AND ECU WIN BIG

by Woody Guthrie

A tear of 11 straight free throws helped the Lady Seahawks overcome a 37-30 halftime deficit to post a 68-54 victory over George Mason in the first round.

This was a game of momentum, commented UNCW Coach Marilyn Christoph after the game. Indeed, both teams had their ups and downs. UNCW controlled the first 10 minutes of the game opening up a 19-11 lead. However, toward the end of the first half, the momentum began to shift as George Mason reeled off four unanswered points at the end of the first half to go into the lockerroom trailing 27-19.

The first eight minutes of the second half was all George Mason. Using a full court press that baffled the Seahawks, George Mason capitalized on Seahawk turnovers and made their first eight field goals of the second half to seize the lead at 37-30.

George Mason extended the lead to 43-34 when a Seahawk steal and a lead pass to Wanda Carroll resulted in a 3 point play, marking the major shift of the contest. Carroll capitalized on two more one and one situations at the line, followed by 4 more free throws by Elizabeth Bell and Sissy Morse to give the Seahawks the lead for good at 45-43 with seven minutes to play.

The Lady Seahawks made 13-14 free throws during this six minute stretch of the second half and outscored George Mason 24-6. The Seahawk's excellence at the line in the second half also resulted in a tournament record for most free throws made in a game. UNCW's 82.4% at the line was well above their season average of 64.1%.

Leading scorers for the Hawks were Bell with 21, Carroll with 15 and Morse with 14. Jeanine Jernimez had 16 for the losers.

The team represented themselves well," said Christoph, adding that she hopes this enthusiasm will carry on to a collision course meeting with top seeded James Madison in the semi-finals, who received a first round bye.

In other first round games, five E.C.U. players scored in double figures including fourteen by Gretta O'Neal as East Carolina eliminated William and Mary 84-56 in the opening game of the tournament. Debbie Taylor had 14 for William and Mary.

Guards Dana Diller and Jody Thornton racked up 12 points apiece to lead American over Richmond in another lopsided game. Laurie Governor and Glenna Miller had 12 for Richmond. American shot perfect from the free throw line and 53% from the field while Richmond shot only 30.9%, which reflected in the wide margin of their loss.

WON RIGHT TO HOST FIRST ROUND

MEN DEVASTATE ECU

by Matt Shanklin

UNCW's men's basketball team split its final two CAA conference games, while East Carolina lost its final two, giving UNCW the right to host a first round tournament game. The top four teams in the conference host first round games, with the winners advancing to George Mason in Fairfax, VA, for the finals.

The "Hawks lost to George Mason 68-62 on Feb. 20 and won at UNCW a 15-12 regular season record and a 6-8 conference mark which tied them with ECU for fourth. Because UNCW won both regular season meetings with ECU, UNCW got the home court advantage for the first round game, scheduled for 2:00 p.m. March 1.

ECU was two games ahead of UNCW with three games to play, but lost to the "Hawks in Greenville 75-67, at George Mason 70-69, and at James Madison 86-73. The Pirates only needed one victory to have clinched fourth place.

The win at James Madison, Head Coach Mel Gibson's 250th career victory, was sparked by Brian Rowsom's 31 points and 10 rebounds and the off the bench play of junior transfer Ben Pittman who scored 6 points and grabbed 5 rebounds in just 13 minutes of playing time. James Madison was led by Eric Brent's 22 points and Eric Esch's 13 rebounds.

Known as a jockey and hyde team, JMU, (4-22, 2-11), played a very good first half and led 36-33 at the intermission. UNCW had built an early 8 point lead in the first half when Charles Cherry connected on a jumper with 10:58 remaining, but failed to maintain it.

The second half was usual JMU basketball with Dukes of Coach John Thurston failing to rebound and taking poor shots. UNCW fought back to take a 51-48 lead with 9:53 remaining in the game. Yet JMU would not quit and took a one-point lead with 1:23 remaining on Eric Brent's jumper from the top of the key.

With :58 seconds senior Bobby Jo Springer drove the lane and scored to give the Seahawks a 58-57 lead. Charles Cherry then hit the one of two free throws with :19 seconds left to give UNCW a two point advantage.

UNCW then turned the ball over with :07 seconds left in their own end and JMU's Eric Esch broke free and hit a shot in the lane with 2 seconds remaining to tie the game and send it into overtime.

The overtime was all Seahawks as they outscored JMU 20-9 led by Rowsom's 6 points in OT. UNCW scored the first 7 points capped by Charles Cherry's 3 point play with 2:15 remaining in the overtime period. Sandy Anderson's 15 ft. jumper from the right side finished the scoring and gave the "Hawks its final margin of 11 points (79-68).

The loss at George Mason was a tough one. Led by Rowsom's 26 points and Springer's 16, the "Hawks squandered an 11 point lead midway in the second half to fall 68-62 in a game televised by Home Team Sports.

UNCW led 30-26 at halftime, and outscored the Patriots of GMU 14-7 to open the second half. This run gave the "Hawks their biggest lead of 44-33 with 13:06 remaining in the game. But George Mason, (15-0, 9-4), fought back and tied the game on Rob Rose's breakaway dunk with 6:52 left in the game (50-50). This was the last field goal that the Patriots would tally as they scored their last 18 points from the free throw line.

The Patriots were an outstanding 30 of 34 from the free throw line and scored on their last 12 possessions of the game to fight back from their 11 point deficit. This George Mason's largest comeback effort of the season as the largest deficit they had previously comeback from was 5 points.

FIRST ROUND
UNCW 75
EAST CAROLINA 54

UNCW broke open a tight first half game to rout East Carolina in the first round of the Colonial Athletic Association tournament Saturday afternoon at Trask Coliseum 75-54.

The Seahawks held a slim 30-27 lead in the half when Bobby Jo Springer got a steal and drove the length of the floor, made the basket and was fouled. Springer's three point play, a basket by Charles Cherry and a zone breaking outside shot by Mark Gary enabled the Seahawks to take a seven point lead into the locker room at 38-31.

East Carolina made a short run at the Seahawks to open the second half when the Pirates closed the gap to 38-35, but six unanswered points by Springer after an exchange of baskets catapulted UNCW to a 48-39 lead and the Seahawks weren't going to look back. Sandy Anderson's basket off an assist by Bryan Rowsom and a Rowsom rebound that ended in a fast break layup by Gary extended the lead to 61-47 midway through the half.

Rowsom's domination of the boards was definitely a key to the Seahawks' victory. Rowsom collected 18 rebounds for the game making him UNCW's career leader in this category as well as using a single game record. More than once these rebound resulted in outlet passes that resulted in fast break scores to Springer or Gary.

Saturday's game marked a season long dominance of the Pirates for the Seahawks as they also defeated East Carolina in their two regular season meetings. Rowsom credited the win to an overall team performance adding that he thinks the team is peaking at the right time.

UNCW will next face Navy in the semifinal round. With a big victory under their belt they may have more confidence against the Midshipmen than they did in two regular season losses.

TOURNEY
NOTES

by Woody Guthrie

The C.A.A. women's basketball tournament provided excitement that could only be felt if you were there. Two of the five games went down to the wire, one of which was decided in the last three seconds. Between the band's and the fan's participation one could have easily imagined thousands instead of the average attendance of 475 to 600, a large portion of which was out-of-town. Not making excuses for the city of Wilmington or the University, but factors such as this being the first weekend of UNCW's spring break and there only being 1,572 in attendance for the men's playoff game at Trask Coliseum on Saturday explains why there weren't more locals at the games.

For those who may not have been in attendance or just glanced at the stats in the morning paper, here is some thoughts, notes, and quotes of this year's tournament.

The UNCW Athletic Department including Athletic Director Bill Brooks and assistant Pat Howey, and the Sports Information Department with Director Bob Roller, Women's Director Dean Buchan, and Matt Shanklin are to be commended for a very organized tournament. Results of each game was available to the press within minutes of the end of each game. James Madison coach Shelia Moorman commented that "everything has been great and we've been treated very well". This is an excellent compliment for the hosting of your first tournament.

The all-tournament team and most valuable player award was announced immediately after the championship game. Here are their credentials:

Sylvia Bragg-ECU: Bragg a senior from Richmond, VA., sank two free throws with three seconds remaining to beat American University in the semi-finals, had 12 points and 6 assists against William and Mary in the first round, and 12 points and 8 assists against James Madison in the finals.

Lisa Squirewell-ECU: A senior from Wake Forest, NC., Squirewell had 17 points and 7 rebounds against American, 10 points and 9 rebounds against William and Mary, and 17 points and 7 rebounds in the finals against James Madison. If the credentials of a Most Valuable Player is team leadership and individual excellence, Squirewell was both; add grace to her assets for being all smiles although disappointment was evident when presented the Most Valuable Player Award.

Alisa Harris-JMU: This sophomore from Harrisburg, PA had 16 points against UNCW, and was perfect from the field in the first half of the championship game against ECU; also, she forced three early fouls on Pirate center Alma Betha.

Jody Thornton-American: A junior from Pittsburgh, PA., Thornton had 12 points, 6 assists and 3 rebounds against Richmond, and 16 points and 6 assists against ECU.

Kelly Lane-American: Lane, only a freshman from Rochester, N.Y., had a game high 18 points against ECU, eight of which came in the last few minutes of a 10 point comeback against ECU in the semi-finals.

Also, besides these performances there are others I feel deserve recognition, in which I'll call "the Seahawk Honorable Mention List."

Delphine Mabry-ECU: Mabry led the ECU fast breaks, had 6 assists against American, 13 points against William and Mary, and 8 points against James Madison with 3 rebounds despite being the shortest player on the court.

Betsy Witman-JMU: Witman, a junior, broke UNCW in the semis with 10 first half points, mostly long range and sank a last second bucket to give JMU the first half lead against ECU.

Dana Diller-American: Diller shared game high honors with 12 points against Richmond, and made a 16-footer from the right wing with 9 seconds left that almost eliminated ECU in the semi-finals.

Elizabeth Bell-UNCW: Bell, a sophomore from Fayetteville, NC had 21 points and 7 rebounds in the opening win against George Mason and 10 points and 5 rebounds in the semi-final loss to James Madison.

Seldom does Trask Coliseum enjoy a heated rivalry and an equal amount of fans from both teams. Such was the JMU-ECU championship game.

The game began by UNCW Athletic Director Bill Brooks having to remove a sign from the JMU cheering section that read, "That Call S...", which was directed at the referees.

When the ECU cheerleaders were performing a stunt during a timeout, a sign from JMU read "We don't use mats," referring to the East Carolina Cheerleaders that put mats underneath themselves when doing mid-air flips.

"Dirty 33," was a chant directed at JMU's Julie Franken, number 33, after her elbow brought an ECU player to the floor. Later, a JMU player also got caught-up in the physical abuse of the game, to the remorse of JMU's fans.

The pep band award definitely goes to James Madison, who rocked the rafters of Trask with force not seen since Hurricane Diana.

Coaches Quotes:

A. James Madison Assistant commenting on one of the officials in the UNCW game was overheard as saying, "If he called a charge, we should throw a party."

UNCW coach Marilyn Christoph when told the Seahawks started out good said, "It's the end that counts." UNCW lost 74-55. UNCW did have their bright spots, however, Phyllis Edwards, after faking out a George Mason player and rendering her to the floor, cracked a large smile at her agility. Agility, however, wasn't the intent of Lisa Jones of UNCW, who tried to play "make it, take it" when she tried to inbound the ball after her team had just scored.

JMU's Shelia Moorman said Alisa Harris' tournament performance and all-tournament selection was gratifying since an early season bout of mono had sidelined her.

Such was the heroics, humorlessness and graciousness of the 1986 C.A.A. Women's Basketball tournament.

SEMI-FINALS

ECU WINS CARDIAC CLASSIC

by Woody Guthrie

Sylvia Bragg sank two free throws with three seconds remaining to lift the Lady Pirates over American in the first semi-final game Saturday night 69-68.

The final score was indicative of the closeness of most of the game except for the 7 minute to 4 minute mark of both halves. Jody Thornton's six points lifted American to the first big lead of the game 26-20 with 4 minutes left in the half. However, two free throws and a jumper by Gretta O'Neal helped pace E.C.U. to a tie score with less than a minute left in the half. An Alma Betha follow-up of a missed E.C.U. shot lifted the Pirates to a two point halftime lead 30-28.

Cross court passes over American's zone that resulted in several long range shots and follow-ups after missed shots enabled E.C.U. to open up a 5 point lead early in the second half but six points by Kelly Lane helped bring American back into a 50-49 lead midway through the half.

Sylvia Bragg, #25 at the foul line, cans the winning free throws against American.

At the 8:00 mark in the game, it appeared E.C.U. inside strength was beginning to take it's toll on the Eagles. The Pirates reeled off 11 unanswered points to put them up by 10. E.C.U. maintained the lead until, with 4 minutes left, Kelly Lane poured in six more of her game high 18 points. A Kathy Hughes layup off a full

A bucket by E.C.U. and an American timeout set the stage for the final 27 seconds. A baseline driver for two points that brought American to within one, and the forcing of an ensuing turnover by Jody Thornton gave American the ball with 16 seconds to play. Dana Diller then drilled a fifteen footer and American had its first lead in ten minutes 68-67.

It was then that American fouled Bragg on her ensuing drive that sent her to the line. Bragg calmly sank two free throws to give her the victory.

Leading scorer for E.C.U. was Lisa Squirewell with 17 points. Lane and Thornton led American with 18 and 16 respectively.

E.C.U.'s 44.3% field goal percentage for the game coupled with American's 55% second half performance plus gutsy play by American enabled the game to stay close. E.C.U. is now only one victory away from its third straight conference title.

JMU DEBUTS;
WHIPS HOST SEAHAWKS

by Woody Guthrie

James Madison's hearty applause for American in the first semi-final game shifted to their own Dukes as the ladies quickness and strength routed the host Seahawks 74-55 in the second game of the evening.

The Dukes, who received a first round bye as a result of a coin flip with co-leader E.C.U., started ragged allowing UNCW to take an early lead paced by Sissy Morse. However, the Dukes began to warm up, using a multiple of substitutions and changing defenses, to tie the game at 16 halfway through the period.

The Dukes took the lead for good at 9 minutes on an Alisa Harris turnaround jumper and they were on their way. The Dukes physical strength inside and quickness on the breaks began to overwhelm the Lady Seahawks in the second half, as James Madison opened up as much as a 23 point lead. Floretta Jackson reaped further havoc upon UNCW with two straight steals in the Seahawk backcourt.

Neither team shot well from the field in the decisive second half as UNCW shot 36% and JMU 44.4%. The Dukes, however put up eleven more shots. One bright spot for the Seahawks was their continued excellence in free throw performance. The team added a 81% performance to an 82.4% mark Friday night. Leading scorers for the game were JMU's Dudley and Harris with 17 and 16, while Sharon McDowell led UNCW with 14.

JMU coach Shelia Moorman attributed her teams shaky start to coming into tonight cold from an opening night bye, a night in which UNCW gained momentum from a route of George Mason. The Seahawks, however, made few substitutions the first seventeen minutes of the game while James Madison freely platooned fresh players. "We can substitute seven people very freely," says Moorman. "I use this system any game where I think we can use depth to our advantage."

Any advantage could prove decisive as the stage is now set for the CAA's regular season co-champions to square off against each other for the conference title.

FIRST ROUND

UNCW, AMERICAN AND ECU WIN BIG

by Woody Guthrie

A tear of 11 straight free throws helped the Lady Seahawks overcome a 37-30 halftime deficit to post a 68-54 victory over George Mason in the first round. "This was a game of momentum," commented UNCW Coach Marilyn Christoph after the game. Indeed, both teams had their ups and downs. UNCW controlled the first 10 minutes of the game opening up a 19-11 lead. However, toward the end of the first half, the momentum began to shift as George Mason reeled off four unanswered points at the end of the first half to go into the locker room trailing 27-19. The first eight minutes of the second half was all George Mason. Using a full court press that baffled the Seahawks, George Mason capitalized on Seahawk turnovers and made their first eight field goals of the second half to seize the lead at 37-30. George Mason extended the lead to 43-34 when a Seahawk steal and a lead pass to Wanda Carroll resulted in a 3 point play, marking the major shift of the contest. Carroll capitalized on two more one and one situations at the line, followed by 4 more free throws by Elizabeth Bell and Sissy Morse to give the Seahawks the lead for good at 45-43 with seven minutes to play. The Lady Seahawks made 13-14 free throws during this six minute stretch of the second half and outscored George Mason 24-6. The Seahawk's excellence at the line in the second half also resulted in a tournament record for most free throws made in a game. UNCW's 82.4% at the line was well above their season average of 64.1%. Leading scorers for the Hawks were Bell with 21, Carroll with 15 and Morse with 14. Jeanine Jernimez had 16 for the losers. "The team represented themselves well," said Christoph, adding that she hopes this enthusiasm will carry on to a collision course meeting with top seeded James Madison in the semi-finals, who received a first round bye. In other first round games, five E.C.U. players scored in double figures including fourteen by Gretta O'Neal as East Carolina eliminated William and Mary 84-56 in the opening game of the tournament. Debbie Taylor had 14 for William and Mary. Guards Dana Diller and Jody Thornton racked up 12 points apiece to lead American over Richmond in another lopsided game. Laurie Governor and Glenna Miller had 12 for Richmond. American shot perfect from the free throw line and 53% from the field while Richmond shot only 30.9%, which reflected in the wide margin of their loss.

Brian Rowsom accepts a "High Five" from his teammates after the Seahawks route over E.C.U. Rowsom gained respect against Navy's David Robinson in UNCW's near upset of Navy the semifinal round. Details next issue.

WON RIGHT TO HOST FIRST ROUND

MEN DEVASTATE ECU

by Matt Shanklin

UNCW's men's basketball team split its final two CAA conference games, while East Carolina lost its final two, giving UNCW the right to host a first round tournament game. The top four teams in the conference host first round games, with the winners advancing to George Mason in Fairfax, VA, for the finals.

The "Hawks lost to George Mason 68-62 on Feb. 20 and won at UNCW a 15-12 regular season record and a 6-8 conference mark which tied them with ECU for fourth. Because UNCW won both regular season meetings with ECU, UNCW got the home court advantage for the first round game, scheduled for 2:00 p.m. March 1. ECU was two games ahead of UNCW with three games to play, but lost to the "Hawks in Greenville 75-67, at George Mason 70-69, and at James Madison 86-73. The Pirates only needed one victory to have clinched fourth place.

The win at James Madison, Head Coach Mel Gibson's 250th career victory, was sparked by Brian Rowsom's 31 points and 10 rebounds and the off the bench play of junior transfer Ben Pittman who scored 6 points and grabbed 5 rebounds in just 13 minutes of playing time. James Madison was led by Eric Brent's 22 points and Eric Esch's 13 rebounds.

Known as a jekyll and hyde team, JMU, (4-22, 2-11), played a very good first half and led 36-33 at the intermission. UNCW had built an early 8 point lead in the first half when Charles Cherry connected on a jumper with 10:58 remaining, but failed to maintain it.

The second half was usual JMU basketball with Dukes of Coach John Thurston failing to rebound and taking poor shots. UNCW fought back to take a 51-48 lead with 9:53 remaining in the game. Yet JMU would not quit and took a one-point lead with 1:23 remaining on Eric Brent's jumper from the top of the key. With :58 seconds senior Bobby Jo Springer drove the lane and scored to give the Seahawks a 58-57 lead. Charles Cherry then hit the one of two free throws with :19 seconds left to give UNCW a two point advantage.

UNCW then turned the ball over with :07 seconds left in their own end and JMU's Eric Esch broke free and hit a shot in the lane with 2 seconds remaining to tie the game and send it into overtime.

The overtime was all Seahawks as they outscored JMU 20-9 led by Rowsom's 6 points in OT. UNCW scored the first 7 points capped by Charles Cherry's 3 point play with 2:15 remaining in the overtime period. Sandy Anderson's 15 ft. jumper from the right side finished the scoring and gave the "Hawks its final margin of 11 points (79-68).

The loss at George Mason was a tough one. Led by Rowsom's 26 points and Springer's 16, the "Hawks squandered an 11 point lead midway in the second half to fall 68-62 in a game televised by Home Team Sports.

UNCW led 30-26 at halftime, and outscored the Patriots of GMU 14-7 to open the second half. This run gave the "Hawks their biggest lead of 44-33 with 13:06 remaining in the game. But George Mason, (15-0, 9-4), fought back and tied the game on Rob Rose's breakaway dunk with 6:52 left in the game (50-50). This was the last field goal that the Patriots would tally as they scored their last 18 points from the free throw line.

The Patriots were an outstanding 30 of 34 from the free throw line and scored on their last 12 possessions of the game to fight back from their 11 point deficit. This George Mason's largest comeback effort of the season as the largest deficit they had previously comeback from was 5 points.

TOURNEY NOTES

by Woody Guthrie

The C.A.A. women's basketball tournament provided excitement that could only be felt if you were there. Two of the five games went down to the wire, one of which was decided in the last three seconds. Between the band's and the fan's participation one could have easily imagined thousands instead of the average attendance of 475 to 600, a large portion of which was out-of-town. Not making excuses for the city of Wilmington or the University, but factors such as this being the first weekend of UNCW's spring break and there only being 1,572 in attendance for the men's playoff game at Trask Coliseum on Saturday explains why there weren't more locals at the games.

For those who may not have been in attendance or just glanced at the stats in the morning paper, here is some thoughts, notes, and quotes of this year's tournament.

The UNCW Athletic Department including Athletic Director Bill Brooks and assistant Pat Howey, and the Sports Information Department with Director Bob Roller, Women's Director Dean Buchan, and Matt Shanklin are to be commended for a very organized tournament. Results of each game was available to the press within minutes of the end of each game. James Madison coach Shelia Moorman commented that "everything has been great and we've been treated very well". This is an excellent compliment for the hosting of your first tournament.

CHAMPIONSHIP GAME

JAMES MADISON OUT-LASTS ECU; WINS 66-62

by Woody Guthrie

James Madison pulled away from East Carolina in the last three minutes of the second half to gain a 66-62 victory in the championship game.

In a physical game, the referees had to step in 3 times, starting with having to break up a skirmish in the ECU lane. Another incident resulted in a technical foul on Sylvia Bragg. The contact forced turnovers on both sides, setting the tone for roughness the entire game.

Closeness also was reflected in the score as the lead changed hands fifteen times with neither team gaining any momentum until the Dukes late drive that iced away the title.

A three-point play by JMU's Alisa Harris gave the Dukes an early 8-4 lead but an assist by Loraine Foster and two buckets by Lisa Squirewell tied the score at 10 for ECU. Three quick fouls on ECU center Alma Bethea neutralized the ECU line and allowed Alisa Harris to score 7 of her 11 points in the first half. Harris also muscled her way into a third foul late in the half. After Monique Pompili of ECU missed the front end of a one and one, Julie Franken of JMU sank two free throws to give the Dukes a 3 point lead. Two jumpers by Pompili gave ECU a one point lead that looked like would carry into the locker room until Betsy Witman swished a 12 footer with 6 seconds in the half to give JMU a halftime lead of 33-32.

Delphine Mabry's basket and an assist to Alma Bethea gave ECU an early second half surge but two turnovers put JMU back in the lead. This was characteristic of play throughout most of the second half as neither team enjoyed more than a 4 point lead until late in the game.

Julie Franken's jumper gave JMU the lead for good with 3:30 left on the clock followed by four points from Alisa Harris. A baseline drive by Betsy Witman extended the lead to seven, the game's largest lead. Even then the Dukes gave ECU an opportunity by missing 4 of 5 foul shots, two of which were one and one situations.

JMU Coach Shelia Moorman described the game as "hard fought though not always artistic" but ECU coach Emily Manwaring had other words for "not always artistic." "The play was dirty," says Manwaring adding that "somewhere along the way it will come back to haunt them."

Somewhere along the way will most likely be the NCAA tournament for the Dukes, now 27-3 for the season. "We have a good opportunity to play somewhere March 12," says Moorman. The loss breaks ECU's two year conference reign. The game was also a rematch of last year's 65-59 Pirate triumph.

Betsy Witman, #34, hit a twelve-footer to give James Madison a 33-32 halftime lead.

The Seahawk and the Pirate knock heads during halftime.

Okay, every state or city has its own brand or style of music and its loyal following. This usually narrow everything down to a very local level and rarely escalates above this. However, N.C. has been turning out some of the finest bands I've heard in a while. The styles vary in each band so that all of the bands can't be placed in one genre. There are so many, I wish I could go in depth about every one but I'll leave that to the fanzines to get the ultra low down on all the bands.

One of the most well known N.C. bands is LET'S ACTIVE. The group was founded by Mitch Easter. His claim to fame is his very own DRIVE IN RECORDING STUDIOS in Winston-Salem and his production work on R.E.M.'s earliest efforts. The band has changed from the original trio, dropped the drummer, replaced her, and added another member. If you remember, LET'S ACTIVE did a show right here in Wilmington only a few months ago. Next...

Way up on my list is a band called THE BAD CHECKS. You know, beat me, hurt me, make me write...O.K. you get the idea. These four lads are an odd combination at a glance, once described as "three leathers and one paisley." This is a pretty accurate portrayal of the band. From the Chapel Hill/Durham area, the BAD CHECKS are a favorite of mine and are unreal live. Their album GRAVEYARD TRAMP captures their crux and energy. Some choice picks are: "Graveyard Tramp," "Flesh and Bone," and the ever popular "17".

And from Charlotte we have a band called FETCHIN BONES. Having had the privilege to catch them live, I was instantly amazed at the singer, Hope, who has undoubtedly the most distinctive voice of ANY female vocalist. The band is tight and solid. The release of their album CABIN

FLOUNDER will no doubt bring them the recognition they deserve. Michael Stipe of R.E.M. had CABIN FLOUNDER on tip of his list for top albums of 1985 in the ROLLINGSTONE year-end issue. Some really cool songs off of that one are: "Kitchen of Life," "Plus Seven," and "Asteroids."

This is only a glimpse of the talent that lies within our own state lines. There are many more bands such as: Flat Duo Jet, Scatches of the Pink, Southern Culture on the Skids, The Ugly Americans, The Graphic, Easter (now disbanded), Pressure Boys, Confusion, Don Dixon, and about a million more. We've got a good thing going so support it, have fun with it, and remember, bands have to come from somewhere. Why not N.C.?

THE NEW BEACH FADS

by Erika bishop

Fads and fashions seem to have a tendency to spread rapidly. North Carolinians pick up fashion ideas from Florida to California as trends spread across the coast. The Wrightsville Beach fads generally have revolved around the surfer-look, casual and comfortable.

The fads of the beach, such as long shorts and logo t-shirts, seem to make good impressions on vacation goers since local surf shops report a definite increase in sales during the summer touring months. Although Raleigh is not too far from Wrightsville Beach, some people seem to be somewhat behind the beach fads. The rat-tail mania that struck Wrightsville Beach back in the summers of 1983 and 1984 is just now filtering to areas further from the coast, such as Raleigh and even Charlotte.

Many area bars have also become well-known and so have many of the Wrightsville Beach surf shops. Skateboarding, windsurfing, and surfing are just a few of the sports that Wrightsville Beach has helped to popularize. All over the North Carolina coast. The infiltration of college people and tourists between Wrightsville Beach and their hometowns has popularized many of the fads and manias closely associated with the beach and local beach goers.

Hooray for the drama Department! If you missed "I AM A CAMERA" then you really missed a show.

Liz Stanley is a wonderful Sally Bowles, Ex-patriate British singer. She has the appeal and natural good looks to make Sally come alive on the SRO stage.

Her filippant, worldly wise character provides a perfect foil for the insecure, immature Christopher Isherwood, skillfully portrayed by Robbie Stone. My only argument with his character was his obvious. "Opening night jitters," which disappeared shortly.

Fritz Wendel, the closet Jew who is Isherwood's friend, was very convincing, down to the ego which he played to the hilt without being excessive.

Kim Michelle Weeks provided another opposing personality for Sally. The Shy, quiet Natalia Landauer was so believable I had to slap myself mentally to remember I wasn't playing peeping tom in a 1930's Berlin apartment.

Brad Thomas played the typically obnoxious American, Robert Mortimer. So rich that he was oblivious to the real world around him, Mortimer seemed the perfect tool for Sally and Chris to use in their climb to the top. However, the dreamy American spirit turned their scheme back on them when Mortimer left the pair high and dry in Berlin on the day they were scheduled to leave for places far away.

Rebecca Dodd was the "pleasantly plump" landlady, Fraulien Schneider, who wanted so desperately to keep her "Ishervoo" in her building as long as possible.

Tracy Stevens' Mrs. Watson-Courtneidge should not be forgotten either. Bravo.

Perhaps one of the best done things about the show-indeed, there are many-was the accents. So often, European accents are overdone on stage, but that wasn't the case here. Accents were flawless.

The set was one of the best I have seen for a long time, whether in the SRO, Thalian, or my local theatre here in Clinton.

Honestly I have seen professional productions that couldn't stand in the shadow of this one.

In all in, Hooray for the Drama Department! You've definitely spoiled we theater-goers. Keep up the good work.

Don't forget the up-coming Reader's Theatre production of "They Won't Kill a Woman" and "Who Am I, This Time?" March 13-15 in the SRO Theatre.

RUGGERS BEGIN PLAY

Where were you Saturday, Feb. 15, at 1:00 p.m.? If you weren't at Brooke's Field, you missed the UNCW Ruggers in action against Campbell, in the first game of the spring season. After weeks of extensive practicing, the Ruggers began the new season with an exciting 21-3 win.

Clad in green and yellow, our Ruggers psyched themselves up with screams and head-butts. Their wild enthusiasm carried them through two very physical, 40 minute halves of rugby. For the veteran players, it was a chance to get back at Campbell for cancelling last seasons game and for the few beginners, it was an exciting first taste of a real game.

The scorers for the game were UNCW's John Sullivan with 2

trys, Steve Henderson with 1 try, and Tommy Carter with 3 conversions and 1 penalty kick. The three, soon to be legendary, Lightening Brothers, also contributed to their team with their great playing. Campbell's only points came from Darren Posey who scored with a penalty in the first half.

The Ruggers next game is away against Cherry Point. With one win under their belt, they will hopefully revenge their loss to Cherry Point last season in the Sandspur Tens Tournament. All home games this season will be played on Saturdays at 1:00 on Brooke's Field. I encourage you to join the growing number of fans and support the rugby team in their quest for a perfect season.

MOVIE REVIEW

by Marci Smith

F/X

Special effects have been prevalent in films since the beginning of motion pictures, but "F/X" is based entirely on the ingenuity of special effects master Rolly Tyler. The movie is rated R for good reason considering all the bloodshed, both real and fake, and the street language.

Tyler is hired by the Witness Protection and Relocation branch of the Justice Department to fake the assassination of Nicky DeFranco, a former drug dealer for the Mafia, who wants to testify against them in return for federal protection. It is not revealed to the viewer until the end whether Tyler actually did or did not kill DeFranco, but in any case Tyler is set-up. The WP and R's motto is "no loose ends," which causes them to try to kill Tyler in 1) a car 2) a phone booth, and 3) his girlfriends apartment.

Brian Delaney portrays his character, Lt. Leo McCarthy as a hard-nosed cop, with little or no regard for regulations. He brought DeFranco into WP and R six months, and even though he has been taken off the case because he has "pissed people off," McCarthy begins to unofficially snoop around, and uncovers a tremendous scandal. Although Tyler and McCarthy are working on the same side they do not even meet until the last fourth of the movie.

The movie exposes all the motion picture's tricks of the trade, all the while maintaining continuous action and snappy dialogue. Although the plot is unclear in a few places the stunts, especially the car chase, more than makes up for it. I was not able to catch what "F/X" officially stood for, to me it means Frankly/Exciting. If you can stand all the blood, gore, and swearing the movie is great.

Unfortunately it is not just smokers alone who are at risk from radiation in cigarettes. Reader's Digest reports that at least 50 percent of the radioactive isotopes from cigarette smoke wind up in the air, and a smaller percentage of this and other elements in the smoke are inhaled by those around the smoker.

Takeshi Hirayama of the Institute of Preventive Oncology in Tokyo studied records of more than 91,000 women and found that non-smoking wives of heavy smokers had more than double the risk of dying from lung cancer than did the non-smoking wives of non-smokers.

GIBSON RESIGNS POSITION

by Woody Guthrie

Citing reasons such as personal and family responsibilities and a successful season to end on, UNCW head basketball coach, Mel Gibson resigned Thursday from his position. Gibson rendered his decision before area television and newspaper reporters at the Student Union at 2:00 p.m. after only telling his players at 12:30.

Gibson commented that the hardest part of the decision was telling his players. The Navy game (in which UNCW almost ousted the top seeded Midshipmen in the C.A.A.) was the best and most inspirational game I've ever been associated with," Gibson said, however, that his decision to step down would have little effect on the players or incoming recruits. "They do not come for the coach," reflected Gibson, saying that they come for the school and the program.

Gibson, although stepping down from the hardwood, will remain at the University to fill the new position of Assistant Athletic director in charge of business affairs. His duties will include scheduling events for Trask Coliseum. The position was only recently announced. The prospect of this position "motivated me to make the move," quoted Gibson, adding that he wanted to go out a winner.

Gibson tried to dispel rumors that there was pressure for him to resign by saying that he could have returned next year as coach if he had desired, "I made this decision because I feel it is in the best interest of myself, my family and the university."

Gibson steps down after a 14 year reign in which his teams were 194-180. Pressure on Gibson and the team mounted as late as January of this year, when a midseason slump started rumors of morale problems. A team meeting at that time seemed to solve the problem as the team play with more motivation leading up to the

GIBSON'S

RESIGNATION ADDRESS

Today, I am announcing my resignation as Head Basketball Coach at UNC Wilmington. Let me emphasize emphatically that my decision to resign is a personal one. I have not been asked to resign or been influenced in any way by my Athletic Director, Bill Brooks, Chancellor Wagoner or anyone else in Administration. I could have returned as Basketball Coach next season if I desired. I made this decision because I feel it is in the best interest of myself, my family and the University.

I have given considerable thought to getting out of coaching for several years now, and this seems to me to be the appropriate time as we have had both a successful and gratifying season. We have probably the best team returning for next season since I became head coach in 1972. Players are in place who can play. I would never want to be accused of "leaving the cupboard empty."

My decision to resign was strongly influenced by the soon-to-be vacancy of a position in Athletic Administration. I initiated contact with Coach Brooks and Vice-Chancellor Cahill regarding this position, and my decision to resign was reached shortly thereafter when the opportunity to move into this position was made available to me. My family and I care deeply for this University and the community of Wilmington, and this is where we want to live and work. I have no interest in pursuing coaching as a profession anywhere else.

I have no doubt that the basketball program which inherited from Coach Bill Brooks in 1972, and hopefully perpetuated, will continue to grow as I pass it on to someone else. Rest assured that I will assist in every way possible to make the transition to another coach as smooth as possible.

I want to sincerely thank Dr. Wagoner, Dr. Cahill, Coach Brooks and the entire administration for their support over the years. Let me also thank our loyal fans for their support. Lastly, and most important, I want to thank my players, past and present, for their dedication and hard work.

Foreign Companies Supply U.S. Jobs

by Woody Guthrie

The scope of international business has turned full circle, according to John Savage, administration manager of Mitsubishi Consumer Electronics America, Inc. Savage made this comment during the keynote address of the Cameron School's Business Week activities, March 10-14.

Savage, formally a senior employee relations assistant for Mobil Oil Corporation, said Mobil's international objective was to go into a country and train the people to the point that they could assume full control in the future. "The full circle has come about by these countries, especially Japan, who is now bringing their technology here to create jobs for Americans. This will lead to a stronger system inside the U.S.," says Savage. "We have much to offer the U.S., and the U.S. has much to offer Japan."

Savage attributed the success of Japanese companies in the U.S. to four key factors that he says are sometimes overlooked in American companies. Chief among these factors is the homogenization of the Japanese system. All employees are treated with respect and given the attitude that it takes all employees to run a business. "My being here today probably caused less disruption than if a production worker had been absent," says Savage.

Another factor is the trust-building phase among employees including having picnics, dinners, and production meetings to keep everyone informed. The company publishes a newsletter to also keep employees informed so they don't hear about things in the parking lot, a place where much idle talk and dissension could build.

Instead of an absentee record, Mitsubishi recognizes good attendance to promote positive reinforcement. An employee can earn up to a full week's pay as a result of good attendance, commented Savage. Recognition is sometimes overlooked in American businesses in favor of punishing bad habits. "Positive recognition is one thing we can learn from Japanese business," says Savage.

Although the people aspect ranked highest on Savage's list, planning also plays a big part in the Japanese system. Japanese companies never say "we'll worry about it when the time comes."

Too many businesses look too hard at quarterly statements when they should concentrate on long range things such as quality control.

Among the few problems Savage has had in dealing with the Japanese are communications and eating. "I have had to learn a lot about hand motions, picture drawing, slowing my voice, and having to learn to eat with chopsticks," says Savage.

Mitsubishi is currently building a 155,000 square foot plant in Braselton, Ga. which will serve as their headquarters. "We have had an opportunity to build Mitsubishi Consumer Electronics America, Inc. from the ground up," commented Savage. The company has now grown to 42 employees and is expecting to employ 250-300 Americans by year's end, bringing the economic international circle back to the U.S. to provide jobs, technology and opportunity that once was expected only from the U.S.

We can now share opportunities, says Savage. "The way to operate a business shouldn't be the Japanese way or the American way, but should be the best way for all."

by Lynn Franklin

For many seniors, graduation, and the events surrounding it, can't get here soon enough. Yet within two months from now, on May 17, 1986, the University of North Carolina at Wilmington will be holding its thirty-ninth annual commencement exercises. Graduation this year will be different from those of previous years and seniors can look forward to a memorable and exciting event.

"This year's commencement will contain several innovations," explained Senior Class President Tim Dellinger. "For the first time, parents of graduating seniors will be honored by a continental breakfast on Saturday, May 17, from 7:30-9:15 a.m. in the Student Union. This is a good chance to recognize our parents as well as bring together faculty, students and parents for a final time." The breakfast is open to all graduating seniors, their parents and invited guests, the faculty and the administration.

At 9:15 a.m., seniors are expected to be in line formation in Hanover Hall for the procession into Trask Coliseum gym. At 10:00 a.m. the commencement ceremony begins. The ceremony will last until about 11:45, when seniors return to their scholastic department to receive their diploma. Receptions will be held at each of the departments, honoring the members of the senior class itself.

To bring in student involvement with the ceremony, Dellinger and Tyrone Rowell, Director of Development for UNCW, invited several campus leaders from the senior class to attend a luncheon to discuss graduation. Yvonne Williams, representing the American Marketing Association, felt that "the luncheon was very informative and answered a lot of questions regarding commencement. It allowed me a chance to get involved with graduation." Cari Abatiello added that "several concerns I heard voiced on campus about our diplomas, the music, the ceremony itself were brought out and discussed. I enjoyed it very much." Dellinger said that "I was glad to get as many senior leaders and interested persons as I did. It made the luncheon worth while." Dellinger added that a brochure will be put out by the Development office which includes a checklist of items to prepare seniors for commencement. This brochure will be mailed to the campus post office boxes of all students who completed an application for the commencements.

Regulations not being followed

by Jack Sessoms

With the number of students and vehicles growing every year, the university was faced with a problem of how to coordinate vehicle traffic with pedestrians. During the 1984-85 school year, it was decided to make the UNCW campus more pedestrian oriented with the addition of assigned crosswalks and regulations that would protect the rights of pedestrians. This brought about the problem of motorists and students ignoring the regulations.

According to Lt. W.H. Laughlin of campus police, the problem can best be solved by education of the rules and regulations and motorists having a better view of the areas affected with crosswalks. Lt. Laughlin stated that educating the campus population would not completely solve the problem but that it will take students efforts to work with motorists also. It seems that many students are not using the assigned crosswalks in congested areas in front of the University Union and on Reigel Road. This creates a problem for all involved and has resulted in several serious mishaps.

It is asked that motorists become more aware of students using crosswalks and that students should try to use assigned crosswalks whenever possible. It will take a joint effort to make this problem come to a halt.

S.G.A. ELECTIONS THE PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDATES

MOORE STRESSES EXPERIENCE

I James C. Moore am pleased to announce my candidacy for Student Body President of the University of North Carolina Wilmington. My campaign platform will be structured on the experience I have in the UNCW Student Government Association, and from issues students are facing, from which I've developed a list of priorities.

My experience in the UNCW SGA consists of 2 years of dedicated service to the student body. The first position I held in Student Government was as a Sophomore Class Senator, in which I was the president pro tempore of the senate, and a member of the Judiciary Committee. Presently, I am a Representative-at-large, and the undergraduate student member of the Bookstore Advisory Committee. As a member of the Student Senate, I was open-minded on issues concerning students, looking for a common ground and approaches that would unite the senate, rather than divide it. I welcomed all obstacles, for they could be my challenges in the path of successes for the student body.

The list of priorities I have set up are issues that should be solved immediately. The Student Body President should be an advocate and agitator in getting the changes and problems solved that the students deem important. The issues I have chosen as priorities are issues that your fellow students have brought to my attention.

The first issue is improving the quality of student life and interaction by dissolving the racial separation at UNCW. When we talk about racial separation we are not talking about racism or prejudice among students but, our basic interacting habits. There are clubs and organizations with all the members of the same race. To solve this problem the Administration and faculty need to have programs and projects de-emphasizing racial differences.

COMMITTEE ENDORSES MOORE

On Monday March 24, 1986 our Student Government Association will be holding Spring Elections. Each student should take this opportunity to cast their votes for the candidates who they think can best represent them. We students should take time out before the elections and find out who is running for the different seats and their basic ideology.

We should not vote for candidates solely because they are classmates, friends or in the same club as we are. But, instead vote for the candidates whom you think and instead emphasizing the human commonality.

Secondly, we must have alternative nighttime activities for students who will be under the age of 21 beginning this fall. With the law not allowing anyone under the age of 21 to purchase alcoholic beverages in October, UNCW needs to find some entertaining activities for the majority of our students who will no longer be able to get in night clubs and bars.

Finally, the issues of divesting UNCW money in companies doing business in South Africa is a controversial issue among the students. But, I believe this issue should be addressed by our Board of Trustees. Whatever your beliefs on this issue is not as important as the fact that every significant issue should be addressed and a decision made. Nothing will be solved if this issue is never addressed by the Board of Trustees. Neither side wins when an issue is ignored by those who have the power to make a decision.

Voting for me is not a chance, but an opportunity for UNCW to have the best Student Body President in its 39 year history. I will meet my priorities and goals, but I can not make these priorities a reality without your vote.

BERGE FOR UNIVERSITY GROWTH

"Hi! This is HEIDI BERGE again. As I promised in my last article I'd like to update you on my recent activities and then present for your support, Proclamation Green and Gold.

On Wednesday, February 19th I attended the Cape Fear Chapter of the World Trade Association meeting at Riverboat Landing with UNCW student body V. P. Daniela Sullivan. Speaker Robert Dennerlinne, Director of Marketing for the Port Authority, placed a high emphasis on the importance of education and international awareness in the World Trade and Shipping industry. On hand to answer questions were representatives from Chicago, London, Tokyo, and Stockholm.

The University of North Carolina Association of Student Governments (UNCASG) meeting was hosted by ECU on February 21st and 22nd. SGA Senators Jenny Cato, Beth Riffe, Terri Paul, and myself accompanied Paul Bell to represent UNCW. The purpose of this meeting is to gather all Presidents and their delegates from each of the 16 universities in North Carolina to discuss important issues affecting each university in a legislative manner and then vote on the solutions. Some important issues discussed at ECU included the controversial dumping of nuclear waste sites in Rose Hill and the mountains of North Carolina, a congratulatory letter to past-President William C. Friday, a resolution protesting support of the Marcos government, and a UNC Beautiful Project which will include yearly contest for the best improvements made on any UNC campus.

Although President Bell requested ALL Presidential candidates from UNCW attend this meeting, I was the ONLY candidate participating. We will be hosting a UNCASG meeting here at UNCW over Easter weekend, March 29. I would like and agitator if they are elected. Those who are unable or unwilling to assume these roles, are probably looking for personal gain, rather than wanting to serve students. Our Student Government Association can and will give quality service to students, if we only elect candidates who are dedicated, experienced and undoubtedly qualified to whole positions in our Student Government Associations.

to attend this important meeting at UNCW Student Body President.

The community is very important to our growth. Proclamation Green and Gold, passed unanimously in the SGA Senate last month, is a resolution designed to promote the Seahawks on campus, in the community, and to register our official acronym as UNCW. Comments on the following text are welcome. Please write to Heidi A. Berge, PO Box 22808.

We need an aggressive leader who will be a link between students, faculty, and community. I am that link. On Election Day, March 24th, remember YOUR vote counts. Let's continue to grow and keep people talking so that when WE say THE University of North Carolina Wilmington, people listen! VOTE HEIDI A. BERGE. PRESIDENT

BERGE "NEW KID ON THE BLOCK"

Dear Editor:

First I would like to say that I wish all candidates good luck in the upcoming elections. I encourage all to participate in this healthy competition and vote. Student Government can be a very powerful voice if we learn to use it constructively.

As Vice President I know what lies before the candidates and I feel that each, given the drive and determination, can do a good job. In previous elections I have often been the "new kid on the block" and have found that not having a reputation can unjustly determine an election.

Therefore, I would like to introduce you to Heidi Berge, the "New Kid on the Block" for President.

In my dealings with Ms. Berge I found her to be very supportive and dependable. She has an excellent communicative background. She has worked with

DUDLEY IS DEDICATED TO UNCW

UNCW Student Body I would like to take this opportunity to introduce myself. I am B. Allan Dudley, a candidate for the Office of Student Body President.

First of all, I would like to reveal a little about myself. I am completing my second year at UNCW and have had the opportunity to be involved with several clubs and activities on our campus.

I am presently a Sophomore Senator supporting the continuous expansion on UNCW, both academically and socially. I am also Editor of the Fledgling and secretary of Delta Sigma Phi Fraternity. This past summer I served as freshmen orientation leader and plan to be involved with orientation again this year.

I thoroughly enjoy working with the UNCW faculty, staff, and students and plan to continue this until graduation.

As Student Body President, I would have many plans and ideas to benefit the University and the Student Body as a whole.

Please carefully consider all of the Presidential candidates as you vote on March 24. I thank you for your support.

Student Body
Presidential Candidate

DUDLEY HAS PROVEN HE CAN DO RIGHT

In the past it was considered inappropriate for a staff member, much less an editor, to endorse a candidate. However, this has been a year of firsts; our first full size paper, the Seahawk Express, and the Miss UNCW Pageant. There have been several student leaders involved in this realm of originals. One of them is now intending to further promote the University as Student Government President.

Allan Dudley has been the Editor of the Fledgling for two years. Taking over the position as a Freshman was seemingly an insurmountable feat. One, however, that he more than fully accomplished.

Allan was also involved in the formation of Delta Sigma Phi on campus, which again exemplifies his leadership qualities.

Against the odds, Allan created and carried off the Miss UNCW Pageant. Even in the face of his opposition he maintained his self image of leadership, competence and class. That is what the Students here at UNCW need, a leader who has not only proven himself to his peers, but to his opponents as well.

Vote carefully in the upcoming election and consider all of your options. What you put on your ballot will effect you in the upcoming year.

To all the candidates: Good Luck!

STILLPOINT

by BobHaywood
Campus Ministry

NO PAIN, NO GAIN! That's the new motto that's going to appear on a T-shirt we're producing after our cruise to the Berry Islands in the Bahamas during Spring Break. We're a group of eighteen people living on a fifty-five foot sail boat and we find ourselves dealing with some difficult and uncomfortable situations.

The first day was marred by cold weather and high seas plus a stuck mainsail that forced us to turn back to Miami. The minute we had to sail across the Gulf Stream all over again which, in those moments, didn't seem worthwhile to some. But we did it. Later on we hiked through some underbrush and found ourselves on a trail longer than we thought it would be bushwacking through trees and bushes that left us all scratched before we reached our destination which was a beautiful formation that everyone of us felt was worth the trouble we went through to see it. I remember the time we were not sure where we were in the middle of the night as we sailed across the Bahama flats and it also left us uncomfortable.

As we reflected on these and other experiences the motto "no pain, no gain" emerged naturally from the group. Experimentally we learned that nothing worthwhile comes without a price. And yet there is not one of us that did not wind up feeling that the trip with all it's varied experiences with each other, with ourselves, and with the environment was worth whatever difficulties seemed, at times, to get in the way.

It is a lesson that is valuable for all of our life. Everything, anything that is worthwhile has a price. We sat around the cabin one night after a wonderful spaghetti dinner and talked about the difficulties that got in our way, not only in our environment, but also difficulties that come from within ourselves. Many of us have dreams, things we want to do, places we want to go, people we want to know better. But we seem to invent all kinds of reasons why we cannot have these things. "I can't afford it." "I don't have time." "They wouldn't be interested in me." We call forth these and many other reasons for not doing some things that we say we want to do. There were several on the cruise who could not afford to go, and yet, were there because it was really important for them.

It really comes down to our taking time to reflect on what it is we want in life and how important those things or experiences or people are to us. We need to be aware of how we tend to find excuses to avoid uncomfortableness that comes with the reaching out for some of our dreams.

None of us liked being sea-sick, or getting scratched by falling on coral or wondering what was out there in the shallow waters of an unfamiliar place in the middle of the night. But the new sights, the new people, the new experiences and the new ideas made every difficulty recede into insignificance alongside of the pleasure accomplishing something that we had chosen to do, that is, learning about ourselves and each other and having wonderful sun-filled, wonderful week of sailing in the Caribbean.

What is it you want for yourselves. What are these stories you tell yourself that prevent you from achieving what you want. It is a real fact. No pain, no gain. It also seems to be a fact that the gain is worth the pain.

S.G.A. CANDIDATES

Greetings Seahawks! My name is John Middleton and I am running for Attorney General. The years of involvement in school activities have prepared me for the Executive Judicial position of Attorney General. The positive energy that has swelled up inside of me from the past years is overwhelming. My first year in school I became heavily involved with the exclusive UNCW Rugby Club. I made All-State and was Vice-President of the original club. Rugby inspired my Seahawk Spirit which spearheaded me into other ambitious activities. I have since become Junior Class President, Vice-President of the Political Science Club, and a North Carolina Student Legislative delegate. Everywhere I have turned I have found inspiring positive individuals eager in the pursuit of a better UNCW. I wish to carry on the tradition...God Bless UNC by the Sea.

As a candidate for a Jr. Class Senate position for the 1986-87 school year, I would like to take a few moments to explain to you what I would like to do if I am elected this coming Monday.

Unfortunately it seems that only a small percentage of UNCW's students actually understand what happens in the Student Government Association on this campus. Many students do not realize the important role that SGA can play in a club, organization, or individuals needs.

I would like to be one of the student legislators that bridge the gap between student government and the student body. By enhancing the relationship between these entities, then the government will then be able to successfully complete more legislation and allocate funds fairly with the students understanding what is happening and why.

I have diversified my interests on this campus by interacting with several groups and organizations, and through this interaction I hope I have developed some knowledge concerning the needs of the students and will be able to apply this knowledge to my Senate position

After having read Woodie Guthrie's letter about carefully considering our SGA candidates, I have found a candidate who exemplifies the type of the individual we need at the helm of UNCW's SGA. Introducing B. Allan Dudley. Mr. Dudley has been very involved with the UNCW system since his freshman year here at UNCW. As a freshman, Mr. Dudley assumed many responsibilities as Editor of the Fledgling, our annual publication. The Fledgling was on the verge of folding as a publication. Now due to Mr. Dudley's hard and dedicated work, the Fledgling is a high quality publication competing on competition levels with other university publications.

Mr. Dudley has been very involved with the SGA as a second year senator, Delta Sigma Phi Fraternity's secretary, and second year editor of the Fledgling. As an orientation leader this past summer, he has proven leadership abilities in the eyes of our UNCW administration.

I personally work with Mr. Dudley in Delta Sigma Phi as a brother and also had the opportunity to work with him at the University Miss UNCW Pageant, which was a tremendous success due to social interaction and involvement of the students and faculty of UNCW.

I urge you to carefully examine all of UNCW's SGA candidates and vote and support for those candidates who will benefit you most as a student here at UNCW. Hopefully, the rights you exercise as a voting member of UNCW will better reward you during your stay here at UNCW as a student.

Keith Douglas Miller

KARLA F. ALSTON

Greetings everyone! I am Karla Fontaine Alston, a candidate for Representative-At-Large. My first year at UNCW has been an exciting experience that I hope will continue the rest of my college life.

Even though UNCW is a nice school it is far from being flawless. Being your representative will enable me to focus my attention on some of these problems.

My previous experiences in high school as a representative of Student Government and working with Junior Achievement has been helpful, but I feel my most important quality is my love for meeting people and working with them.

Meeting you and listening to your concerns is what I would like most to do next year. Then with your input, I would be able to represent you appropriately in the Senate.

I urge you to get involved in school activities, and when you cast your ballot on Monday, March 24, don't forget to vote for me- Karla Fontaine Alston.

For those of you that do not know me, I would like to take this opportunity to introduce myself. I am Kimberly Ann McDaniel, a candidate for Representative at Large in the upcoming SGA elections on March 24.

I am presently the Residence Life Chairperson of the University Program Board and through this endeavor I have become very involved with the UNCW student body. As a member of the UPB, I attend Senate meetings regularly to report on our organization, and I have become quite interested in the Student Government and what they

NEW CAMPUS T.V. HOPES TO SUCCEED

COLLEGE PRESS SERVICE

Having once failed in its effort to bring big screen video shows to the nation's campuses, a business group says it's ready to try again.

If the plan works, by next fall a select number of campuses will be getting concerts, lectures, shows, movies and other entertainment beamed to them via satellite, accompanied by what one previewer says is an astoundingly good sound system.

The group, called Campus Network, has been installing the necessary equipment at 20 colleges during the last two years in preparation for the debut.

In 1982, a firm called Campus Entertainment Network announced a splashy series of Broadway shows and big-name rock concerts that it would beam to what it hoped to be a network of about 100 campuses.

The effort, however, quickly came apart amid complaints of unmet promises, bad picture quality, unpaid bills and terrible scheduling.

For example, CEN's last and most expensive effort -- The Who's last North American concert -- was beamed to only 13 campuses, most of which had already emptied for the Christmas holidays.

Intrigued by the idea, if not its execution, Campus Network bought CEN's assets in 1983.

So far, 12 schools have signed up for CN's "video event centers."

"We think they had a great idea, but it needed more research and refinement," says Marilyn Freeman, who worked for CEN and now directs network development for Campus Network. In fact, three other CEN executives joined Freeman at the new company.

Freeman says they'll try to avoid some of CEN's mistakes by offering diversified programming, as opposed to the exclusively live events CEN broadcast.

Campus Network also has been steadily improving the quality of the video image, which Freeman maintains soon will be as good as 35mm film.

In a few preliminary screenings, Campus Network has run video shorts similar to those shown on MTV.

"Their sound system is absolutely amazing," maintains Jack Stiles, a student activities advisor for the University of Tennessee at Knoxville.

Stiles maintains the "video center" is a bargain because the service, besides a few "minor adjustments" to the auditorium, is free to the school.

Freeman says CN installs and pays for the $60,000 worth of equipment -- including satellite dish, projector, screen and sound system -- it takes to send its programs to the schools at which it will operate.

It hopes to make back its investment and make its profits through ticket sales on the campuses and by selling ads on its programs.

"We are looking for ways to minimize the costs to students.

We keep that in mind because many of us are not long out of school," Freeman explains.

"The ability to get entertainment to our students here in rural USA attracted us in becoming an affiliate," says University of Idaho student union director Dean Vetrus.

He also looks forward to using the system to stage conferences. "Our farmers could talk to people in Washington."

Also, unlike CEN, CN isn't wholly dependent on its video shows for its survival.

The company also runs National College television, which supplies programming to campus tv stations.

NCTV, started in January 1984, offers six programs ranging from cartoons to documentaries and two-minute news spots, which are aired by college stations five times a week.

Advertisers pay for the satellite-transmitted programs, which are free to the campus stations.

"We saw that many schools had their own channel, but they needed more programming," Freeman recalls.

"More than 125 schools, attended by a total of 1.4 million students, now subscribe to NCTV. "Things are looking better than ever. We are increasing affiliates each week," Freeman contends.

NCTV brings in the bulk of Campus Network's revenue for now, but the long range plan is to make the video centers "the major profit center," Freeman says.

SPORTS.....

HAWKS SLUMP; THEN RECOVER

by Matt Shanklin

The UNCW baseball team didn't have the most enjoyable spring break. Just before the break, the 'Hawks posted an emotional come from behind victory against the Tar Heels of North Carolina to raise their record to 2-2. UNCW then hit the road for seven games in which they were treated very rudely, posting a 2-5 record.

The first stop, Mar. 1st, was a doubleheader with Augusta. Pitcher Kenny King won the first game, pitching six innings and giving up just one earned run. Junior Wesley Currin came in to pick up his second save in the 'Hawks 4-3 win. In the second game, Curtis Hopper pitched a complete game helping UNCW to a 10-3 win.

The next day, the sun didn't shine too brightly on the Seahawks. South Carolina-Aiken pounded UNCW pitching for 12 runs and 16 hits en route to a 12-1 whitewash. The pitching wasn't any better the next day as the Seahawks returned to Augusta to take an 18-2 beating.

UNCW then moved on to Charlotte to take on the 49er's of UNCC. UNCC broke an early 1-1 tie in the third inning on a lead off homerun by Darwin Parks, five straight walks and a grand slam homerun by Jeff Shore, leading the 49er's to a 9-5 win. The next day, the 'Hawks played better, but couldn't seem to put together nine innings of good pitching.

Senior Curtis Hopper took the hill with a perfect 2-0 record and 13 straight innings of not giving up an earned run. The Hawks took an early 3-0 lead on a walk and three consecutive hits, capped by Bobby Reynold's two-run single. Hopper stretched his streak to 16 innings of not giving up an earned run, but could not continue it past that. UNCC exploded for four runs, highlighted by Darwin Parks two-run homer. UNCW only trailed 7-6 going into the eighth inning, but the pitching faltered again, giving up eight runs. The final score was 15-6 and the 'Hawks couldn't wait to get back to the friendly confines of Brooks Field. One game remained before they could do that, Atlantic Coast Conference member Wake Forest would host the Seahawks.

UNCW ace Kenny King took the mound against the Demon Deacons of Wake Forest and was pounded for 11 runs on 13 hits. The offense tried to keep the Seahawks close, led by junior Chuck Jones, who went two for four with a homerun and two batted in; but couldn't manage enough runs to defeat Wake forest. The Final Again, Wake forest 11 UNCW 8.

Finally the Seahawks were home but not before their record had slipped to 4-7 their main problem was still pitching and it had to improve if the 'Hawks were to stop their five game losing streak. Their next opponent was the Bulldogs of Atlantic Christian. UNCW took their anguish of spring break out on the Bulldogs by whalloping them 19-3, led by senior catcher Eric Hall's four hits, including a grand slam and seven rbi's.

Pitching wasn't the problem the next day as Eric Hichman threw seven innings giving up just three runs, but the offense was wasted the day before and the 'Hawks couldn't rally in the ninth with the bases loaded, losing to Rhode Island 3-2.

UNCW cold rally the next day (Mar. 9) coming up with three runs in the bottom of the ninth to beat Wake Forest 4-3 and avenge their earlier loss to the Demon Deacons. On Monday (Mar. 10), the Seahawks found the offense again, collecting 12 hits and 14 runs en route to a 14-1 crushing of the Rams. The Seahawks were led by Kenny Kings four-hit pitching and Mitch Wells three hits--including a double and a triple--and two stolen bases.

UNCW record stands at 7-8 going into the final game with Rhode Island on Tues. (Mar. 11). The Seahawks will play Colonial Athletic Association foe American in a three game series the weekend of March 15 & 16 before taking on nationally ranked Old Dominion in Norfolk Mar. 18 & 19.

Navy game. Gibson praised the area medias for what he said "would have been blowing up the situation. The players should be allowed to work things like that out by themselves. I realize my position is in the public eye and I can expect criticism." Gibson felt the time for criticism should come after the season is over.

BASKETBALL STARTS NEW ERA

by Joe Pressley

At 2:00 p.m. on March 18th, the UNCW basketball program embarked on a new era with the resignation of Mel Gibson as head coach. Athletic Director Bill Brooks stated, "It was a surprise at this time, but has been discussed for two or three years." Mel Gibson had been UNCW basketball coach since 1972, and unnoticed by many people, he had three consecutive 17 wins seasons. (1977-79) Gibson had been under heavy criticism the past few seasons, but in the press conference stated that he realizes coaching is open to public criticism. Gibson will fill the newly created assistant Athletic Director position in charge of business affairs.

The door is now open for the selection of a new coach. Brooks said he will meet with Chancellor Wagoner Monday, who will appoint the selection committee. Brooks emphasized that there will be many applicants, and do not be surprised to see big names applying. A deadline of April 5 has been established in selecting a new coach.

Brooks sees the move as having no adverse effects on the program, but will of course have some impact. He feels they will be for the best. Also, he stated that basketball coaches will not teach classes next year, giving them more time to concentrate on recruiting and other duties as coach.

UNCW has closed a chapter in its basketball history and continued growth in the program is expected. The next few weeks will be crucial in the development of this new chapter.

BOY'S CHOIR PROMISES TREAT

UNCW NEWS BUREAU

From classical to gospel, from popular music to jazz, The Boys Choir of Harlem promises to be a musical treat for the community. They will perform in concert at 8 p.m., Tuesday, March 18, in Kenan Auditorium on the campus of UNC-Wilmington.

Admission is $2 for UNCW students with I.D., and $3 for the general public. The concert is sponsored by the Arts and Lectures Committee of the University Program Board.

Founded in 1968, the Boys Choir of Harlem has achieved world-class stature—with audiences in Paris, Tokyo, Amsterdam and elsewhere abroad—and in New York City, Atlanta, Boston, and on all important stages along the Atlantic Seaboard, including the White House.

The choir includes young people between the ages of 9 and 17, offering them the opportunity to realize their creative potential through the performance of various kinds of music. In addition to music, the singers are given counseling, tutoring and recreations activities designed to help in the total development of the child.

Conducted by Dr. Walter J. Turnbull, the Boys Choir of Harlem will perform selections by Johann S. Bach, Mozart, gospel songs such as "An American Trilogy" by Grier/Everson and "Mary was the Queen of Galilee" arranged by Wendell Whalum, and "Take the 'A' Train" by Ellington/Strayhorn.

ALLEGED NEGATIVISM HALTS RECOMMENDATION

COLLEGE PRESS SERVICE

Depending on how the U.S. Supreme Court rules this spring, professors around the country may stop writing recommendation letters for students, some lawyers say.

The court will hear arguments this spring on the case of Andrew Burt, who claims University of Nebraska Medical Prof. John Connolly's "negative" recommendation defamed him.

At issue is whether Burt can sue Connolly in Colorado, where Burt now lives.

Forcing professors to shoulder the expense of traveling to defend the recommendations they write could discourage or simply prevent them from writing references in the future, some officials say.

100 one contests what was in the letter.

When Burt applied for a job as an orthopedic surgeon at a Colorado hospital, it asked former teacher Connolly to write a reference letter.

In response, Connolly wrote Burt's performance at Nebraska was "well below average," and advised he should not be hired in orthopedic surgery.

Connolly did add Burt "might serve adequately" in some other health field.

Burt left Nebraska in 1977 for California before looking for work in Colorado in 1981. He sued Connolly that year, claiming the professor defamed him in the letter to the hospital.

Connolly's lawyers claimed Colorado was the wrong jurisdiction, and that the case had to be thrown out unless it was filed in Nebraska, where Burt did his residency.

The case, turning on the jurisdiction issue instead of the defamation issue, finally made it up to the U.S. Supreme Court this year.

"What happens if a faculty member is hailed to Alaska?" wonders University of Nebraska General Counsel Richard Wood.

"We would have to hire counsel up there."

Leaving a state to defend oneself "would present a tremendous burden on the defendant," adds Marilyn Mintz of the American Association of University Professors in writing reference letters.

Burt declined to comment on the case, and his attorney, Robert Dyer, did not return reporters' phone calls.

Connolly's attorney, Thomas L. Roberts, says the professor merely was performing a professional duty by responding to the hospital's request and, therefore, had minimal contact with Colorado.

Furthermore, since Connolly wasn't paid for writing the letter, he had no economic relationship with the state, Roberts says.

A federal district court in Colorado agreed with Roberts' argument, but the 10th Circuit Court of Appeals reversed the decision in Burt's favor.

Of their chances for victory this spring when the Supreme Court hears the case, Roberts believes "I think we have a good chance of reversal."

However, the process has not been cheap.

Roberts estimates the cost of defending Connolly will run "in the tens of thousands of dollars. The cost of litigation is extremely high."

Nebraska's insurance will foot the bill.

"You don't see many lawsuits like this, and, hopefully, you won't see many in the future," Woods says.

RECORD REVIEW

BY MARK GRIFITHS

EXPLODING WHITE MICE- IN A NEST OF VIPERS

Okay campers, get ready for this week's babbling on about more new and obscure stuff. These guys are one of the many new talents to surface from Down Under. EXPLODING WHITE MICE have a raw garage rock appeal reminiscent of some early REPLACEMENTS. And like all garage bands, a cover song is in order. Their choice being "Pipeline". This version makes the once loud and fast version by AGENT ORANGE seem like bedtime at the geriatric ward. They do a song, "Dangerous" that immediately brings to mind the DEAD KENNEDYS old anthem "To Drunk To..." There is a question as to what is really brewing in Australia besides qualla bears, sunbats, and fosters lager. "Burning Red" is a little slower but definitely not elevator music and shows that even a band with a name like EXPLODING WHITE MICE can be versatile. Let The Kids Dance" is a little ditty with simple lyrics proving that whether anyone will admit it everyone listens to the RAMONES. Could they (EWN) have derived their name from the RAMONES' movie ROCK'N'ROLL HIGH SCHOOL that has, you guessed it exploding white mice when exposed to the RAMONES. Are you listening? Do you care? Anyway, thumbs up from this end of the pen.

REBELS AND INFIDELS- COPORATE PICNIC

I've held back but here it goes, my Hardcore review. The cover is worth mentioning, the band sitting in a large urban rubble, a hint of what's to come. This is classic hacked off youth talking about problems of the world. "War Games" says the government has all these soldiers and nothing to do. Bag hockey let's play war games. They attack major issues all around. On side one war, communism, useless violence, and corporate conformity. "Rebels And Infidels" says "Don't switch your blade, don't trigger your gun, don't swing your chain, you got'em - use your brains." Not bad advice. The music could be from any Hardcore band but the lyrics stand alone in good light. Not too bad. See you next week.

Thalian Presents Programs

Doc Watson and Gamble Rogers will appear in historic Thalian Hall on Friday, March 21 at 7:00p.m. and 9:30p.m.

The Thalian Hall Commission is presenting the concerts and is delighted to have two such fine performers together. Proceeds from these concerts will go to the further development of Thalian Hall as a center for the performing arts.

Doc Watson, recipient of the 1985 North Carolina prize which is given each year by the New York Times to an outstanding artist of North Carolina, is a native of this state. Doc is widely known as a genius of the flat pick style of guitar playing. His unique style and warmth have endeared him to audiences everywhere; his pure, strong voice and individual interpretation of traditional folk, gospel, bluegrass, popular, and blues music is brilliant.

Gamble Rogers is acclaimed as a master of the Travis-style finger picking guitar. The combination of his musical ability and his philosophical humor delights audiences everywhere from Carnegie Hall to Thalian Hall.

Don't miss this exciting evening. For further information and reservations call 763-3398, the Thalian Hall Box Office. Visa and Mastercard accepted.

Indian Culture Presented

The Museum of World Cultures at the University of North Carolina at Wilmington will sponsor a program titled "Native Americans in North Carolina: Past and Present" at 8 p.m., Wednesday, March 19, in Randall Library Auditorium on the campus of UNCW.

The free program will feature presentations by Dr. Walter Conser, visiting assistant professor of philosophy and religion, and Dr. Patricia Lerch, associate professor of sociology and anthropology.

Conser, who teaches American religious history, will discuss the Cherokee, focusing in particular on this year's marking the 150th anniversary of the forced removal of Cherokees from the Eastern United States, known as the "Trail of Tears." Lerch will examine current issues facing native Americans, looking at the Waccamaw Sioan Indians as well as the Lumbees, among others.

In conjunction with the presentation, the Museum of World Cultures will feature an exhibit on native Americans in the display cases in the second floor lobby of Randall Library.

AT THE ### QUICKSILVER SLOW PACED

by Marci Smith

Jack(Kevin Bacon) is a young genius stockbroker who loses everything in 30 million dollars in one day. He quits the market, gets a bicycle and becomes a messenger boy for the company, Quicksilver. He also tries to protect Terry(Jami Gertz), to whom he is attracted, from a drug dealer by the name of Gypsy(Rudy Ramos).

The script is often unclear. For example, you do not know exactly why Jack refuses to go back to the stockmarket, or why one of the messengers is killed. Perhaps he is trying to regain his courage after losing all his and his parent's money. Bacon plays his character as a guy who can survive in the slums or uptown New York, but seems to prefer the honesty and ambition of the slums, which he has lost. Both Terry and Jack are out to prove something, to the world which threw them a curve, but the viewer is never exactly sure of what it is the characters are trying to accomplish. Maybe they are trying to prove their worth to each other and society, considering how neither one wants help from anyone.

The most interesting scenes are the bicycle-break-dancing, where the stunts seem to defy the laws of gravity, but it still is not interesting enough to save the movie. Overall "Quicksilver's" plot dragged because the viewer is not given enough background information to fill in the whys and whats of the movie and the characters.

"Free Ride" Uses College Setting To Reveal Plot

"FREE RIDE," an outrageous new comedy-adventure from galaxy International Releasing, Inc., opened at select theatres and drives throughout the area on Friday, March 7th.

"FREE RIDE," rated R, concerns coeds, cars, crooks and $250,000 in cold cash. When the boys of Monroe Prep unwittingly become involved with mobsters that implicate the school's Dean and kidnap a faculty member and a coed, the students rally to save their school with hilarious warfare tactics.

"FREE RIDE" stars some of the entertainment industry's brightest new talents, including Gary Hershberger ("Paradise Motel," "Inside Adam Swift") and Dom De Luise's son, Peter ("Hot Stuff").

Also in the "FREE RIDE" cast are such veterans as Warren Berlinger ("The World According To Garp," "Cannonball"); Frank Campanella ("Flamingo Kid," "Heaven Can Wait"); and, Mamie Van Doren, in her first motion picture role in over 16 years.

Directed by Tom Trbovich ("We Are The World" video, 175 episodes of "Midnight Special"), "FREE RIDE" is produced by Tom Boutross and Bassem Abdallah from a screenplay by Ronald Z. Wang, Lee Fulkerson and Robert Bell, based on an original story by Ronald Z. Wang. Executive Producer is Moustapha Akkad.

NCSU TRIP GOES SOUTH OF THE BORDER

The Department of Foreign Languages and Literatures at North Carolina State University is sponsoring its fifth summer study program in Mexico July 2-30.

The program is designed for college and university students and public school teachers who want to increase or acquire competence in speaking Spanish. Participants may earn up to six academic credits. The trip will begin with a four-day tour of Mexico City's cultural and historic sights. Participants will then travel to Cuernavaca where they will attend classes for five hours a day.

While in Cuernavaca they will live with Mexican families, giving participants unique opportunities to learn the language and culture.

The final five days of the program will be spent in Acapulco. Cost of the study program, including ground-trip airfare from Raleigh, room, board, tuition and hotel accommodations, will be about $1,600 (subject to changes in exchange rates and airfare).

Deadline for completed applications and deposits is March 15. For more information, write Dr. Ruth A. Adler, NCSU Mexico Summer Program, Foreign Languages and Literatures, P.O. Box 8106, NCSU, Raleigh, N.C. 27695-8106; or call (919) 737-2475 or (919) 737-2925.

Trend May Stand the Test of Time

by Erica Bishop

Time to wear two or three watches at a time, according to some students wandering the UNCW halls. One of the more off-beat trends ravaging our Wilmington coast this season is to wear more than one watch.

Advertisements for the very popular watches, Swatch, has provoked many of our students into following the implied suggestion of the ad: don't just wear one Swatch when you can wear them all. Swatches range greatly in styles and colors, from conservative one color watches to outlandish multicolors with see-thru faces. Some students aren't content with wearing just three or so watches, but also throw on some plastic gummy bracelets and maybe a few gold or silver chains. With all the new types of watches coming out that look like Swatches, students have an extremely large selection of styles and colors to choose from. The watches can range in price from $40.00 to $120.00 and can be bought almost anywhere.

And, who knows, maybe having three or more watches to an arm will help students get places on time, but it's doubtful. And as the old saying goes: "A man with one watch always knows what time it is, a man with two is never quite sure."

STUDENT'S MAY RATHER SNOOZE THAN DATE

COLLEGE PRESS SERVICE

It doesn't have much to do with their high-living image, but college students probably prefer sleeping to dating, a new Levi Strauss Co. survey of collegiate attitudes has found.

Dating, in fact, was only students' sixth-favorite activity.

Attending parties topped the survey of student preferences.

"Partying is definitely a verb on campus," says Julie Boyle, a company spokeswoman.

Of the more than 6,500 students surveyed, 70 percent listed partying as one of their five favorite activities.

Listening to records came in second, with 63 percent of those questioned rating it as one of their favorite pastimes.

Sleeping was third, with 56 percent, followed by going to movies and eating.

Only 42 percent of the respondents said dating was a favorite activity.

There were, of course, regional differences in extracurricular tastes. Students in the East and South, for example, felt dating was more important than did Midwestern and Western students.

Only about a third of the Westerners listed dating as a favorite pastime.

Levi Strauss calls the study its "501 Survey" because the company is researching why traditional jeans are gaining favor again on campuses, Boyle explains.

In fact, "jeans are more popular than ever with college students," Boyle says, adding students who have jeans wear them 75 percent of the time.

Company executives theorize singer Bruce Springsteen may be partially responsible for keeping jeans so popular on campuses, Boyle adds.

The study, Boyle says, "gives the company an overview of the habits of consumers. Students are a prime target (market) for our jeans."

swore they saw something last fall that they still can't forget. Explained Bret "We weren't serious about it but we heard something in the woods and turned around. It was across the lake and looked like a puff of smoke but it didn't move like smoke." Jay thought it was some friends playing a prank on them but nobody else was around. "I've never been more scared."

On February 26 me and some friends decided to give it a try. I gathered up all the things that I thought a ghost might like and we all headed out to Arlie Gardens about midnight. We tried to contact the ghost twice but failed. A friend even brought along a camera just in case. Although it was scary, she was not to be seen on that night.

I'm sure some of you think there's no such thing as ghosts but you would be surprised at some of those who do. States Prof. Byington of UNCW, "When thousands of normal people, not connected in any way, describe consistent events over and over, it's hard not to believe."

Maybe you should go see the Arlie Gardens ghost. People say she's out there. The next time you see something that you think is only your imagination or hear something strange in the night maybe you should think again.

UNCW NEWS BUREAU

The History Department and the Historical Society of UNCW will present two special programs.

On Monday, March 24, at 8:00 p.m., there will be a lecture and piano recital in King Auditorium by Professors Carole and Seymour Fink entitled "WHEN MUSIC BECAME GERMAN: The Age of Mozart and Beethoven, 1778-1810."

Dr. Carole Fink, Professor of History at UNCW, will trace the historical, cultural, and social background of the extraordinary achievements of German composers and performers in the 18th and 19th centuries. Professor Seymour Fink, Head of the Piano Faculty at the State University of New York at Binghamton, will perform Mozart's Sonata in C Major, K. 330 and Beethoven's Sonata in E-Flat Major, Opus 81am two representative keyboard works of the Classical and early Romantic periods.

Also on Thursday, March 27, 7:30p.m., they will present a lecture by Prof. Hermann Wellenreuther, of the University of Göttingen in West Germany. Prof. Wellenreuther, who is a specialist in English and American history, will speak on the topic "Relations as Well as Tenants: Agrarian Societies and Representative Systems in England and Virginia in the Eighteenth Century." The lecture will be held in Bryan Auditorium of Morton Hall.

Both of these programs are free and open to the public.

CONCERT HAS VARIETY

UNCW NEWS BUREAU

MATINEE MUSICALS: AN AFTERNOON OF CHAMBER MUSIC will be held in Thalian Hall, Sunday, April 13, 1986, 3 p.m. The program offers a wide variety of musical styles and combinations of instruments, featuring Richard Deas, piano; Clayton Callaway, clarinet; Jane Mathew, soprano; Sherrill Martin, piano; Jamal Rossi, saxophone; and Pamela Rossi, piano. The performers are a combination of faculty members of the University of North Carolina at Wilmington's Creative Arts Department and professional musicians from the Cape Fear area. Music ranging from the classical (Schubert's "The Shepherd on the Rock," the piano Fantasy in F minor, and other selections) to the Romantic (Rachmaninoff) to the Contemporary (Poulenc, Rush) will provide an ever-changing palette of sounds to the listener.

Tickets are available at the Thalian Hall box office (763-3398) and at the door. Tickets are $6, Adults, $4, Students; or by season ticket. MATINEE MUSICALS is the only chamber music concert in this year's THALIAN HALL CONCERT SERIES.

Richard Deas, a native of Birmingham, Alabama, has been professor of piano at UNCW since arriving in Wilmington in 1970.

He studied music at the University of New Mexico and at Juillard School of Music, where he studied with Lonny Epstein. Following work with Frank Glazer, he presented a program of Schubert sonatas in Carnegie Recital Hall.

Jamal J. Rossi is currently teaching woodwind instruments and directing the jazz studies program at UNCW. A graduate of Ithaca College and the University of Michigan, Mr. Rossi is currently completing his Doctor of Music degree from the Eastman School of Music in Rochester, New York. His former teachers include Dr. Raimon Ricker, Donald Sinta and Dr. Steven Mauk.

Pamela Rossi, also a graduate of Ithaca College, is currently teaching Suzuki piano and oboe in the Wilmington area. She is a registered Suzuki teacher, and has served on the faculty of Daemen College in Buffalo, New York.

Assistant Professor of Voice and Piano at UNCW, Jane Mathew holds degrees from the University of Nebraska, the University of Iowa, and Indiana University. Performing extensively both in solo recital and with orchestra, Ms. Mathew was a finalist in the Music Teachers National Association Young Artist Competition and a district winner in the Iowa Metropolitan Opera Auditions. During 1984-85, Ms. Mathew performed a guest faculty recital at the University of Nebraska-Lincoln, voice-oboe recitals in Wilmington and Greenville, North Carolina, and the soprano solos in Bach's St.

Mathew Passion.

Callaway has been a member of the Wilmington Symphony Orchestra for five years. A native Atlantian, he studied there under the late Charles Bradley and then Ignatius Gennusa, as a student at the Brevard Music Center. A graduate of Emory University, he is a physician with Wilmington Ear, Nose and Throat Associates.

Ms. Martin, an associate professor at UNCW, teaches music history, piano and organ. She has held state and national offices in the Music Teachers National Association and is currently musicology editor for the American Music Teacher magazine. She received the Award of Merit from the National Federation of Music Clubs for her contributions to American music, and is listed in two international Who's Who directories. She received her doctorate in musicology from UNC-Chapel Hill.

RUN-OFF DECIDES ELECTION

by Woody Guthrie

In an election that had to be decided by a run-off, B. Allan Dudley became UNCW's Student Body President for the coming year. Dudley's 288 votes in the general election left him one shy of victory on the first ballot, and by not having the clear majority over contenders James C. Moore and Heidi A. Berge, a run-off became necessary.

Just under 10% of the Student Body voted making this a stronger voting year than the past three years 3% average. Part of the reason could be the campaign vigour of the candidates standing outside the University Union the day of elections. (See photos at right.)

In another position decided by a run-off, K. Allan Daniel won the Vice-Presidents position over James Earl Jones.

In elections decided on the general election day, Jeffrey Clark becomes Chief Justice and the new Attorney General is John Middleton. Representatives-at-large will be Patricia Toal, Gina Smith, Kim McDaniel, Lee King, Kim Alston, Max Perkins, Steven Signorelli and Beth Ruffe.

PROBLEMS AHEAD FOR STUDENTS

College Press Service

Last week, Guaranteed Student Loans (GSLs) abruptly got more expensive for students.

Also, colleges around the country suddenly found themselves with millions of dollars less to spend on all kinds of research, library books and even dorm construction.

And 636 Kansas State students who normally would get Pell Grants for next year suddenly became ineligible.

The boom that was lowered on them, as well as all American students, came from the new Gramm-Rudman-Hollings law, which imposed immediate cutbacks of most federal programs effective March 1. The law, if it survives a U.S. Supreme Court decision later this spring, will force even bigger cuts in federal college programs in August.

"It's just a drop in the bucket compared to what will come," laments Joe Franklin, Purdue's director of government relations.

The March cuts amounted to "4.3 percent this year," reports Pat Smith, of the American Council on Education in Washington, D.C.

The College Work Study, National Direct Student Loan, Supplemental Educational Opportunity Grant and the State Student Incentive Grant programs were cut by $209 million this month.

And colleges now have $154 million less than expected to distribute in Pell Grant funds.

The Guaranteed Student Loan program won't be cut this year, though, thanks to a related law, students now have to come up with an extra $12.50 for a GSL loan origination fee.

Students should start feeling the pinch in the next few weeks, aid directors say, as they begin to learn how much aid they can get for the school year starting next fall.

"We have 636 students out of a Pell Grant population of 4,312 who will probably lose their eligibility," Kansas State aid director Bob Evans estimates.

Evans calculates his school will lose $878,000 in Pell funds this year, plus $331,000 in other federal student aid programs.

Students who are higher than 1201 on a Pell eligibility index will probably lose their grants, Evans figures.

The index is based on a number of criteria including family income, cost of tuition and other aid.

Another 3,500 students will get less Pell Grant money. Only 176 students will be spared some sort of cut, he adds.

About 550 students at Cal-Santa Cruz may be cut off of aid this year by Gramm-Rudman, says aid director Kathleen Little.

She thinks the cuts may leave Santa Cruz some $4.3 million short of meeting its students' needs by the end of the 1986-87 school year.

At relatively wealthy Dartmouth, about 60 will suffer cuts of some kind.

But at Xavier University, a traditionally black college that is highly dependent on Pell Grants, the cuts could double the institution's debt.

"If the cuts come down the way we have been hearing, we could be in some very serious trouble," says Calvin Tregre, Xavier's aid director.

"It's very frustrating being in a helping profession and not being able to help," sighs Santa Cruz's Little.

"We will try to fill in for those students who lose their Pell by providing as much as we can" from limited institutional aid, she adds.

Rather than replace the $80,000 in Pell Grant funds it lost last week with other money, Dartmouth aid director Robert Jaycox wants to get strapped students angry enough to protest the cuts to Washington.

"It's what I call creative outrage," he says.

Colleges also lost about $58 million in research grants last week, the National Science Foundation estimates.

"If the U.S. needs to live by its wits, it needs to invest in research," complains Jim Infante, dean of the Institute of Technology at the University of Minnesota.

His institute just lost about $1 million of its $25 million in federal funds.

"There is no magic substitute for losses of federal funds," adds Minnesota medical school's Associate Dean H. M. Cavert, whose school may also lose about $1 million.

The medical school is one of the top 10 recipients of federal aid for medical research in the country, he notes.

The University of Missouri at Columbia's agricultural research program has lost $600,000, estimates finance officer Kent Shelton.

The cuts, he says, will cripple a university effort to control a worm infestation that potentially could wreck the state's entire soybean industry.

The new cuts threaten about 15 percent of the University of Washington's library acquisitions budget, says UW spokeswoman Nancy Baker.

SCHWEITZER AWARDS BENEFIT

UNCW NEWS BUREAU

Four artists intimately tied to Wilmington and North Carolina will star in the third Albert Schweitzer Medals for Artistry Concerts at 8 p.m., Monday April 7, Tuesday April 8, and Wednesday April 9 at historic St. Mary's Catholic Church. Proceeds from this Azalea Festival benefit concert help to fund the Albert Schweitzer International Prizes which are awarded every four years on the campus of The University of North Carolina at Wilmington.

Because of previous heavy demand for tickets and a two-hour sell-out time for last year's concert, organizers decided to make 500 more tickets available by adding a second full dress performance. This was done so that the concerts could continue at St. Mary's Catholic Church rather than move from this historic setting to a larger arena.

This year's Schweitzer Concerts will feature two artists performing individually on piano, a trumpeter performing the classics, and a brilliant young violinist hailed by critics as a child prodigy. Pageantry surrounding the event will include the U.S. Marine Corps Trumpeters in full dress who will open the concert by parading down the church's central aisle blowing the flag-draped King Arthur trumpet.

Church bells throughout New Hanover County will ring before the concert. Organ music will be provided before the concert by Michael G. Regan, organist/choralemaster at Queen Street United Methodist Church in Kinston.

taught piano in the Wilmington area for 56 years. Many of her pupils have pursued careers in music. In addition to being active in many professional music organizations, she served for several summers as chairman of the Junior Division for the Loren Withers Piano Workshop at Duke University.

The evening of musical spectacle will also feature Wilmington native Dr. Emerson Head performing on trumpet. Head is considered one of the foremost classical trumpet artists in the country. His appearance is through special arrangements with the University of Maryland music department where Head has taught trumpet since 1962. Head has had an impressive career as a trumpet soloist, recitalist, teacher, clinician, conductor and orchestral performer. He is best known as a soloist, having performed in over 30 states, playing in many of the major symphony halls and receiving the highest critical acclaim.

Back by popular demand to perform only his second recital in more than 26 years will be Dr. Robert V. Fulk, Jr., who was a 1985 Medal for Artistry recipient. Fulk began piano instruction in Wilmington with teachers Agnes Chasten and Mary Eunice Troy then continued piano studies at The University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. During the 1956-57 season of the N.C. Symphony Orchestra, he was a guest soloist. Now a Wilmington physician as well as an accomplished pianist, Fulk has continued private piano studies for more than 30 years.

Bringing particular excitement to this year's program will be 19-year-old violinist Nicholas Kitchen of Durham and Philadelphia. A third-year student at the Curtis Institute of Music in Philadelphia, Kitchen performed in February 1985 at Carnegie Hall and has made many appearances in the Triangle area, at N.C. State University's Stewart Theatre, and with the Raleigh Civic Symphony. He was recently honored with the Durham Arts Council's Emerging Artist Award. Kitchen will perform on a violin that belonged to violin legend Efrem Zimbalist, who with Mary Curtis founded the Curtis Institute, a totally scholarship institution for young musicians.

Troy, Head and Kitchen were selected to perform and to receive the second Albert Schweitzer Medals for Artistry because of their acclaimed musical accomplishments. The overwhelming financial success of last year's concert, only the second classical concert in the Azalea Festival's 39-year history, dictated a continuation of concerts of this nature.

For the 1986 concert, organizers decided to again feature artists with strong ties to North Carolina. Now the Schweitzer benefit concerts feature the world's foremost artists.

Tickets go on sale Thursday, March 13 at the Azalea Festival ticket office, Long Leaf Mall on a first come, first served basis. Patron tickets for the Tuesday and Wednesday evening performances and medal presentations cost $65. Patronships include invitations to the following: A Southern barbecue luncheon at historic Orton Plantation and admittance to the concert followed by a buffet reception. The owners of the Orton Gardens which will be in full bloom.

A limited number of non-patron tickets will be available for $20 for the Tuesday and Wednesday performances.

THE ADVENTURES OF ALEX &amp; NASTASIA

In my infamous column on the immortal cockroach, I mentioned two cats, Alexander and Nastasia.

For those of you who need filling in (because you were doing something unimportant like going to class or studying instead of reading my column), Nastasia and Alex are my two cockroach destroying cats.

Of course, they do things other than kill cockroaches for fun and profit. For instance, Nastasia's morning habits.

I am one of those people who cannot motivate or even raise myself above the lowest stages of evolution without my cup of coffee in the morning.

Many's the morning I have staggered into my kitchen, clawed my way to the coffee pot and immediately had a set of filed talons sink into my bare back, making eight parallel incisions as Nastasia leaped from the refrigerator to say good morning. The Rambo's scare are nothing compared to this.

She also joins me in the shower, sitting just out of reach of the spray so she can watch the water going down the drain.

Nastasia came to me one fine November morning when she was barely away from her mother.

I had missed my aerobics class because the power steering went out on my Cadillac. I had called a friend before class and asked her if she would be a wonderful person and pick me up afterwards, since I had no ideas when my car would be fixed.

When she pulled up, I saw a white ball of fur sticking up from the top of her warmup suit. As I sat down in the car, she handed me a thin white kitten and uttered the words

"don't you just love her! bet you'll take her."

Of course I did. Never have been able to resist a baby kitten. Heck, I've never been able to resist ababy mongoose.

For quite some time she was the only cat in my life. All that changed one fateful night in late December.

I had gone to a friend's pigpickin' and we were standing around outside when this big black persian came up to me and said (in such a pitiful voice) "Mraaow?" just before jumping into my lap and begging for attention.

The cat had been hanging around for days, my friend said, and if I didn't take him home his father was going to shoot him (the cat, that is).

Alexander the not-so-great looked up at me and gave a quiet, "Raa?" and I put him in the car.

After $88 of surgery on a badly infected foot, Alexander's personality began to show through. Seems he had been on his own for so long that the only way he had eaten was out of bags of trash. Of course, the moment he caught sight of a big trash bag in my kitchen he attacked it with a fervor, shredding the plastic and throwing trash everywhere.

When he didn't find anything in the bag good to eat, he looked up at me and gave me a very accusatory "RAAOW!", as if to say, how dare you not leave anything edible in here. You just can't seem to get a good human these days.

For over a month, the only way Alexander would eat was out of a trash bag.

He virtually refused kity chow until I gave in and put a dishful in a brown paper bag for him. He sniffed, then settled down with a contented purr to wolf his way through the meal.

When he was finished, he shredded the bag into tiny pieces of fiber. Then he look at me as if to say, why didn't you do this before, stupid?

No matter how haughty he is around men, Alex is definitely a southern gentleman among felines.

He will soften in an instant at the sight of a lady.

He will climb into her lap and put his paws around her neck, purring like Rolls Royce. After a hug and a few kisses, he will proceed to knead his paws up and down, eyes dreamily half closed, his purr intensifying.

I must explain in the kneading process.

Alexander is the first cat I have ever met that will work all four feet up an down, flexing and relaxing his claws as they dig into your lap ever so slightly.

Ouch. Alex has ruined many a pair of hose in his time, along with several silk skirts, much to the chagrin of my ladyfriends.

Alex also has the habit of crunching cockroaches at his every opportunity. He loves them. Absolutely loves them.

Both my cats love to ride in the car, which is good when you think about the number of miles I drive every week.

Alex has a tendency to wrap himself around my shoulders, purring to beat the band.

Nastasia will sit on my left shoulder and paw at the traffic as it flows past.

They make great travelling companions - they don't mind country music, they don't spill drinks, and they sure don't backseat drive.

When the last time you met a person with those qualities?

TODAY'S COLLEGE REPUBLICAN

Mickey Gahagan

Virtually every poll conducted in the area of university student views recently has shown a firm majority of college students consider themselves conservative and support President Reagan and the policies of his administration. These polls are a sharp contrast to the college students of the 1960's. There are several marked differences in today's mostly conservative college students and the 1960's liberal students:

1. We bahe
2. We shave
3. We graduate
4. We get jobs
5. We cut our hair
6. We comb our hair
7. We respect our elders
8. We eat meat
9. We support our Armed Forces

10. We don't wear leather sandals

11. We don't have "sit-ins"

12. We don't have second homes in Canada

13. We don't even know what LSD stands for (and don't care)

14. We don't let ourselves be swayed by liberal academia

15. We are proud to be Americans and celebrate the greatness of our country rather than running it into the ground.

If we take a look at some of the big name liberals of the 60's we find Abbie Hoffman selling donuts in New Jersey after failing on the college speaker circuit.

Most of Ralph Nader's PIRG's have been facing defunding on campuses across the nation and other famous liberals are still trying to get their undergraduate degrees. The rest of the sixties liberals and probably bitter social science professors, campus ministers, health food store owners, EPA staffers, KGB agents, paid protestors at Lafayette Park or unemployed.

College students today are ready to face the challenges of the 21st century as were the few conservatives of the 60's who were drowning in a sea of trendy liberalism.

America learned its lesson from the 60's era (even though we reverted back in 1976 with the Jimmy Carter mistake) and have elected the likes of Jesse Helms, Jack Kemp, Newt Gingrich, Phil Crane and President Reagan who are leading America to a prouder, stronger, better future.

STILLPOINT

by BobHaywood
Campus Ministry

As I sit here an incredible game of "I dare you" is unfolding around an imaginary line off the gulf of Sidra off Libya. At the same time the groundwork is being laid for increasing military opposition to the government of Nicaragua and many of us are concerned about a new Viet Nam in our hemisphere. It is scary. The machinery of war seems to be winding up to take on all corners.

In this post Easter week, filled, as I am, with the images of crucifixion and resurrection, I am mindful of another power that is loose in this world - the power of God's love. I must admit that I find much more personal comfort and sense of personal security in the one who took on the power structure of his own people, the military backed power of Rome represented by Pontius Pilate the pwer of death itself, only to emerge victorious.

Let me share with you a poem written by an anonymous author that might help us to reflect on power and where it is we might best turn in our search for security and hope.

He was born in an obscure village the child of a peasant woman.
He grew up in still another village, where he worked in a carpenter shop until he was 30.
Then for three years he was an itinerant preacher.

He never wrote a book.
He never held an office.
He never had a family or owned a house.
He didn't go to college.
He never traveled 200 miles from the place he was born.
He did none of things one usually associates with greatness.
He had no credentials but himself.
He was only 33 when public opinion turned against him.
His friends ran away.
He was turned over to his enemies and went through the mockery of a trial.
He was nailed to the cross between two thieves.
While he was dying, his executioners gambled for his clothing, the only property he had on earth.
When he was dead, he was laid in a borrowed grave through the pity of a friend.
Nineteen centuries have come and gone, and today he is the central figure of the human race, the leader of mankind's progress.
All the armies that ever marched, all the navies that ever sailed, all the periments that ever set, all the kings that ever reigned, put together, have not affected the life of man on earth as much as that One Solitary Life.

Former football greats Charlie "Choo-Choo" Justice and Art Weiner have endorsed Congressman Jim Broyhill in his campaign for U.S. Senate.

Justice and Weiner were All-America teammates at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill from 1946 to 1949 and still hold several major UNC records. They are well-known throughout the state and frequently speak in support of the university and various worthwhile causes.

"We have both known Jim Broyhill since our days at Carolina," Justice and Weiner said recently in their endorsement. "He is a fine man and has been a good representative in Washington. (Justice's home town of Cherryville is in Broyhill's 10th District.) We are supporting Jim because we think he will be a great senator for the people of North Carolina."

Justice, who played tailback and quarterback, and Weiner, a receiver, are one of the most productive duos in college football history. Justice leads North Carolina in total offense, is second in scoring, third in punting average, first in punt returns and first in kickoff returns. Weiner is UNC's career leader in pass receiving and is tied for 17th in scoring.

"I am delighted to have two friends and such outstanding North Carolinians such as Art and Charlie support me in my campaign for the Senate," Broyhill said. "They are known and respected by many, many people in this state."

"This will help me continue to broaden my base of support toward a win in the May primary that will give us considerable momentum going into the general election."

Earth Cruisers are becoming more of a rule rather than an exception at UNCW. Ranging from $170 to $230, these bikes are a big investment. Get more information with story below.

EARTH CRUISER IS IN FASHION

Erika Bishop

When most people think of fads or fashions they think of clothes, haircuts, or accessories, but this year we have a new addition: bikes. It's not considered cool to just ride your 10 speed now a days; it's an Earth Cruiser or walk. Most parents of Earth-Cruiser-crazed people probably refer to the bikes as either balloon-tire bikes or beach bikes.

The bikes come in both men's and women's style, with or without the "butt breaker" bar.

Colors range from your basic black to neon-tiger stripes. The basic Cruiser ranges in price from $169.95 to $189.95, but if you want the ultimate in Earth Cruisers you can buy the "Boss Cruiser" priced at $230.00. The Boss includes such luxuries as a bigger frame and alloy wheels. The alloy wheels help the bike turn sharper and are lighter in weight.

These bikes can be seen cruising UNCW, Wrightsville

Beach, and area apartment parking lots. Area bike shops report that the bikes are big sellers among college students. Many accessories like surf racks, storage bags, or baby seats can be bought to outfit the Cruisers.

So next time your out and about town, keep your eyes peeled for the cruising people and if you happen to step out in front of one hope they spent the extra money for alloy wheels.

MOVIE REVIEW

THE COLOR PURPLE

Venessa Kim Murphy

Celie and Nettie are two sisters who share a very powerful love. Though both of Celie's children were taken from her at childbirth, Nettie brought them home to see their mother for the first time. By this time, they were married. Only a heart of steel could not be touched by this warm reunion.

The farm on which The Color Purple was filmed is owned by Ms. Lu Ellen Huntley's father. Ms. Huntley is an English professor here at UNCW. She is from Wadesboro, NC and is now in her second semester on this campus. She especially enjoys teaching writing.

Spiegelburg's direction lead twelve acres of the Wadesboro historical site to be planted with purple flowers. This was a place for Celie and Nettie to get away to themselves and live on the love which held them together. Ms. Huntley's father will let this purple field forever remain Celie's yard.

It is believed by some that this movie portrays black men negatively. The Color Purple showed how black males mistreated black females. But all know that mistreating women has no color barrier. If there are men who have seen this movie and mistreat women, maybe their actions will change after seeing the results of the actor's actions.

Though The Color Purple has been nominated for eleven awards, the best direction nomination was not included. Even though this outstanding creation has basically an all black cast, there is no reason for everyone not to view it.

FORENSICS WIN STATE

When Dr. Betty Jo Welch went into her office at the UNCW Division of Speech on Monday morning, March 18, she received a surprise. It looked as if a trophy store was about to open. Actually, the UNCW Forensics Team had returned from the State Championship of North and South Carolina Speech Teams. The UNCW Team has brought home the same FIRST PLACE TROPHY awarded in 1979, with the exception of 1984 when ASU "borrowed" it for a year. The team surprised Dr. Welch by creating a trophy display in front of her door with the combined total of 44 awards they had won. The "Carolinas Forensic Association" tournament was held March 14-16 at the University of South Carolina.

"Forensics" encompasses 10 different public speaking and acting events, as well as debate. After three preliminary rounds of competition, the top six competitors advance to finals. Highlights of the CFA tournament included UNCW taking five of the final slots in Duo Interpretation, in which two people perform a segment of a play with an off stage focus. The team also took four finals in After-Dinner Speaking, making a serious point through the use of humor, four in Dramatic Intep, four in Poetry Interp, and four in Informative Speaking. Mitch Butts, president of the UNCW Team had a total of six first place finishes, while Rick Olsen won four of the top awards.

"Pentathlon" is the award for top overall speakers at a tournament; their scores for all events are combined. Five of the

Here on campus, the University Theatre will be presenting "Tea and Sympathy" at the SRO Theatre April 16-20 with nightly shows at 8.

In Clinton, the Ann Fowler Spotlight Dancers will be warming the stage at 7:30 May 16 with their annual show. True, 60 miles is a bit of a hop, but not too far for good dancing.

April 27, the UNCW Jazz Ensemble will hold a concert in Kenan auditorium at 8pm.

As always, if you have any theater or arts related tips, contact the Seahawk Office or write to Curtain Calls, PO Box 2725, UNCW.

Till next time, have a good one.

COAST TREK '86 OFFERS MARINE SCIENCE CAMP

UNCW NEWS BUREAU

Coast Trek '86, a marine science camp for academically gifted students ages 11-15 will expand to four sessions this summer at UNCW. The week-long camp studies the unusual, exciting, fascinating and mysterious world of marine science as well as the educational field of the humanities and liberal arts presented by university-level educators. Classroom instructions is supplemented with field trips to inlets, sounds, and marshes where students collect marine animals, plants, shells, sand and sea water to study the origin, behavior, life cycle and environment of animal and plant life.

Coast Trek I, for beginner students will be held June 22-28, June 29-July 5 and August 10-16. The July 20-26 camp is already booked. Coast Trek II, for students who attended last year or who have had a similar experience elsewhere, will be held June 15-21.

In addition to marine science programs, students study a select curriculum of liberal arts courses including psychology, anthropology, and sociology. Recreation time is also provided for use of UNCW's athletic facilities including the olympic-size swimming pool and tennis courts.

UNCW was the first in the state to offer a marine science camp for academically gifted students. The success of the 1985 program resulted in expanding the 1986 one. "Our coastal location and excellent faculty were both conducive to the success of our first program," said Diane Talley, coordinator for UNCW's Office of Special Programs.

Sally Zimmerman, formerly with the N.C. Marine Resources Center at Fort Fisher and active in marine science projects, serves as Coast Trek director. "Coast Trek introduces kids to marine science and basic ecological studies of our coastal area. It provides kids with the chance to learn and grow, to find out what they like as well as what they don't like. It teaches students how to best use the

ACADEMICS/ATHLETICS

ATHLETIC DEPT.'S PONDER EFFECTS OF GEORGIA RULING

COLLEGE PRESS SERVICE

Big Ten dormat Northwestern could become a football powerhouse.

Or the overall quality of intercollegiate sports will decline. Or colleges will take educating their athletes more seriously. Or colleges won't be able to keep athletes in school.

Of hundreds of colleges will be sued unless they improve their "developmental studies"---or remedial---programs for athletes.

Those are just some of the speculations now tearing through college athletic departments nationwide in the aftermath of a "landmark" court case in Georgia.

"It sent a shock across the country," reports Charles McClendon, head of the American Football Coaches Association. "I think it serves notice to all of our campuses that we need to take a look at ourselves."

"It was a federal court ruling in favor of Jan Kemp, an academic advisor to University of Georgia athletes who, she says, was fired because she refused to give passing grades to some football players who were flunking their courses."

If she had flunked them, the players would not have been able to play in the 1982 Sugar Bowl game.

Kemp eventually left the university, and then sued it for firing her.

The court in February ruled Georgia must pay Kemp $2.6 million in back pay and damages.

While the university is appealing the decision, the court testimony about low graduation rates among athletes, about Georgia's expectations for its black football players---UGA's lawyer told the court the athletes' college educations at least would propel them beyond being garbagemen, qualifying them for postal service careers---and how it has different academic standards for "revenue-producing" athletes has fueled parts of the college sports reform movement.

The huge award, whether or not it stands, will cause "administrators and developmental studies people (all over the country) to wonder if their programs are running better" than Georgia's, says Sheldon Steinbach of the American Council on Education.

Georgia's remedial programs helped only 16 of the 61 black athletes on its football team since 1971 to graduate.

"The question," Steinbach adds, "is how many other universities are conducting programs like that (in which) grades are being manipulated."

Notre Dame Athletic Director Gene Corrigan estimates there may be "50 or 60" running shoddy programs.

The Georgia system, in any case, now is "reviewing" all its developmental studies programs, Chancellor Dean Propst's office says.

Other athletic officials speculate the huge award, when considered with the National Collegiate Athletic Association's new rule setting higher academic standards for Division I athletes, may alter competition among schools.

At its January convention, the NCAA voted to keep freshman athletes off the field unless they had a 2.0 grade point average in 11 core high school courses and scored at least 700 on the Scholastic Aptitude Test (SAT) or 15 on the American College Testing (ACT) exam.

Some coaches worry the new rule, followed so closely by the Kemp decision, may make it harder for them to lure quality athletes.

A University of Michigan study estimated the NCAA rule alone would have excluded about a third of its freshman football recruits between 1979 and 1983.

"I am a bit concerned there is an overreaction" to athletes' academic troubles, University of Maryland football coach Bobby Ross contends, adding the Kemp case could inspire more rules precluding athletes from attending college.

Ross argues students who went to bad high schools and didn't take enough academic courses won't be able to do well enough on admissions tests to meet the new NCAA requirements.

And if college remedial courses now have to be changed, the athletes from bad high schools won't be able to keep competing once they've made it into college.

"Schools are not going to take as much of a chance on marginal students," McClendon says of the consequences of the new rules and the precedent of the Kemp case.

However, not everybody is concerned.

"That case has no impact on us. I don't think Kemp is a watershed," maintains Richard Remington, vice president of academic affairs at the University of Iowa.

"We think it will help us," Northwestern University Athletic Director Doug Single says.

Single figures that if other schools pay as much attention as Northwestern does to athletes' academic skills, the other schools will lose the advantage they've always had in athletic skills.

Northwestern and other more academically minded schools that compete in Division I leagues may stand a better chance, he reasons.

NU basketball coach Rich Falk recalls the university did well on both basketball and football during the sixties, when the Big 10 had academic standards for its players.

Roy Kramer, athletic director at Vanderbilt, Northwestern's counterpart in the Southeastern Conference, thinks good students will continue attending good schools, although it is too early to tell just what the impact of the NCAA's requirements and the Kemp award will be on competition.

Moreover, he contends academic rules ultimately will not keep many athletes out of college, regardless of their high school backgrounds.

CHEERLEADERS PICKED

BY JACK SESSOMS

The 1986-87 UNCW cheerleading squad was selected during tryouts held March 17-21 by the UNCW Athletic Department. Of the sixteen students who tried out, twelve were selected to represent UNCW next season. They are: Jenny Cato, Lisa Clark, Shannon Crake, Noelle Gandy, Myron Greer, Rick Meadows, Brandon Mengedoth, Tracy Mills, Richard Oldham, Jack Sessoms, Shannon Speight, and Reid Stephenson.

The tryouts consisted of two cheers and chants, an original dance routine for females, partner stunts for males, and an interview by coaches Tory Everett and Kitty Parker. The squad has already begun practicing for a cheerleading camp it will attend in August and is looking forward to an exciting season.

CAMPUS NOTES

COURTESY CAMPUS COMMUNIQUE UNCW "UP"

The university received the "Project Up Award" in recognition of improvements and beautification to the community during ceremonies held on campus April 3. Also, Catherine Warner of "Project Up" presented Chancellor Wagoner an award, in recognition of the pedestrian mall area being maintained for a three-year period of time. The mall was a beautification project taken on by the Cape Fear Garden Club in 1980. Robert Warren, grounds supervisor, was cited by Dr. Wagoner for his outstanding efforts on keeping the area up.

Broad Horizons Await Travelers

by Renee Brantley, UNCW PUBLICATIONS OFFICER

At UNCW, learning is not limited to the classroom. Study abroad can be an important supplement to textbook theory. This summer 11 UNCW students will travel to Europe and Costa Rica for supplemental studies in business, anthropology, Spanish, and marine biology. In addition, the students will experience the cultural, social and political environments in the countries visited.

Business Goes International—Steve Bouchard, a student in UNCW's master of business administration program, has plans for a career in international commerce. In late May he will join students from across the U.S. for an international business seminar in England and four European countries. The seminar, with sessions on international management, marketing, and finance, is designed to expose U.S. business students to international business practices and executives.

Bouchard will travel to England, The Netherlands, Belgium, France and Switzerland to visit such successful companies as Arthur Andersen & Co., Lloyd's of London, Heineken, Dow Chemical, Corning Europe, and Rolex. His seminar also has sessions at two large European banks, one in Amsterdam and one in Paris, and a businessman's view of the Piper-Heidsieck Champagne Cellars in Paris and the Monte Carlo Casino in Nice. Bouchard hopes to learn some useful tips on the best academic background and experience recommended for a professional position in international business.

Dr. Sheila Adams, chairperson and associate professor in the department of management and marketing, is the UNCW coordinator for the program.

Costa Rica Bound—UNCW and East Carolina University have joined forces to offer students at both institutions study and fun in Costa Rica. Four UNCW students will depart May 17 for the campus of the Universidad Nacional de Costa Rica in Heredia, seven miles from San Jose. The students will board with Costa Rican families and study courses in anthropology, geology and Spanish.

In addition to classroom instruction, field excursions to both the Pacific and Caribbean coasts, to a banana plantation, a tropical forest, a coffee farm, and a trip to major cities San Jose and Cartago, will provide the students with a taste of Costa Rican culture and lifestyles.

UNCW students taking part in the program include Julie Bordo, an education major who plans to take slides of Costa Rica for future instructional needs; Pam Oelschig, a freshman who lived in South America and wants to brush up on conversational Spanish; John Reilly, a Spanish major, and Kristie Robinson, an Anthropology major. Amy at Arthur Andersen & Co., Lloyd's of London, Heineken, Dow Chemical, Corning Europe, and Rolex. His seminar also has sessions at two large European banks, one in Amsterdam and one in Paris, and a businessman's view of the Piper-Heidsieck Champagne Cellars in Paris and the Monte Carlo Casino in Nice. Bouchard hopes to learn some useful tips on the best academic background and experience recommended for a professional position in international business.

Dr. James Sabellam, chairman and professor of sociology and anthropology, is the UNCW coordinator for the trip and will be one of the anthropology instructors for the program.

Students to Study at Oldest Marine Lab—Six UNCW marine biology students will join Dr. Robert Y. George, UNCW professor of biology, for a June trip to Sweden. George has been awarded a grant by the Swedish Royal Academy of Science for Arctic krill research at the Kristineberg Marine Biology Station in Sweden.

Some research will be conducted utilizing equipment developed at UNCW's Institute for Marine Biomedical Research. George and students hope to capture egg-carrying Arctic krill to study the effects of pressure on krill eggs. This will be the first study of this type conducted. In addition, they hope to capture deep sea life to bring back to UNCW for future research.

As an added bonus, UNCW students will have the opportunity to interact with students and visiting scientists from West Germany, England, France, Norway, Denmark and other parts of the United States.

Participating UNCW students are Nathaniel Haskell, Tara Sams, Todd Rodenbough, Thomas Stanley, Stephanie Spence and Christine Aitken.

Kristineberg Marine Biology Station is the oldest marine lab in the world and has the reputation for excellent research facilities, vessels and equipment, along with a dormitory for visitors. The station is located on the west coast of Sweden north of Gothenburg, Sweden's second largest city. The station lies at the mouth of the Gullmarn fiord, the only true fiord in Sweden.

UNCW has plans for a continued student exchange program with Kristineberg. George hopes that UNCW students will continue research at Kristineberg next summer. Dr. Harle-Ove Stromberg, director of the lab, hopes that his students can study at UNCW in 1988.

The international business seminar costs $1895, in addition to airfare. The Costa Rican and Swedish study programs each cost approximately $1000, including airfare. Program costs are the sole responsibility of the student, but each feels that the experience will be worth the expense. All hope that full or partial funding will one day be available for study abroad to make such programs accessible to more students. Although the programs have reached their quotas for 1986 travel, students interested in taking part in similar study abroad programs in 1987 should contact the appropriate coordinator.

Steve Bouchard reviews itinerary for an international business seminar to England and four European countries.

BEV FIGHTS CRIME

Recognition is given to Bev Cobb, union scheduling coordinator, in helping with the apprehension of a vendor who was on campus last week selling misrepresented goods to faculty and staff. Cheryl Ferguson assisted in detaining the vendor until campus police arrived. Good work Bev and Chyn!l

BRAUER AWARDED

Dr. Ralph W. Brauer, director of the UNCW Institute for Marine Biomedical Research, has been awarded the top prize of the Undersea Medical Society for scientific excellence. The award, one of three major prizes given each year by UMS, is considered the Nobel Prize for the society. Dr. Brauer's recognition is due to his extensive work on the effects of high pressure neurologic syndrome and the ways of changing it may manipulating atmospheres.

4.0 G.P.A. Nets Prize

Terry W. Evans, left, a freshman at UNCW majoring in accounting, receives the Phi Eta Sigma Outstanding Freshman Award from Dr. Lee Johnston, associate professor of political science and adviser for Phi Eta Sigma honorary society. Evans has a perfect 4.0 grade point average with 16 credit hours completed so far. This was the highest GPA in the freshman class for first semester.

Phi Eta Sigma is a National Honor Society. To qualify for membership, students must complete their freshman year with a cumulative grade point average of at least 3.5 and make no grade lower than a C while taking a full course load.

Terry Evans Receives Honor Society Award from Dr. Lee Johnston, Phi Eta Sigma Advisor.

TIRED OF CAMPUS REPUBLICAN

Yo Mick-

After reading a year's worth of your put-downs of everyone not just like yourself, I made my own list.

1. I did not vote a straight ticket but thought for myself.
2. I did not vote for Ronald Reagan or Jesse Helms (must he spend that much money to get elected?)
3. I believe that no man knows everything (even Ronny) and he must not be followed blindly. Our coins still say, "In God We Trust."
4. I do not support giving $100 million dollars to a pack of jungle thugs.
5. I am concerned that America is still polluting and destroying its environment (we will pay the price whether you like it or not).
6. I love my country-even though I don't agree with you.

7. I am not a communist.

8. I served 5 years in the U.S. Armed Forces.

9. Political persuasion does not indicate state of cleanliness.

10. I am not sorry if my shirt are too loud for you (I don't even own a tie either) or if my shoulder length hair and beard offend you.

11. I don't care if you trip or not, if you shave, if you bathe or even if you think that William F. Buckley is a swell guy.

12. I am graduating in May.

13. While (Thankfully) not every college student is just like you (blame it on genetic variation), we are equally worthy as you to be here and live as we see fit.

NOT ALL REPUBLICANS LIKE THAT

Hi! I'm a Republican. I support President Reagan on virtually all of his policies. I have also attended College Republican meetings and am a member. However I do not seem to fit Mickey Gahagan's description of what he thinks a College Republican should be. Mr. Gahagan reports correctly that today's students see themselves as conservative but then infers from the polls unscientific and unrational indicators of conservatism. I'll graduate, and yet I do not wear my hair short.

I respect my elders but no more than I respect anyone else! I eat meat, have never been to Canada, but would participate in a sit-in if I wanted. I am a proud American, do not even smoke pot let alone LSD and yet at the same time respect what Neil Young and Bob Dylan stood for. One can not stereotype people as Mr. Gahagan wants to do. So, what am I getting at? Conservatism. Being a sociology major (who is not the least bit bitter), I can say that some writers and political thinkers argue that conservatism is a rearguard action and that it is a reaction to Liberalism and there for is not even a political ideology! Nevertheless, conservatism is not cut and dry. Conservatism in it's extreme means to be "resistant to change" and in a since this is a very closedminded approach. Change is a fact. It happens and will continue to happen. It seems wisest to take a moderate, openminded approach, look at both sides of an issue and make a decision, rather than saying "I am a conservative and the conservative stand would be so that is what I believe."

Mr. Gahagan, as shown in his incompetent inferences from campus opinion polls, also seems to be confused about his stand on religion. On one hand he supports Jesse Helms, and on the other hand he attacks campus ministers. I am sure he is stereotyping once again and equating campus ministers with the 60's liberalism. Mr. Gahagan and his faction should back away from Radical Conservatism before they too 'dorm in a trendy sea' but this time in a "trendy sea of conservatism."

STUDENTS REACT TO LIBYA

by Doug Hargett

How did you react to the announcement when the U.S. bombed parts of Libya? This is just one of the questions asked last week after the news of the U.S. striking back at Kaddaffi's terrorist machine. Some people were shocked and worried but others like freshman Pam Garner weren't surprised at all. "We had to do something and I'm not happy with the situation but I feel that President Reagan did the right thing."

Pam was not alone in his stance for the attack, almost all of Congress including Speaker of the House, Tip O'Neil, agreed with the action. An ABC poll showed overwhelming support for the attack and most students at UNCW also agreed. "It's about time we showed Kaddaffi that

FORGET THE 60'S, LOOK FORWARD

In response to a recent article by Mickey Gahagan, "Today's College Republican", it seems that Mr. Gahagan's views are his personal feelings. Not those of all College Republicans. I myself see it as ridiculous that someone could devote four paragraphs to poking fun at the 1960's Liberal generation when the space that his article was printed could have been used to something constructive in nature. Mr. Gahagan is not even subtle in his writing. He is downright insulting. He should not rub his views in others faces so bluntly, whether predated or not.

The 1960's liberalism is a thing of the past and that is where it should be left. Today's College Republicans should be concerned with the future, not planting the seed of disagreements among college students or political factions over trivial matters from the past.

I recently sent in an application to join College Republicans, I hope that it was not a mistake.

I GIVE UP!

by Nancy Fister

It was challenging and kind of exciting at first that has all diminished. After making many phone calls and receiving busy lines, records of discontinued lines, "he's not here right now", and "She moved out last November," I pulled myself away from the phone realizing that I would never get in touch with half of the club presidents. It was all really discouraging.

There is a great deal more to this University than clubs and I feel I have to put in enough time trying to obtain club information. I feel that it is really the Student Activities Office responsibility to have available information for the students. Since, most, if not all, of the clubs work out of the office, it seems to me that obtaining information would be very simple.

Or, for that matter, it should be required for club presidents to fill out a questionnaire on their club at the beginning of the year.

If the clubs feel they don't have enough members or not enough UNCW support they need to realize it is from lack of information. Of course there are bulletin boards—but you'll have to fight for space and hope that your message stays up for at least a day before someone covers it up with a message of their own.

What about a newsletter magazine made available once a month? But, then again, who cares? We'll keep on fighting for that bulletin board, and keep on wondering why we didn't raise enough money at the fund raising party we had last week (that no one knew about.)

STILLPOINT

by BobHaywood
Campus Ministry

There are a group of people in our midst about whom we need to learn more. They are disabled students and April 21-25 is Disabled Awareness Week. The types of disabilities present in our student colleagues are varied. Some are blind, some dyslexic, some confined to wheelchairs. And there are probably other disabilities of which I am not aware.

Raising our consciousness about disabilities and their effects on peoples lives is important both for the sake of disabled students and for ourselves. It is important for their sake because, as I was surprised to learn from a disabled student, prejudice is still rampant against people with disabilities on this campus. Some students with disabilities have experienced being ridiculed and tricked in embarrassing ways. Some report being addressed in condescending ways because of their disability. Others report a sense of isolation simply because people do not know how to talk to someone who is disabled and avoid them rather than try. We simply avoid eye contact or speaking to them and, all of a sudden, they don't exist. Take advantage of the opportunities that are offered to learn more about the lifestyles and feelings of people who need acceptance and friendship in exactly the same way as you and I do.

It is useful to learn more about disabled students for our own sake as well. Most disabled students are quite willing teachers about their particular disability and how it affects them in terms of meeting their needs in this campus environment. If you would give yourself the privilege of knowing a student who has had an extra dimension of struggle in their personal lives, you will often find someone ahead of you in learning what is important in life, what it adds to strength of character to work to overcome a disability and, perhaps, something about how disabled people often have more to give to you than you to them.

What is more, those who are disabled have much to teach us who think we are whole about meaning of compassion. Pity separates us from people and is an effective feeling for keeping us distance. A genuine friendship with someone who's disability complicates their life will broaden and enrich both people in a way that can leave us more able to live lovingly in every dimension of our lives.

Disabled Awareness Week provides us with another opportunity to grow, to break down more of the barriers that separate people by prejudice and lack of communication. Let the disabled be your teachers. Try living in the world with their limitations, even for a few moments it will help us all.

IMPRESSIONIST EXHIBIT AT ST. JOHNS

by Tamara Drew

Art enthusiasts throughout southeastern North Carolina have a hard time resisting the impressive assortment of beautiful and often unusual works of art that are housed at St. John's Museum of Art. The museum, located at the corner of 2nd and Orange Streets in downtown Wilmington, boasts a staff of enthusiastic art lovers who skillfully manage to co-ordinate an appealing yet diversified series of exhibits.

Recent exhibits have included the "Art in Public Places" that was featured during St. Thomas Festival of the Arts and most recently, the 9th Annual Eastern United States Print and Drawing Exhibition. In each case, the breathtaking assortment of subject matter and technique served to what the appetites of area art lovers for what Museum Director C. Reynolds Brown recently termed "The most important show we've ever done."

St. John's Museum of Art opened an exhibit of the printed works of famed Impressionist artist Mary Cassatt on Thursday, March 27. St. John's has the distinction of being one of only three museums in the country to possess an extensive in-house collection of these limited-edition prints.

Mary Cassatt was a key figure in the world Impressionist movement and was one of the most important American artists of the nineteenth century. According to Brown, "She makes some universal statements about the relationship between a mother and a child."

Mary Cassatt was born in western Pennsylvania on May 22, 1844. Her family, who were of respectable social position and education, lived for a few years in Allegheny City and Philadelphia prior to relocating in France. After a few years, they moved to Germany, returning to America in 1855.

Cassatt studied art at the Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts, and upon graduation, returned to Paris in 1866 to study the work and techniques of the Old Masters. She eventually joined the ranks of the artistic radical who determined to create art for the pleasure of vision led to them being labeled "Impressionists."

According to Dr. Nancy Mowll Mathews, whose essay on Cassatt will be available in a brochure at the exhibit, "the freedom and inspiration she found working within this circle led her to develop her own version of the Impressionist style in paintings and pastels."

Cassatt, who was highly influenced by the work of the famed artist Degas, worked with him and Camille Pissarro to acquaint herself with the secrets of print techniques.

Cassatt learned the technique of etching and aquatint, methods by which she incised a design into a copper plate using acid. She later used the drypoint technique, which enabled her to create the design directly on the copper plate. In her essay, Dr. Mathews notes that "some of her most masterful prints in black and white were done in drypoint in the three years before she turned to her experiments with color."

Cassatt's experiments with color in her prints is exciting. While she made approximately twenty-five copies of each of the works, she diversified the effect of each copy by making alterations of color tones and combinations. Cassatt completed only eighteen originals. Hence, the reason for the staff of St. John's excitement about the exhibit is understandable, as is their delight at owning the collection itself.

The prints, which were bequeathed by a private collector, include one complete set of "The Bath" completed by Cassatt in 1891. Cassatt drew inspiration for "The Bath" during a visit to the 1890 French exhibit of Japanese woodblock prints. At that time, artistic incorporation of the stylistic elements of Japanese culture was a

"PLAY IT AGAIN SAM"

Woody Allen came to the SRO stage April 16-20 in the University Theatre production of "Play It Again Sam," the off-Broadway smash about Allen Felix, a typical All-American type of guy searching for his identity.

Daniel Riggs plays the dreamy Allen Felix, writer for the Film Quarterly magazine. He comes home one day to find that his wife Nancy, played by Rebecca Dodd (Frau Schneider in "I Am A Camera"), is leaving him. Rebecca Dodd once again lived up to her reputation as an actress, with her wonderfully shrewish Nancy.

Finding himself alone, Allen retreats into a dream world at times, and his companion (unseen to anyone except the audience and Allen) takes the form of rough, tough, no-nonsense ladykiller Humphrey Bogart, played by Randy Soare, last seen in "Camera" as Fritz.

Bogie helps Allen during his insecure times, especially when he is dealing with women. Bogie, played by Robert Randolph Soare, was great. His cool, slightly calous character seemed to step right out of "The Maltese Falcon."

Allen's neighbors are played by Tracey Stevens and Chris Lancaster, neither of whom are strangers to the SRO Theater. Chris plays Dick Christie, a hard-working salesman. Dick, while delivering some good lines, just was not very convincing. He lacked the enthusiasm I expected. His voice was to emotionless to counter Tracy's Bubbly, Neurotic Linda. Tracy plays his wife Linda, with whom Allen has a steaming one night stand.

Mousy Julie Brockman played Allen's new neighbor, Barbara, with whom he finally falls in love with.

Dr. Terry Theodore directed the show and about Theodore, Daniel Riggs said, "Theodore has been easy to work with...not overbearing."

Daniel is a freshman and plans to major in drama.

Randy Soare has had more theatrical experience than just the SRO. He has performed in several professional productions as well as in the dinner theaters in Fayetteville area. His father is a drama professor.

Rebecca Dodd has directed shows at the SRO as well as appearing in "Talking Well..." last fall and "I am a Camera" this winter. She is a drama major and a senior.

Chris Lancaster is a junior majoring in drama, and has yet to disappoint this writer with his performance on stage.

Anyone who has ever call the General Advisory Dept. will have spoken to Ms. Terrie Blanton.

Julie Brockman is a freshman planning to major in drama. "Play It Again Sam" is her first time on stage at UNCW.

If you missed "Play It Again Sam," you really missed a great show.

"WOMAN BATHING", AN IMPRESSIONIST PAINTING BY MARY CASSATT IN 1891, IS ONE OF SEVERAL ON DISPLAY AT THE ST. JOHN'S MUSEUM OF ART IN WILM.

blossoming rage in France. "The Bath" includes works entitled THE BATH, THE LAMP, IN THE OMNIBUS, THE LETTER, THE FITTING, WOMAN BATHING, MOTHER'S KISS, MATERNAL CARESS, AFTERNOON TEA PARTY, and THE COFFURE. Prints of all of the above work will be displayed at the St. John's exhibit.

Cassatt was attracted by the flat simplicity of style that Japanese print makers used their depictions of French women and children. She also used women and children as her subject matter, gracing their appearance by use of the Japanese style of rich and extremely beautiful blends of patterns and color contrasts. Her adoption of the Japanese technique of linear delineation was remarkable for the time.

UNCW PARTICIPATES IN PHI BETA LAMBDA CONFERENCE

The annual North Carolina Phi Beta Lambda State Leadership Conference was held in Charlotte, N.C. April 4-6. The Zeta Alpha Xi Chapter from UNCW actively participated in the conference and placed in several competitions.

During the weekend, objective tests in the field of business were administered as well as various interviews conducted. The results of these tests and interviews were ranked, and first through fifth place certificates were awarded. UNCW had 15 members entered in 16 different events. Second place in Economics went to Tom Ely, third place went to Michelle Mink in Ms. Future Business Executive and Alan Davis placed fifth in Information Management. Also, Who's Who in North Carolina Phi Beta Lambda was awarded to Eric Oates and Michelle Mink. Eric Oates was awarded the North Carolina Phi Beta Lambda Scholarship Award.

Along with competitive events, elections for 1986-1987 North Carolina Phi Beta Lambda Officers were held. Eric Oates ran a 1 was elected to the Office of Eastern Region Vice President. On the local level elections of the 1986-1987 Zeta Alpha Xi Chapter Officers were held April 2. The following members were elected:

President: Eric Oates
Vice President: Libby Lancaster
Secretary: Debbie Detommaso
Treasurer: Ralph Pandure
Reporter: Zeb Johnston
Historian: Laura Henry

Each year the Presidents Awards and Outstanding Member Award are presented to deserving members for their contribution to Phi Beta Lambda during the 1985-86 year. The Presidents Award was presented to Eric Oates and the Outstanding Member Award to Michelle Mink. Good luck to next year's officers and members.

STUDENTS NEED SUMMER JOBS

by Doug Hargett

Summer jobs are becoming the topic of conversation again. As students make plans for the summer, finding and having a job plays a major role. Many students would like to stay in Wilmington and attend summer school but before they can do that they must find work. Many students are eager to start working. The idea of having a job translates into money in the pocket and an end to the infamous "college budget."

What kind of jobs are looking for though? Several students have a job waiting for them at home.

"I'll start work in a furniture store the day I return from my final exams," says sophomore David Walton. Many students are beginning to look at jobs tied into their major or related to what they will be doing after school. Susan Ross will be working at a summer camp with handicapped children. This is the kind of work she's interested in and will most likely pursue after graduation this year.

Working in Department stores or at a mall is another popular college job. "I'll get my job back at Belk's this summer and work in the shoe department," says junior Jay Leach. Theaters and restaurants are still money-makers for other students. And we can't forget the old reliable fast food chains even though we swore never to work in them.

If you're planning to go to summer school and find a job in Wilmington then you better hurry. There are jobs out there but they are going fast. Sophomore Lane Fuller would like to stay in Wilmington but is having a hard time finding work. "If I don't get something soon then I'll just have to forget about staying for summer school."

GREEK WEEK PROMOTES UNITY

by Sally Wedgeworth and Jack Sessoms

The sixth annual Greek Week was held on the campus of UNCW April 6-11. This year theme, "IT'S ALL GREEK TO ME," was used as the central idea and helped promote greek unity among the nine fraternities and sororities who participated in competition that ranged from field events to service and educational projects.

On Saturday, April 5, Greek Week unofficially began with a service project involving children who are on the waiting list for the Big Buddy Program of Wilmington. The official opening of the week long events were on Sunday at a wine and cheese reception for greeks and faculty members in the University Union. At the reception, Vice Chancellor Bryan pledged the administrative support of the greek system here at UNCW and several key awards were given. This year's greek man and woman of the year went to Jay Harris of Delta Tau Delta and Susie Marshburn of Delta Zeta. Delta Zeta and Sigma Alpha Epsilon were also awarded with academic GPA awards. The rest of the week was filled with competition that was exciting and close from day to day. By the last day there were three fraternities and one sorority that had strong chances at the title. Final results yielded Delta Zeta in 4th place, Kappa Sigma in 3rd place, Phi Kappa Phi in 2nd place, and Sigma Alpha Epsilon as the 1986 Greek Week winners. Congratulations goes to all greeks for a job well done.

NEW COACH NAMED

Matt Shanklin

The wait is over. A new era in UNCW basketball has begun with the naming of new head basketball coach Robert McPherson. The announcement came Monday afternoon (April 14) from University Chancellor William Wagoner.

McPherson succeeds Mel Gibson, who resigned last month after 14 seasons as the University's head coach.

McPherson comes to UNCW from Sam Houston State University in Huntsville, Texas, where he has been head coach for the last five seasons. In this five-year period, McPherson compiled a 102-47 record with the Bearcats. This past season, his squad was 27-6, winning the Gulf Star Conference, and was ranked fourth in the NCAA Division II basketball poll.

The search committee for a head coach consisted of Provost Charles Cahill, who was chairman, Athletic Director Bill Brooks, and James Sabella, who is chairman of the Department of Sociology and Anthropology. The first candidate to be interviewed was N.C. State assistant, Ed McLean. The second person interviewed was McPherson.

Two other interviews were planned, but were called off. The one applicant accepted a coaching job with a Big Ten Conference school, and the fourth candidate decided not to participate.

Prior to taking the head coaching job at Sam Houston, McPherson coached at Cameron (Okla.) University and at Western Oklahoma University in Altus Okla. At Western Okla., McPherson took the program from scratch and turned out two Oklahoma Junior College Conference championship teams. He was selected Oklahoma Junior College coach of the year for the 1978-79 season after leading his team to a 24-8 record.

McPherson is presently being nominated for Texas Coach of the Year honors for his 27-6 record in the 1985-86 season, joining four other head coaches of four-year universities in the state of Texas.

McPherson will inherit a UNCW basketball program that is on its way up in the Colonial Athletic Association (CAA). This past season, the Seahawks were 16-13 and placed fourth in the CAA.

UNCW returns four starters from the 1985-86 season, including all-conference Brian Rowson. Rowson, a 6-9 center, will enter his senior season as UNCW's all-time leading rebounder and number three all-time leading scorer. McPherson expressed a need for a point guard as a top priority, and a 6-7 power forward as needs for UNCW in the upcoming season.

"We are pleased with the progress that our basketball program has made, and we feel that coach McPherson is the man to lead our program to a higher level in the upcoming seasons," said Provost Charles Cahill, chairman of the search committee for a new coach.

"I have been preparing myself all my life and I'm confident I can do the job," McPherson said. "I think it is a good program, a good community. I plan to get involved in the community."

"A basketball program cannot be built alone, and it takes community support," said McPherson.

McPherson's overall coaching record in the past 21 years is 466-175, for a winning percentage of 72.7%. His teams have averaged more than 22 wins a season during that time, and has never experienced a losing season as a head coach.

In his last two coaching positions at Sam Houston and Western Oklahoma, McPherson's teams have posted a home court record of 108-8 for 93.1% winning mark.

McPherson, and his wife, Linda, have two children—Kent (15) and Kristi (12).

DeRosset stars In Tournament

The UNCW Racquetball Club went to Chapel Hill April 11-13th to participate in the fourth annual collegiate racquetball tournament. UNCW took 10 member team consisting of 8 men and 2 women. The members were Steve DeRosset, Steve Albright, Frank Perkins, Chris Parkes, Keith Schelling, Don Hagge, Rob Breece, Brad Dry, Danielle Jefson, and Michelle Mink.

UNCW's racquetball team finished 6th out of the 8 teams that entered. The team did place in two individual events. UNCW's mens doubles team, consisting of Steve DeRosset and Steve Albright, beat UNC-Chapel Hill

NAVY, RICHMOND NETS CASH

by Matt Shanklin

The Colonial Athletic Association had a very successful post-season. The highlight was the impressive showing by the Midshipman of Navy who made it to the final eight of the NCAA tournament, before falling to #1 ranked Duke. Also having good showings were Richmond in the NCAA and George Mason in the National Invitational Tournament. The women of James Madison also had an impressive showing in the women's NCAA tournament. Yet it was Navy who had the eyes of the nation upon them as they tried to be the Cinderella of the tournament.

The appearances of these teams was a big help for the CAA including UNCW. It brought the conference the attention it deserved all year long and much money. Navy made the conference $668,000 for its showing and Richmond $167,000. George Mason did not receive anything and figures on James Madison's women were unavailable.

For UNCW and all the other schools who did not participate in post-season action, they are to receive in the neighborhood of $70,000 for the showing that its fellow members made in the post-season. Who knows, maybe next year UNCW may make a big splash in the post-season. ....Maybe..?

Baseball's Last Home Stand Sat.

On Saturday, May 3, the UNCW baseball team will play their final home game of the season with rival East Carolina University. Last year at ECU, there were approximately 1200 fans present and only about 20 of us were for UNCW!!! We would very much appreciate your support in giving us fan participation for this game.

To show our appreciation, gate prizes will be awarded during the game. These prizes are being donated by the parents and players to show their appreciation to you for your support.

The beach will be closed and there will be a lot of Saturday night left after the game ends!!!

Will you come out and support us and perhaps win yourself a really nice prize?

Thanks to those of you who have supported us throughout this season and we hope to see you and lots of your friends present on Saturday, May 3.

RUNNING: THE BEST WAY TO GET IN SHAPE

O.K. -so you've gained a little weight over the C-O-L-D winter months. You can just call it insulation. But now it's summer and you don't have any excuses for that beer belly. Everybody wants to look good at the beach -don't you? The question is, How? The best way to get into shape are endless!!

Any type of aerobic exercises, like running, walking, biking and aerobic dancing, are excellent ways to get back into shape. But running, in particular, is THE aerobic exercise. Running conditions the heart and lungs, builds endurance, strengthens the legs and lower body muscles AND -oh goody!! -it also promotes weight loss (calories burned per hour: 630). Running is also an ideal activity for college students. This easily accessible sport is light on the budget -all you need is a good pair of running shoes.

Of course running is not for everyone. There is a certain risk factor involved... Shin splints, sprains, and pulled muscles are common complaints among runners. With proper technique and a good pair of running shoes these injuries can be avoided. A person who likes to be physically challenged would be best suited for this activity. (If you don't want to run a good alternative to running is walking.)

So the next time you get an urge to run to the fridge try running around the block instead.

ST. JOHN'S ART

In 1891, the a group of the Impressionists banded together and restricted membership to artists of French descent. Cassatt, who was 'indignant about the snub, joined with the West Indian Pissarro to co-ordinate a joint showing of their work, which was shown at the gallery adjacent to where the Impressionist group was having theirs.

The exhibit launched Mary Cassatt's career. Her breathtaking depictions of women and children caught the attention of Felix Feneon, and important avant-garde critic. His approval served to enhance her stature in the art community, and the rest is history. According to Dr. Mathews Cassatt eventually responded to the pressure to create more pastels and major paintings and abandoned the practice of making the color prints.

St. John's Museum will exhibit thirteen of Cassatt's eighteen printed works. The exhibit will continue through May 10th. Viewing hours are 10am through 5pm on Tuesday through Saturday. Admission is free.

UNCW GRANTED HOST STATUS

BY JEFFERSON WEAVER

In a ceremony here Sept. 5, Gen. Peter W. Lash, commander of the First ROTC Region, United States Army made official the elevating of the UNCW Dept. of Military Science to host status. Only two universities in the region were granted this honor this year.

Prior to Sept. 5, UNCW came under the Military Science Department of Campbell University, where the Seahawk Battalion in field exercises this summer.

Another highlight of the ceremony was the promotion of then-Major Ronald Martin to lieutenant-colonel.

In his speech accepting the official orders raising UNCW's status, Chancellor William Wagoner said, "This is an honor for this university and indicates the recognition by the U.S. Army of the quality of our academic programs. ROTC is an important part of our university."

The elevation in status brings more than simply to the recognition to the Seahawk Battalion, commanded by Lt. Col. Martin.

Host status gives UNCW the opportunity to offer a four year program instead of two as it has been in the past.

Before now, students desiring a four year degree would have to transfer to another school to complete their studies.

ROTC now has seven full time instructors (all active duty commissioned and non-commissioned officers) and can offer a wider range of courses than ever available before.

When asked about the academic effects of host status, Col. Martin said, "Host status provides UNCW and the ROTC organization with better opportunities for improved leadership, both in civilian life and the military. ROTC is an integral part of the institution... we are not just off by ourselves."

Brigadier General Peter Lash, who presented the official orders announcing the UNCW host status Sept. 5, is a graduate of both the U.S. military Academy and of Shippensburg College, where he completed his graduate studies in Public Administration.

Lash has been in the service since 1956. He first served in Alaska and has been stationed in Korea, Florida, and Vietnam.

His awards include the Legion of Merit with Oak Leaf Cluster, Distinguished Flying Cross, Combat Infantryman's Badge, and Parachutist Badge.

Lash and his wife Alice have three children, Linda, Peter, and Laurie.

Coincidental with the proclamation was the announcement of a new patch and logo to be used by all ROTC cadre. The new logo symbolizes the basic defense mission of the United States Army and is divided into quarters to represent the four traditional courses required of the ROTC candidate.

"There's very much potential here," said Colonel Martin. "The number of students here...can easily double."

CAMPUS CONCERNS

Parking a Hazard

BY CARLA GARRISON

For off campus students, parking within a mile of class has become a major ordeal. The majority of students need to park either in the Social Behaviors or cafeteria parking lots. The competition for legal spaces in those areas and others near by can get really hairy. More often than not, students get frustrated and end up parking on the grass, in faculty slots, etc. and come back from class top find a yellow slip under one windshield wiper.

In the weekly summary of activities published by the Campus Safety Dept., an average of 75 to 100 tickets a day were being written for parking violations alone.

A fourth of those are for no decal.

There have been some questions concerning the amount of stickers issued in comparison to parking places. The parking office does not deny this. The official explanation is that the number of night students equals the number of day, and that all students do not attend class every day at the same time. Officials claim that the problem lies not with number of spaces, but with the convenience of parking lots.

While there are 13 parking lots available for commuting students, three of these lots have not been used effectively this fall.

A resolution put before the Senate in its first meeting this fall would no longer allow first year freshmen to have vehicles on campus. While this would ease the situation somewhat, it would not come near solving the situation.

Students should try to utilize some of the unused parking lots around campus because school policies are not going to change for the better.

Immunization May Bar Some

BY JOSEPH ALLEN

On September 27, 1986, many UNCW Freshmen and new transfer students will be barred from attending class on campus.

Students will be barred from classes because they have not turned in copies of their immunization records to the UNCW Student Health and Wellness Center, said Catherine Vangelow, a Physician's Assistant and the Director of the Student Health and Wellness Center.

"Notices have been sent out to those students who need to submit copies of their immunization records to the Student Health and Wellness Center," Ms. Vangelow said.

"A new North Carolina state law [that went into effect] July 1, 1986, now requires that a copy of a student's immunization record be kept at the college he is attending," she said.

The new North Carolina law came about because many new students attending schools in the state are coming from outside North Carolina, she said.

"Previously, only elementary and secondary schools required copies of immunization records," Ms. Vangelow said.

Students had thirty days to submit a copy of their immunization record starting with the first day of Fall Quarter 1986 classes-August 27, 1986.

Students still have time to submit copies of their immunization records before the thirty-day deadline ends on September 27, 1986. After the deadline has passed, those students who have not submitted a copy of their immunization records will be barred from class.

Student Drowns in Trask Pool

BY JEFFERSON WEAVER

A nineteen-year old student was found drowned in Trask pool Tuesday morning, according to a spokesperson for the University of North Carolina Wilmington.

Stephen Praisner, 19, of Bedminster, N.J. was found around 8 a.m. by Dave Allen, UNCW swim coach. Both the Wilmington city and the Campus Police were called to the scene.

Praisner was a sophomore living in Galloway Dorm.

In a telephone interview Tuesday afternoon, Vice-President Allen Daniel said that the incident was under investigation by the Campus Public Safety Dept.

"The incident occurred before regular open swim time, so it is assumed that no life guard was on duty at the time," said Daniel.

This was the first incident involving a drowning since Trask Coliseum was opened in 1977.

Praisner was announced dead on the scene by the New Hanover County Coroner. The victim was identified by an unnamed student.

Tyrene Rowell of the UNCW Development Office said that it was not known at press time how Praisner had gained entry to the pool area or what he was doing in there at the time of the accident.

Police Report Busy Weekend

BY OLIVIA KAYLOR

Campus Police reported several incidents for the week-end of Sept. 13, 1986. A motor vehicle accident, a trespassing violation, two property damages and a fire were among incidents reported.

A motor vehicle accident occurred when a car traveling north in lot "P" struck a vehicle traveling west across lot "P". The passenger in second car was transported to Cape Fear Memorial Hospital for treatment of injuries.

Two subjects were escorted off campus Saturday night after being apprehended for trespassing. The subjects were discovered removing nuts and hubcaps from a 1986 Honda Prelude in lot "P".

Damage to state property occurred as a result of an unknown person ripping off a door handle of UNCW's new dorm. The University Union also reported damages after an unknown person pruned off the back of a B. and E. video machine.

No injuries were cited after a fire started in the dumpster of Hewlett Hall. The origin of this fire is still unknown.

Any information concerning these or other incidents on campus should be reported to campus police.

SGA News

The Student Government Association has a gift for UNCW students, faculty, and staff. National Student Savings Cards will be given to the students faculty and staff through campus mail.

These plastic cards provide the bearer with a discount from over 46 area merchants and are valid for one year. "It's a great deal," said B. Allan Dudley, Student Body President "and it shows that the area merchants support UNCW."

UNCW SGA leaders attended a retreat at Ft. Caswell last weekend. Entitled "Visions of Excellence in Student Government," the retreat provided SGA leaders a chance to get to know each other and participate in a workshop on leadership, power, and ethics.

Speaking on the topic of motivation was guest speaker Dr. Lee Meadows of General Motors.

About 24 SGA officers, senators and representatives as well as personnel from student affairs attended.

The retreat was directed by Ellen Servetnick, Jeff Steinmiller, B. Allan Dudley, and Allan Daniel.

UNCW hosted the University of North Carolina Association of Student Governments for the weekend of Sept. 5-7.

Representatives from all 16 UNC systems attended this first meeting of the year and planned the Association's activities for the year.

A trip was planned to Washington, D. C. to lobby for more financial aid and less paperwork to et financial aid. SGA members made this trip last week.

At that conference Jenny Cato, SGA Senator, was elected secretary of the legislative branch of the UNCASG.

RETURNING DEVILS MAY BE TESTED

Duke students returned to campus last week to find their administrators may soon ask them to prove they don't abuse drugs. At the same time, a Texas school district announced it would test all students involved in extracurricular activities for the presence of illicit drugs in their systems.

And the U.S. House of Representatives voted to empower the U.S. Dept. of Education to withhold federal funds from colleges that don't have drug abuse prevention programs.

The much-ballyhooed "war on drugs", in short, seemed to be closing in on every collegian in the U.S. in recent weeks.

Colleges have been adopting tough new sanctions to discipline students caught using illicit drugs, and looking into ways to catch the students in the first place.

Freshmen at Mount St. Mary College in New York, for example, are being greeted by a drug education program at orientation, while the presidents of Ohio Wesleyan, Newberry College and Westminster College (MO.) sent letters to their students warning of tough new drug policies this year.

Athletes have been facing such sanctions for a while now. About 100 colleges now regularly screen their athletes for drug use, the American Council on Education estimated last week, adding the practice is spreading.

The National Collegiate Athletic Association (NCAA) will start giving athletes in NCAA championship events drug tests this school year.

Close scrutiny of students now may spread beyond athletic departments into the general student body, too, thanks to a recent House Education and Labor Committee vote to send $350 million to states to help fight student drug abuse and a White House announcement it might favor spending $100 million to eradicate abuse in the nation's schools.

And if a different drug bill now in Congress passes, colleges will have to have some sort of drug abuse prevention program to remain eligible to receive other kinds of federal student aid and college funding.

While federal officials swear they won't start testing the entire American student body, Duke's flirtation with a campuswide drug program affecting all students started with the same kind of athletic department program scores of schools have adopted.

In mid-August, Duke Athletic Director Tom Butters called on the school to treat all students the way athletes are treated.

Duke doesn't test its athletes, Butters explains, but requires those who fear they have a problem to report it "to someone who will make sure that student is cared for."

"The coach will not know. The team will not know. But, if the problem is not self-reported, that athlete is gone with no second chance."

Such programs already have taken a radical turn through the general student population in the Hawkins Independent School District in Texas, where all students involved in extracurricular activities started taking mandatory drug tests last week.

Student council members, cheerleaders and athletes are all being tested, says Superintendent Coleman Stanfield.

Stanfield adds testing will be "random, at regular intervals throughout the school year."

Few foresee testing college student government officers, however, and few officials outside athletic departments support applying drug programs to nonathlete students.

"I'm personally not comfortable with it," says Suzanne Wasioled, Duke's dean for student life.

"We're being asked to solve a problem that may have started in the seventh grade," Butters says.

The publicity and pressure now building to mount anti-drug campaigns tend to create a false impression that schools "can solve the problem alone," adds Robert Atwell, president of the American Council on Education.

Besides, college officials are unsure such programs are workable.

"It must be remembered that two-thirds of the more than seven million full time students live off campus," Atwell points out.

Most students, moreover are adults. "More than half of all college students are 22 years of age and older, and more than a third are 25 and older," Atwell notes.

THE SEAHAWK

STUDENT FORUM

EDITORIAL PAGE

Students Support "Rambird"

What's all the fuss about UNCW's new mascot in Lynn Franklin's commentary ("Something's A Fowl," Aug. 29) in The Seahawk's first edition?

Franklin repeatedly criticized the new masculine Seahawk, saying it was created without the students having any say in the matter. She went on to call the new mascot "juvenile," "unsportsmanlike," among other things.

However, the UNCW athletic department went through all the appropriate channels to get the new mascot approved including the Student Government Association (which represents the students) and Chancellor Wagoner.

Franklin claims the new Seahawk will not be an image booster for UNCW's new-look athletic department. This statement comes before the new athletic year even begins. Why not give it a chance?

The new Seahawk was created in hopes that it will become more easily recognized, just as the Duke Blue Devil and N. C. State Wolf are.

"We wanted a unique figure," UNCW Assistant Athletic Director in charge of promotions Jim Bass said. "I think we have a character that will be easy to recognize."

As for the new logo being "insulting to the University" and something that should be a "symbol for all the facets" of the University; let's be serious.

Does Franklin honestly feel that our new Seahawk will be an embarrassment to her and the University? Do University of Georgia fans hide their heads in shame because their mascot is an obese bulldog? Are Maryland students ashamed because their mascot is an oversized turtle?

Franklin has confused mascots with real life characters. Our graceful and dignified like last year's mascot. No way, she adds, should our mascot be aggressive and intimidating (never mind that mascot, she writes, should be most Division I schools have one). Maybe Florida University will change their mascot so that their alligator will be more graceful. And, gosh darn it, that Penn State Nittany Lion is just not dignified at all.

In her article Franklin wonders how a Seahawk mascot can stand upright, clench its fists, and snarl. No, a real Seahawk probably could not do that (and that Arizona State Sun Devil is so realistic-looking, too.) Franklin also wants to know if birds have teeth like our Seahawk does. According to area pet shop owners the answer is "yes," there are at least two species of waterfowl that have teeth.

So early in the year, and UNCW's athletic department is already being criticized by the school paper. Here's an athletic program that is clearly on its way up (a 20-win basketball season within reach) and is creating a new image. Here's a program that has never been under investigation from the NCAA, and has never had any drug problems on its teams.

Meanwhile, our mascot is something we can take pride in. It is unique, as only one other school shares the Seahawk nickname among the 270-plus Division I schools today.

So now the attention is focused on whether or not to use the new mascot on the front page. Maybe more time should be spent improving the overall newspaper, instead of passing judgement on our school mascot.

DEAN BUCHAN

SUPPORTS MASCOT

The following was received written across the masthead of a copy of the first issue of the Seahawk.

"VERY UNNECESSARY AND UNPROFESSIONAL!! I AM A STUDENT AND LIKE THE NEW LOGO FEEL THAT MS. FRANKLIN WAS TOTALLY OFFBASE WITH HER EDITORIAL. SIGNED, A STUDENT THAT LOVES 'RAMBIRD'."

Ed. note: This copy is on file and available by appointment at the Seahawk office.

You know, I never realized just how easy it is to get this stuff, until they raised the drinking age.

To Clear The Air

The letter from Mr. Buchan (see "Student Forum") really sums up the way many people now feel about the UNCW Seahawk newspaper now, and that is why we, the new (albeit interim) staff would like to stand up and say that the aforementioned editorial was not, and is not the policy of this paper.

The first paper for this year was an extremely disorganized publication, because the planned editor, Mr. Woody Guthrie, transferred to the University of South Carolina.

As a result of the ensuing confusion and chaos, several misunderstandings took place which we will not bore the reader with.

How does the staff really feel about the new mascot. To a person, the staff supports the new bird - contrary to what you read or saw on the front page of the last issue.

The Seahawk publication is meant as a way of informing the students of UNCW what is going on in their community and in the clubs and groups they are involved in.

To a lesser extent, it is meant for a window to what goes on beyond the boundaries of the campus and the city limits of Wilmington.

The Seahawk is also meant as a place where students can react to factors affecting or interesting them

- hence, the Student Forum, which has appeared in various forms in the past and has not always been as regular as it should have been.

Complaints have been heard time and time again over the lack of locally related material in the campus paper. You don't really care about the plight of business law students in California when you can't find a parking place. That is now a thing of the past.

Another first for the new Seahawk is the use of a regular staff with assigned beats to give you better coverage; redesigned and revamped sections throughout the paper; Staff Cartoonist Joseph Morton (the first ever in our knowledge) and his original strip about college life, "Bloop"; and improved coverage of what concerns and affects us all - the events that take place in the small city known as the University of North Carolina Wilmington.

We hope that the first issue of the Seahawk will not leave a bad taste in your mouth. The New Seahawk, along with the new mascot, is here to stay.

If you like the new image of the Seahawk, and you feel that we are now a newspaper that UNCW can be proud of, let us know. If you have any ideas, please feel free to drop by the office between 9 a.m. and 7 p.m. daily, or between 12 noon and 5 p.m. on weekends.

As acting editor for the Seahawk, all I can say is - give us one more chance.

Second Viewpoint

BY JOSEPH ALLEN

Dolphin Talk

John Lilly, a noted dolphin researcher, has said dolphins, with their huge brains, are more intelligent than any human.

His statement is highly intriguing. For if dolphins are more intelligent than man, then man need not search for intelligent life among the stars. Instead, he can look to the oceans in the hopes of contacting another intelligent race.

However, the question of dolphin intelligence has no easy answer. Creatures in general have a remarkably large brain size. The sperm whale's brain size is up to six times that of a human brain, and the bottlenose dolphin, the most studied creature, has a brain about the same size as man's. If we use brain size as a measure of intelligence, then dolphins appear to be as intelligent as man.

Unfortunately, brain size is not a sign of intelligence. A defender of dolphin intelligence will be quick to point out dolphins can be taught to do a variety of tricks. Surely, the defender will argue, this is a sign of dolphin intelligence.

It is not.

Dolphins are not the only animals which can be taught to do tricks for an audience. Dogs, seals, pigeons, and a variety of other animals can be taught to do tricks, and they do not have a brain size equal to that of a dolphin's.

Another topic the defender of dolphin intelligence might bring up is that dolphins have their own language. Dolphins have not used fire or tools because their environment or lack of an opposing thumb prohibits the development of such devices, but they have developed their own language. Surely this is a sign of dolphin intelligence!

Nobody can dispute the fact that if another species had a language it would be a sign of their intelligence. But do dolphins have a language? Are their clicks and whistles a language that is taught and learned?

Dolphinese is supposedly the language of dolphins. This language is a combination of whistles, clicks, body postures and the speed of movements.

Every dolphin has its own signature whistle that takes a year or two to develop. If dolphins have their own language, do they communicate with each other. Kenneth Norris, a noted biologist, has noticed small schools of dolphins have learned to identify and avoid the boats that are sent out to capture them. This seems to indicate interpersonal communication within small groups of dolphins. Unfortunately, Norris has seen no evidence among larger groups of dolphins transmitting such information. If dolphins can communicate with each other, can we communicate with them or can they communicate with us? Lilly says dolphins have been trying to communicate with us for a long time.

Because of his contention dolphins are trying to communicate, Lilly presides over a battery of computer hardware designed to translate the human language into Dolphinese and vice versa.

If Lilly is successful in communicating with dolphins, he will open up a whole new world for man. We will have somebody else besides ourselves to talk to.

Dolphins will not provide us with answers, though. Instead, they will force us to ask more profound questions about our place in nature.

And what will happen to dolphins if we achieve communication with them?

If they are recognized as an intelligent species, then we will have to take steps to guarantee their rights as such. That will mean dolphins can no longer be used as a food source, be killed, or be held in captivity. With a communications breakthrough, the dolphins' and our world will change tremendously.

Is it worth the effort to communicate with dolphins? The only answer to that question is yes.

Granted, dolphins will not be able to answer questions about God or the universe, but they will offer us a chance to view the world with a perspective that is totally different from our own.

And that is a viewpoint worth having.

Between graduation, transfers, and changing interests, the staff of the UNCW Seahawk has been reduced to a fraction of what is needed.

TIME FOR A CHIME

BY

T. JAMES STANLEY

UNCW is distinguished, at least aesthetically, by its colonial style buildings, but there's definitely something missing here.

It seems we could use a structure of a sort which could serve as a functional symbol that would help distinguish our campus from others.

We need more than just our spiffy, freshly painted water tower if we wish to achieve some degree of visual unity.

Certain towers can indeed serve as landmarks, but obviously a watertower is not that kind of tower.

We need a landmark. We need a clocktower! We need a classy clocktower that is in some way customized for our particular campus.

The clocktower should be built solidly for a look of permanence, combining structural elements of antique and modern design. A symbol of the past and of the future.

The clocktower, admittedly, is not my own idea but was pitched to me by a friend, also a UNCW student.

The envisionment of a clocktower on our campus immediately struck my fancy. I like clocks.

Clocktowers, to me, represent more than simply keepers of time. Well-designed clocktowers are symbols of times past and of times to come.

Clocks symbolize accuracy, precision, moments in our lives, and they bring to mind notions of progress and technology.

A device such as a clocktower can subtly convey these qualities to persons traversing the UNCW campus.

The clocktower should be positioned on a small plot of ground somewhere on the central part of campus. It should be outstanding, but not ridiculously so.

Imagine our very own campus clocktower! Please give the concept every consideration and let me know what you think of it. Several students already think it's a grand plan.

If enough interest and support can be generated, we'll set out to lobby the heck out of the Board of Trustees and with luck, build the clocktower!

Please reply by mailing a note of interest (or disinterest) to UNCW P.O. Box 24869.

Is 21 Old Enough?

MY TURN

WITH KIM ORMAND

Well it finally happened - the drinking age in North Carolina is 21. And as we all know, you have to "prove" your age. Violators of this new law are subject to various fines and other things too terrible to mention (mainly jail). Yet not only can you get into severe trouble for purchasing the fire water, anyone that sells it to a minor can get in trouble also. Now, without sounding like a whiny and frustrated 20-year-old, I'd like to share my opinions on the pros and cons of this recent development.

First of all, we need to look at the reasons behind the new drinking law. Statistically speaking, lawmakers have the upper hand. The Division of Motor Vehicles reports that more than 50% of traffic accidents involve a drunken person. Since a large percentage of these drunken people are teenagers, hopefully this law will decrease this depressing statistic. I suppose they are hoping that a 21-year-old person will think more maturely and responsibly about drinking.

Granted, that's a good point. I personally make better decisions now than I did two years ago. It's natural. But that's not to say that every person 21 or older is capable of handling alcohol responsibly. Let's not forget that there are older alcoholics too.

Let's look at the second reason for the law. Economically speaking, North Carolina just couldn't afford not to go along with the Safe Roads Act. If we didn't agree to raise our drinking age - highway funding would have been cut. If we did raise our drinking age - our highways wouldn't suffer. There would be some public outcry, true. But then you can't please everyone.

I'm sure that there are some people that simply can't understand why anyone would object to the new drinking law. And I must agree that it makes sense. Lives will be saved. I can't argue with that.

I guess what I object to is the possible side effect of this solution. Drugs are now easier to get than alcohol - a pretty sad statement in many ways. But think about it: wouldn't it be easier to catch someone publically buying alcohol illegally than to catch someone privately buying drugs? I really don't know, but I do think it is a possibility too great to ignore.

Now don't get me wrong - I'm quite aware of all the good this new drinking law will do - namely keeping drunk drivers off the road. I just wish that on one hand we weren't considered adults with all the privileges (voting, the draft) and on the other hand we are considered too young to drink. But I guess I should just learn to live with it - do I have a choice?

STUDENTS IN THE NEWS

Melissa Collins, a communications major at UNCW, is a contestant in the Miss Wilmington pageant on Sept. 20 and is this week's Student in the News.

Collins is a veteran of several contests and is currently Delta Sigma Phi Sweetheart.

The 1985 Miss Erwin pageant was the first in which, she ever participated, "...and I won that one," she says with a smile.

Ms. Collins feels that pageants are a valuable experience in gaining self confidence and retaining poise under pressure.

Contestants are judged more for their interviews than for any other part of the pageant - fifty percent is based on questions pertaining to current events and other subjects.

Ms. Collins' portfolio includes Mistress of Ceremonies for the 1985 Miss UNCW pageant, Chief executive assistant to the student body president, and Board of Directors of the United States Students Association.

When asked about the swimsuit competition, Ms. Collins said, "It's like the talent competition, a test of your poise and how you handle pressure. When you appear in front of all those people in your swimsuit, they can see all of your flaws; if you can carry off that part of the competition, you will be able to handle any situation well."

PRESIDENT'S CORNER

FROM THE SENATE CHAMBERS

ALLEN DANIEL VICE PRESIDENT

Welcome back students. The first session of the UNCW student senate convened on Sept. 4. Major topics discussed included the new UNCW mascot, the Media Publications Board, and student parking. Steve Weiss, Mini Cunningham, and Jeff Steinmiller were approved as the Vice Presidents' appointments to serve with senators Phoebe Jeter, Amy Loge, and Kevin Colamer. As a result of the student parking issue, a resolution was passed encouraging the Department of Auxiliary Services to research the possibility of restructuring, parking for first year resident students.

The second session of the year convened on Sept. 11. Swearing in the new senators and accepting newly appointed editors and managers of the medias' proved to be main topics for discussion. Steve Hill was approved as the Media Pub Boards appointment as editor of the Atlantis, Jenni Brown was approved as editor of the Fledgling, Mark Henderson as manager of WLOZ, and Jeff Weaver and temporary editor of the Seahawk. Next week: The Senate goes on a retreat.

Stanly Jordan appears tonight in Kenan Auditorium.

Stanley Jordan to Appear

BY TAMARA DREW

On Thursday, September 18, at 8 p.m., area guitar lovers will have the opportunity to observe one of the major phenomenons of guitar music in action when the renowned Stanley Jordan appears in concert at Kenan Auditorium.

Jordan, one of the most widely acclaimed young guitarists today, will appear solo to demonstrate what has become one of the most remarkable techniques in guitar artistry. The show will spotlight Jordan's mastery in producing unforgettable guitar sounds at lightning speed.

To say that Stanley Jordan is a phenomenal guitar player is putting it lightly. He has totally redefined the boundaries of the guitar, and in doing so, has redefined the boundaries of guitar mastery.

As a guitarist, Jordan has been hailed as being of the same pioneering caliber as guitar greats Charlie Christian and Jimi Hendrix.

The significance of Jordan's exploration of guitar capabilities is obvious in light of the fact that in two short years he has progressed from New York street musician to being one of the most renowned guitarists of his time. By practicing his unprecedented method of fretboard tapping, he has revolutionized the use of counterpoint, facility and range in guitar music and created a whole new world of musical possibilities for his instrument, while also becoming a regularly-mentioned example for study in guitar trade magazines.

Using a pianist's approach to playing, Jordan has mastered a technique on the guitar that sets him miles apart from his peers and has turned the music world on edge.

He is actually able to accompany himself by using his left hand to sound chords and cover bass lines and using the right hand to tap out the single note lines and appreggios of the solo tradition.

The two-handed tapping technique that has become Jordan's ticket to stardom allows the guitarist to effectively sound like two or three guitarists playing together, a feat that has served him to land him in the forefront of the country's musical spotlight.

Jordan went from playing on New York streetcorners to playing for the city's 1984 Kool Jazz Festival. Since that time, he has progressed rapidly to playing other major jazz concerts, making television appearances and working with some of the best jazz performers of modern times including Quincy Jones, Grover Washington Jr, Wynton Marsalis, Dizzy Gillespie and Benny Carter.

In 1985, Jordan released the album MAGIC TOUCH, produced by the legendary guitarist Al Dimeola. MAGIC TOUCH rocketed to the top of Billboard's jazz chart, where it remained for 30 weeks. The album also did well on a pop chart crossover and Jordan's career has skyrocketed since that time.

A native of Chicago, Jordan was able to use the knowledge that he gained as a beginning piano student to revolutionize the guitar. The 27-year-old guitarist made the switch from piano to guitar when he was 11 years old.

He has studied music at Princeton and has concentrated the majority of his studies since that time on music theory as it applies to his art.

Jordan uses his music to touch the lives of his listeners, hoping to inspire them to enjoy the music that he sees as one of the most cohesive humanitarian factors in the modern world.

Jordan's electrifying musical inspirations will undoubtedly be flowing through the air at Kenan Auditorium on Thursday. The staff encourages readers to take advantages of this opportunity to see Stanley Jordan live. Tickets are $2 for students, faculty and staff, and $5 for the general public.

CAMPUS CAPSULE

On September 24, at 7:00 p.m. in the University Union, room 206, Nadine Beaudoin, a representative of the International Raelian Movement will present a slideshow, followed by a discussion on extra-terrestrials.

The goal of the International Raelian Movement is to welcome an extra-terrestrial people named the Elohim (Hebrew word for God), and to inform the general public of mankind's relation to this people.

This presentation promises to be interesting because it will reconcile scientific and religious concepts to explain the origin of man. In addition to answering questions related to our past, this lecture will also introduce a unique philosophy of life involving a technique called Sensual Meditation. Everyone is invited to attend this free presentation.

The Temple of Israel invites the students and faculty of UNCW to join them in their services and to usher in the Jewish New Year of 5747. For more information contact the Temple of Israel at 762-0000.

BOOTERS ENTER NEW SEASON

by Matt Shanklin

Jackie Blackmore is entering his first year as head coach of the UNCW men's soccer team and his team is looking for a little consistency.

UNCW opened its 1986 soccer season on the road at Baptist. The "Hawks dominated the game, winning 3-0. Goals came from David Cresswell, Wade Adams, and freshman Uk Moredock. Moredock's goal was his first of his collegiate career.

Blackmore and crew then came home to play in-state rival, Pembroke State University. UNCW went ahead early, but the Braves of Pembroke came back to tie it before halftime. In the second half, Pembroke took advantage of some sloppy UNCW defense to take a 2-1 lead.

UNCW came back with some strong pressure and a beautiful goal by freshman Dwight Waffard. Waffard, a freshman from Hogard High School here in Wilmington, is a walk-on.

The game then progressed into overtime, where the Hawks scored on a Chris Conway goal. Conway was assisted by David Cresswell, who scored the first goal of the game. The combination of Conway and Cresswell is turning into a potent weapon for Coach Blackmore.

After winning their first two games, UNCW went on a road trip that showed the Seahawks their every weakness. The first stop was James Madison.

UNCW scored first on a Jose Serrano goal. With five minutes left in the game, James Madison scored to send it into overtime. That was all the scoring of the day as UNCW left Harrisonburg with a 1-1 tie.

The final stop (Sun. 14) was against George Mason who is coached by former New York Cosmos coach, Gordon Bradley. The Patriots ripped the Seahawks 7-0 as sophomore all-American, Sam Sumo, tallied three goals.

So as of Monday, September 15, the Seahawks had a 2-1-1 record. Their next match is at the Campbell University Tourney. They open with Campbell Thursday and play South Florida Friday.

In a pre-season soccer poll, the Colonial Athletic Association had two teams in the national top twenty. American, runner-up to NCAA champion, UCLA, last season, is ranked at 18th. George Mason, who thumped UNCW in a conference match last weekend, is in the 20th slot, according to Soccer America.

In other news, former Virginia center, Olden Polynice has decided to turn professional and has signed with a team in the Italian League. He had been playing in the Coors Light League in Houston.

While everybody else has been picking who will be national collegiate football champion, I have yet to voice my opinion. In my opinion the national champion will be decided in the Orange Bowl. Yet it will happen on Sept. 20 instead of Jan. 1. The 20th is when Oklahoma plays Miami.

BY MATT SHANKLIN

If you happen to walk through the UNCW Athletic Department, you might notice a few new faces. These faces represent a new era in UNCW athletics.

The biggest change is the creation of the position of associate athletic director for external affairs. This position was filled by the former assistant director of the N.C. State University Student Aid Association, Jim Bass.

Bass, a 1978 graduate of N.C. State and holds a master's degree in Sports Administration, specialized in fundraising for athletic scholarships and season ticket sales. He also coordinated alumni and support groups in Eastern North Carolina, before coming to UNCW.

As associate athletic director, Bass will be executive of the Student Aid Association and in charge of external affairs. This includes the sports information office and all other public relations.

"I have five goals that I would like to see reached here at UNCW, Bass said in an interview last week.

"I would like to see the financial base expanded so that we may totally fund all the sports, create a positive school spirit on campus and in the community, project harmony in the school and all its departments, surround a marketing program around the new logo, and strive to make UNCW competitive in all its sports," expressed Bass.

BASS

"If there is one thing I would like to stress, it is that we (the athletic department) are striving for quality growth instead of quantity," Bass said.

The one thing that I would like to improve is the school spirit that exists on campus and in the community," said Bass. "This is one area that needs some serious help."

Another new face you will see in the athletic department is Joe Browning, the new sports information director. Browning replaced Bob Roller, who left to take the sports information director's job at East Carolina.

Browning, who came to UNCW from Shepard College in Shepherdstown, W.Va., will be in charge of the publications, publicity, and media relations for the 15 UNCW intercollegiate sports programs.

Other personnel changes include: former men's basketball coach Mel Gibson taking over the job of facilities manager, and Greg Dalton, who held the facilities job last year moving into a business manager position.

Debbie Sherman, another new face at UNCW, is an assistant to Head Trainer Terry Middlewarth. Sherman, who comes from James Madison University, began her duties in August.

Besides these personnel changes, there have been some cosmetic changes to the athletic department. These do not include the three major projects by the athletic department that are scheduled to start in the spring.

The three projects are: the building of a new athletic office complex next to Trask Coliseum and Hanover Hall, a new track facility, and the construction of concrete bleachers around the baseball field.

Besides these changes, that are to take place at a later date, there have been others which have been completed. These include a new free weight room and the repairing of the roof of Hanover Hall.

Other changes that may be noticed is a new bus for the athletic team to travel on. The new bus is the culmination of a two year search by athletic director Bill Brooks to find the bus that would fill the need of the athletic department.

UNCW will keep the old bus so in case there are two teams that need a bus, there won't be a need for a charter. The old bus will also be used by the Pep Band and the cheerleaders for away televised games. This was a request by the conference.

The last big change will be a new scoreboard for Trask Coliseum. The scoreboard, similar to the ones currently in the Greensboro Coliseum and the Omni in Atlanta, will be in place around November 1st.

So as you can see, the athletic department has been busy meeting the challenges of a growing university's athletic needs.

MEN GOLFERS FINISH THIRD

BY MATT SHANKLIN

The UNCW men's golf team finished third out of 21 teams in the Greensboro College Invitational. UNCW finished with a two day, 36 hole total of 619, 18 shots behind tournament winner UNC Charlotte who finished with a total of 601.

UNCW was led by David Teem who fired a one-over-par 73 on the final day to finish with a two day total of 152, just four shots behind individual winner Chris Hunsucker of UNC Charlotte. Hunsucker shot 73-75 for a 148 total, edging teammate Ron Hooper and Chip Minick of Francis Marion by one shot.

"I think we just got over the first tournament jitters," said first-year Head Coach Calvin Lane, explaining UNCW's better play in the final round. "Plus, I think it was just a matter of better concentration."

Lane, who resigned as soccer coach last fall after 15 seasons, became head coach of the men's golf team last winter.

Other UNCW standouts were Brian Hepler (79-76-155), Travis Conner (80-76-156), and Jay Wyrick (77-81-158).

UNCW will next be in action September 27, at the James Madison Invitational in Ground Hog Mountain, VA.

VOLLEYBALLERS HAVE HIGH HOPES

from staff reports

Like most of the athletic programs at UNC Wilmington, prospects for Coach Kathy McDaniel's volleyball team are looking bright.

The energetic coach of the Lady Seahawks has beefed up the schedule, added an assistant coach and implemented a weight program in an effort to improve UNCW's volleyball fortunes. That's after placing third in the Colonial Athletic Association (CAA) last season with an 18-13 record overall, 5-2 in the CAA.

Perhaps the biggest difference this season is the schedule, which now consists primarily of Division I opponents. Upgrading the school's opposition was on McDaniel's long-term list of improvements, so she says the schedule may be too challenging.

"That's the biggest difference this season...the schedule," said McDaniel, who enters her second season. "We're playing some better teams and, hopefully, it won't break our spirit. I've been preparing them for a better schedule, so I think we'll do fine."

With the help of new assistant Elaine Penn, an All-Conference volleyball and All-American basketball performer at Greensboro College, McDaniel initiated a weight training program for the squad. She's hoping the additional emphasis will show on the court when the team opens the season Sept. 15 against Methodist College and Campbell University in Fayetteville, N.C.

"With the schedule as tough as it is, I would like to match our win-loss record last year and improve on it," added McDaniel. "I'm not unrealistic, but it's something I think we can do."

McDaniel, who lists hitting and serving as strengths for her club in '85-86, plans to center her team around returnees Stefanie Wall, Martha Byrd, Lisa Mills, Dede Devoley and Kim Jones.

Wall (Whitsett, N.C.), the squad's middle hitter, should be the team leader this season while Byrd (Yadkinville, N.C.), a senior setter, is finishing up an outstanding career after making the team as a walk-on three years ago.

Mills (Greenville, N.C.) is back for her second season at UNCW after gaining a wealth of experience last year as a freshman. McDaniel is expecting big things from Mills, one of the best servers in the conference.

The soft-spoken Devoley (Wilmington, N.C.) benefited the most from the new weight program and should be one of the top hitters in the conference this fall.

McDaniel's first recruiting crop is a good one, headed by Yvonne Holan (Fayetteville, N.C.), Laurie Brown (Chapel Hill, N.C.) and Tania Fields (Fayetteville, N.C.).

Holan, Coach Mac's top recruit, is an outside hitter and must fill some big shoes in replacing All-Conference performer Jane Benton. Holan was a consistent hitter and passer at Westover.

UNCW played well in last year's CAA post-season tournament. The Lady Seahawks defeated East Carolina in the first round and downed American in the quarterfinals before losing in the semifinals to league runner-up James Madison.

"William and Mary and James Madison are always strong," McDaniel said of the conference race. "And East Carolina didn't lose any players. Of course, I'd like to win the conference championship, but if we don't, I'd like to finish second or third."

Right now, though, McDaniel must get her club physically prepared for the campaign. Several players, including team leaders Wall and Byrd, are nursing nagging injuries that could affect the team's start early in the campaign.

LADY GOLFERS LOOK FOR BIRDIE SEASON

from staff reports

UNC Wilmington's young women's golf team must mature quickly for Coach Lea Dudley's Lady Seahawks to make their mark this season.

UNCW opens the fall schedule this weekend by participating in the Longwood College Invitational (Sept. 12-13) in Farmville, Va.

"It's important that we come out of the chute quickly," said Dudley, who begins her seventh season with UNCW. "The hardest thing about playing the first two tournaments is the course. Local knowledge really pays off, so the players will have to trust me to tell them how to play the holes. And that's hard for young golfers to do."

Dudley has nine golfers listed on the 1986-87 roster, including just two upperclassmen. Colleen Whildin (Auburn, NJ) is the lone senior on the club and Sandy Chester (Syracuse, NY) is the only junior.

Three sophomores and four freshmen make up the remainder of the team. Betsy Lawrence (Hudson, Ohio), Vera McVicker (Cincinnati, Ohio) and Diane Ross (Laurens, S.C.) are beginning their second year while Paige Cribb (Georgetown, S.C.), Melinda Dobson (Chesapeake, Va.), Regina Harkins (Hopkinsville, Ky.) and Mary Thomas (Leonardtown, Md.) are first-year players.

"This is the best young team I've ever worked with," continued Dudley. "We're going to make some mistakes early, but I think we'll be in a position to win some tournaments soon."

"It will be very difficult to qualify for the nationals this year. I really feel, however, that this team will qualify for the nationals before they finish here."

"It will be very difficult to qualify for the nationals before they finish here."

An excellent recruiting year has boosted Dudley's hopes. The UNCW coach's freshman crop is talented.

Cribb and Harkins were state junior champions in South Carolina and Kentucky respectively, and Dobson and Thomas won numerous honors in high schools.

"Our strength this season will be our willingness to work as a team. We're still learning, but the fact that the players are willing to learn is our biggest strength."

"The players want to get better. If they're willing to put in the time and effort, they can succeed."

Mary Thomas and Melinda Dobson have been real surprises for us," said Dudley.

"Mary is a very coachable player and has the strength and ability to be an excellent player. Melinda comes to us with a good background in junior golf and an excellent attitude."

Cribb and Lawrence, meanwhile, may be hampered early in the season. Cribb, a three-sport standout in high school, was involved in an automobile accident this summer and is still recovering from the ordeal. Lawrence suffered a broken wrist last spring, but is coming along well.

Following the Longwood tourney, the Lady Seahawks step through some practice rounds before continuing the season Sept. 25-26 at the James Madison University Invitational in Harrisonburg, Va.

The rest of the fall schedule has UNCW's women at the Beacon Woods Invitational (Bayonet Points, Fla.) Oct. 3-4, the Duke Invitational (Durham, NC) Oct. 10-11 and the Penn State Invitational (University Park, PA) Oct. 31.

"The thing we're missing the most is experience," said Dudley. "If we can get past the first two tournaments, I'm counting on using some of the latter rounds to qualify for the nationals. I'm excited because this group wants to get better."

from staff reports

A new era in soccer at the University of North Carolina Wilmington begins this fall as Jackie Blackmore takes over the helm of the successful program.

Blackmore served one year as an assistant for former coach Calvin Lane and inherits one of the most stable programs in the region. Lane concluded a 15-year career with the Seahawks last fall.

The 35-year-old Blackmore faces several challenges in his quest to vault the Green & Gold back into the regional rankings. He'll meet those challenges by calling on years of coaching and playing experience.

Here's how UNCW's soccer fortunes look in 1986:

While UNCW's '86 schedule is one of the toughest ever, it also features one of the most attractive home slates in recent years.

The Seahawks' boosters are set to play 17 matches in all, including seven against Colonial Athletic Association (CAA) opposition. Blackmore's team plays eight matches in Wilmington and will play five of its last seven matches at home.

A top list of opponents are CAA rivals American, George Mason and William and Mary—all home opponents this season. American was the surprise team of the NCAA Division I finals one year ago as the Eagles pushed UCLA to the limit in the championship game. George Mason will rally around Sam Sumo, the CAA's top scorer, and William and Mary will be looking to improve its third place finish in '85.

Only one newcomer appears on UNCW's schedule this season, but South Florida of the Sun Belt Conference is a worthy one. The Bulls posted a 12-6-2 record one year ago and Coach Dan Holcomb enters his 22nd year at SFU with a solid 207-79-19 record.

The loss of freshman sensation Kaiuta Sikyala to injury could be the toughest one to absorb for Blackmore in his first season with the Seahawks. It also leaves a void at the midfield field position in the fall campaign.

Rodriguez finished a brilliant four-year career with the Seahawks in '85. His scoring and leadership ability made him a valuable asset to Lane and Blackmore.

David Cresswell, a sophomore, anchors the position and will draw on his first year of experience to help the Seahawks. Cresswell has good size and excellent skills and rifled off the second most shots (26) on the team last season. Returnee Steve Allnutt, a spot starter last year, will give UNCW depth in the midfield area.

Terry Lovell, last year's Most Valuable Player on the squad, heads the list of backs returning this fall.

A Junior College All-America transfer from Prince George's Community College in Maryland, Lovell made an immediate impact for the Seahawks. The 5-11, 165-pounder will play sweeper for the Seahawks and should be one of the players to watch in the CAA this season.

Other players who will contribute at this position are junior Rob Lill, senior Edgar Toms and skilled freshman Greg Paetow of Medford, NJ.

With veteran Donnie Lewis back in goal, Blackmore won't have to worry much about offensive minded opponents. The two-year starter from Fayetteville, N.C., returns for his third season as UNCW's top protector.

Lewis kept the Seahawks in several games last year by virtue of his keeping ability. Overall, he recorded seven shutouts and held four other teams, including NCAA Division I finalist American University, to just one goal. The New Jersey native, an All-Conference candidate in 1986, recorded three season-ending shutouts over Coker, Coastal Carolina and Campbell.

With all the positive factors in Coach Blackmore's hand, he can only lean back and wonder how good his young Hawks will perform. Hopefully his first season as coach will be a kicking success.

at the forward position that must be filled by some inexperienced players.

Sikyala led the club in scoring in '85 as a freshman, totaling 19 points for UNCW. The Silver Spring, Md., native was an offensive threat from start to finish for the Seahawks and a late-season knee injury will force him to sit out this fall.

Blackmore will count on returnees Chris Conway and Wade Adams at the forward position, along with creative sophomore Jose Serrano.

Serrano was one of the top newcomers on the squad last season and brings excellent bloodlines into his second season at UNCW. A teammate of Sikyala's at Montgomery Blair High School, Serrano is also the nephew of Gil Castilla, who led the Seahawks in scoring three straight years in the late 70's.

Serrano gained experience through much of last year and held his own by the end of the season. Blackmore calls the 5-7, 145-pound a "very imaginative-type" player and Serrano proved that in East Carolina University's tournament by performing well.

Returning experience and new talent should offset the loss of departed senior Alberto Rodriguez and provide good depth for UNCW

WITH KING OF THE YOUNG DODGERS

Kenny King, a former UNCW Seahawk pitcher, is now pitching for the Los Angeles Dodgers rookie team in the Pioneer League. King's pitching ability has led the Great Falls, (Montana) Dodgers into postseason play. Last year's ace for the Seahawks, King has been just as impressive in his first season.

King, the Dodgers 10th round draft pick, has a 5-1 record with a 3.14 ERA. King has pitched 48 2/3 innings, while striking out 49 batters and allowing only 15 walks. The Los Angeles Dodgers have a history of developing young pitchers and with his talent the future seems bright for Kenny King.

HAWKS SWEEP CAROLINA

The UNCW Seahawk baseball team opened its fall baseball schedule against UNC-Chapel Hill with a sweep of the Tar Heels in a doubleheader. The Hawks overpowered the Tar Heels, 11-3, in the first game.

The Tar Heels took an early lead in the top of the third inning on two singles and a stolen base. The Seahawks struck right back in the bottom of the fourth on a John Catalano walk and a Chuck Jones home run that made the score 4-2. Chuck Jones hit two home runs in the game, his second coming in the 6th inning.

UNCW continued its onslaught and pulled away in the later innings to secure the victory.

In the second game—the Seahawks came back to slip by the Heels 7-6.

The Hawks used a 1-out single by Chuck Jones, a double by Calvin Garrett, and a 2-run double by Mike Byers, to erase a 6-5 Carolina lead.

The Hawks had jumped to an early 4-0 lead in the first inning before Carolina came back to take the lead. Mike Byers led the team on the day going 4 for 6 with a double, home run, and 5 RBI on the day.

Coach Gunthrie was very pleased with the team's performance and said, "Today allowed us to see what we have and what we don't, but most importantly we have gained experience." It looks to be a very promising year for the UNCW baseball team.

CROSS COUNTRY...RUNNING TO THE TOP

from staff reports

Improvement is the overall theme as Coach Dave Agosta's UNCW Wilmington cross country teams began the fall season (Sept. 13) by running in the Pembroke State University Invitational.

Agosta, who begins his second season as head of the cross country program at UNCW, says the men's and women's teams will be much improved over one year ago.

"We have very high goals and really want to improve the program," said the 25-year-old Agosta. "Our new athletes know we are on the ground floor of an exciting program. There's absolutely no doubt that we're going to make a big jump in the conference."

A "tremendous jump" in numbers and quality has Agosta optimistic for the Seahawks' chances. While Navy and George Mason will field strong teams this season, the UNCW coach predicts a significant leap for Wilmington.

Agosta will back up his claim with the first recruited class of cross country runners in the school's history. He aims to shatter last year's combined dual meet record of 9-3.

"Our strength will be enthusiasm and desire," added Agosta, himself an All-America runner at Bowling Green State University during his collegiate career. He also beefed up the schedule to improve the level of competition.

"As the team improves," he reflected, "the schedule is going to improve. We're running against more of the ACC and Southeast Conference schools this season, but I think it will pay off in the coming years."

Agosta has 10 runners listed on the men's roster, headed by sophomore Layne Fuller (Burlington, N.C.) and freshman David Simmons (Laurinburg, N.C.).

Fuller lettered as a freshman in 1984 before sitting out last season. The 5-9, 138-pounder returns to the club this fall and could be one of the Seahawks' top runners.

Simmons, meanwhile, compiled a list of impressive credentials during his prep career at Scotland High School. He was named All-Conference, All-Sectional, All-Regional and All-State in the 1,600 Meter Run, posting a personal best time of 4:22.0.

Last year's men's team placed fifth in the CAA, but Agosta is counting on a better showing this fall.

He said, "With a very good effort, we could finish as high as third this year. The runners came back in good shape. Inexperience will be our only weakness."

Agosta's recruits must make the transition from running 5,000 meters in high school to the 5-mile mark in college. George Walker holds the UNCW record with a time of 24:51 during the ECAC South Championships in 1984.

The women's team has eight members in 1986-87, including five freshmen. The only returnees are Fran O'Connell (Huntington, W.V.), Martha Porter (Salem, N.C.) and Sheila Viola (Durham, N.C.).

Freshman Kris York (Tulsa, OK.) and Sarah Harris (Statesville, N.C.) should be Agosta's top runners. York was a high school All-American at Jenks High School and was listed by Harrier Magazine as one of the country's top 50 high school runners last season. Harris was a conference and regional champion at Statesville, and earned All-State honors.

"The women should make it all the way to third place this year," said Agosta. UNCW's women placed last in 1985-86. "Most of our freshmen will break the school record the first time they run."

Stacey Almond holds the UNCW record of 19:08 in the 5,000 Meters. Almond set the mark in the Pembroke State Invitational in 1983.

TEEM ANCHORS

from staff reports

Calvin Lane is happy to have senior captain David Teem in his stable for the UNC Wilmington golf coach's first season with the team. And it's no wonder.

Teem, a veteran performer from Sanderson High School in Raleigh, N.C., begins his fourth straight season as the school's No. 1 golfer. That's good news for Lane, who shifted from soccer to golf this fall.

"We have good stability with three upperclassmen returning," said Lane. "The coach will be #### counting on that stability when he takes the club to Greensboro's Bryant Park Monday for the Greensboro College Invitational.

Teem, who won the William and Mary Invitational last season, is the only senior on Lane's squad this fall. Jay Wyrick from Burlington, N.C., and Lin Melvin out of Elizabethtown, N.C., give UNCW experience up front.

"David has great golfing ability," Lane said of the 6-0, 163-pounder.

"He's very efficient in his golf game. David thinks his way around the course. He places the ball in good position and he's always under control."

CROSS COUNTRY WOMEN FINISH THIRD

from staff reports

The UNCW women's cross country team finished third in the Pembroke Invitational meet while the men's team finished seventh.

The women runners were led by freshman Kris York. Her winning time of 18 minutes, 56 seconds was also a school record.

UNCW FOOTBALL???

With the growth of the UNCW club football team many have asked and wondered what does the future hold for a UNCW football program.

Athletic Director Bill Brooks states, "The school and the athletic department will only grow as fast as the budget." At this point the budget is unable to allocate enough funds for a football team.

A study conducted by the athletic department at Old Dominion University discovered, to develop a football program, costs an initial 12 million dollars. Also, an average of one million dollars yearly is needed for scholarships, coaches salaries, and other necessities. This money must come from revenue generated by the athletic department. No money from the state may ever be used by the athletic department.

For UNCW to be considered an NCAA Division I school, on the same scale as East Carolina and North Carolina, UNCW would need to have a 30,000 seat stadium with an average attendance of 18,000.

Besides the cost of keeping up the football team, UNCW will have to build a stadium. Even then, UNCW will have to have a lot more money than it has ever dreamed of, to run a football team.

AT THE MOVIES

WITH ANITA BRADSHAW AND BILL THOMAS

Wilmington is being presented with an international six-film series. "Mona Lisa" is the first of these.

This film is about an ex-con and a host of prostitutes, but two in particular. George (Bob Hoskins) is the ex-con. He is hired to be a chauffeur for Simone (Cathy Tyson), a prostitute. They both work for Mortwell (Michael Caine), about who it can be said (if one is being kind) is a sleazy, no good, s... well you get the point.

Simone and George despise each other at the outset of their relationship. As time passes, however, they begin a mutual admiration society, or George does anyway. Simone pretends to so she can enlist George's help to find Cathy (Kate Hardie).

Cathy was a young prostitute Simone left to work the streets while she herself went to work for a more exclusive clientele. As George falls more deeply in love with Simone, Simone becomes more obsessed with finding Cathy.

When finally Cathy is found she's in pretty bad shape. She's been heavily drugged by Mortwell so that he can make pornographic films. George rescues Cathy and gets her to safety and to Simone.

One day George comes into the room Cathy and Simone are staying and discovers why Simone has been so relentless in her search for Cathy. They're lovers. Needless to say the love-stricken George Thomas (Robbie Coltrane) that makes synthetic spaghetti as well as other priceless objects and he's able to talk to him about Simone. He's able to carry on with his life as if Simone and Cathy had been two figments of his imagination.

"Mona Lisa" is a film you'll definitely want to fit into your fall itinerary. The plot seems to be the old stand-by of two unlikely people falling in love, but the twists and turns, and the final out-come are anything but the same old thing.

OFFICIALS SAY

Lifeguards On Duty When Praisner Died

By Jefferson Weaver
Staff Writer

In a statement released in Friday's press conference, Chancellor William Wagoner stated that lifeguards were on duty the night that Stephen Praisner, a UNCW sophomore, drowned in the Trask coliseum pool.

According to investigators, Praisner drowned about 8:30 p.m., half an hour before the lifeguards closed the pool for the night. The body was not discovered until 8 a.m. Tuesday morning, when Tom Shaw, a lifeguard, was swimming in the Trask pool.

Reports say that Shaw swam six laps in Lane 7 when he noticed a body submerged in Lane 6. Shaw immediately summoned Dave Allen, UNCW swim coach, who called Campus Police.

Praisner was pronounced dead on the scene.

According to testimony from Praisner's friends and other students, the victim visited the pool approximately 1 p.m. to check the schedule for open swim times for that night.

Praisner and some friends ate supper in the school cafeteria and left there around 5:10 p.m.

Praisner left campus with some friends for a short time. While they were running some errands, the victim told his friends he wanted to be back on campus in time for the open swim at 7 p.m.

Praisner's friends reported dropping him off in front of Galloway Hall around 6:15 p.m. The lifeguards opened the pool on schedule.

Two students reported seeing a student matching Praisner's description in the pool around 8:15 p.m.

The three unidentified lifeguards who were on duty at the time of the accident began closing the pool at 9 p.m. One of the lifeguards asked another for assistance when she had trouble securing the door to the women's locker room. The second lifeguard then secured the men's locker room and began turning out lights.

The lifeguards then left the building.

Praisner was remembered as a quiet student who had never used illegal drugs or alcohol. According to family and friends, he was an accomplished swimmer and had been a scuba diver since he was fourteen years old.

There is no evidence of foul play according to Dr. Charles Cahill, who is involved in the investigation.

Campus Police Lt. Billy Dawson and Officer Regina Lawson were the main investigating officers, and more than 30 people were interviewed during the past week.

2400 Students Face Class Cancellation

By Joseph Allen
Staff Writer

A new North Carolina state law that went into effect July 1, 1986 may cause 2400 UNCW students to be barred from attending classes on campus on September 27, 1986.

The new state law requires that all new freshmen, transfer students and students who are reenrolling after a break in their education submit a copy of their immunization records to the Student Health and Wellness Center, said William A. Bryan, Vice-Chancellor of Student Affairs.

UNCW students required to turn in a copy of their immunization records had 30 days to do so, starting on August 27—the first day of the 1986-87 school year.

Students who do not turn in a copy of their immunization records to the UNCW Student Health and Wellness Center will have their class registration cancelled, he said.

"We don't want to be required to cancel classes," Bryan said. Under the new state law, UNCW would be forced to cancel the registration of any student who has not turned in a copy of their immunization record.

Approximately 2,400 students at UNCW need to turn in a copy of their immunization records, said Bryan.

"A list of the students who need to turn in a copy of their immunization records is constantly being updated at the UNCW Student Health and Wellness Center," said Catherine Vangelow, a Physician's Assistant and the Director of the Student Health and Wellness Center.

Students who want to check to see if they need to turn in a copy of their immunization records before the September 27, 1986 deadline can call the Student Health and Wellness Center at 395-3386 or 395-3280 for information, said Ms. Vangelow said.

In most cases it's just a simple matter of the students forgetting to turn in their immunization records, she said.

The reason for the new state law comes is due the closure of colleges from outbreaks of measles epidemics.

Public health concerns over the possibility of college campuses closing caused the North Carolina General Assembly to ratify the bill proposing that immunization records be kept on file at campus across North Carolina, Ms. Vangelow said.

The American College Health Association was a driving force behind the North Carolina's General Assembly's ratification of the bill that requires immunization records filed on North Carolina college campuses, she said. "The American College Health Association is trying to make the filing of immunization records at college campuses a requirement in all 50 states," she said.

Attorney Addresses Students on Alcohol

By Olivia Kayler
Staff Writer

On Wednesday, Sept. 17, Ms. Betty Bunting, the University of North Carolina General Administration Attorney, addressed student groups and professional staff on policies and liabilities related to the 21 year drinking age.

Ms. Bunting spoke to the Residence Life Staff, registered student organizations, student government association, fraternities and sororities.

This meeting was mandatory for any group who desires to obtain an alcohol permit in the upcoming year. The information provided in this meeting was not only important for student groups but to all students as well.

The following is a partial list of regulations concerning alcohol purchase, possession, and consumption emphasized by Bunting.

It shall be unlawful for any person:

- * to consume fortified wine, spirituous liquor, or mixed beverages or to offer such beverages to another person on any public road, street, highway, or sidewalk.

- * to display publicly at an athletic contest fortified wine, spirituous liquor, or mixed beverages.

- * to sell or give any type of alcoholic beverage to anyone less than 21 years old.

- * less than 21 years old to purchase, to attempt to purchase, or to possess any type of alcohol.

- * less than 21 years old to aid or abet another underage person in the possession or consumption of alcohol. This is a misdemeanor punishable by a fine up to five hundred dollars or imprisonment for not more than 6 months, or both, in the discretion of the court.

- * over the lawful age to purchase alcohol to aid or abet an underage person in the possession or consumption of alcohol. This is a misdemeanor punishable by a fine up to two thousand dollars or imprisonment for not more than 2 years or both, in the discretion of the court.

- * to obtain or attempt to obtain alcoholic beverages by using or attempting to use a fraudulent or altered license or identification.

anyone.

Ms. Bunting comments, "We can't stop the drunk from drinking, but we can stop those who give the person alcohol".

In reference to the General Assembly Bunting said, "They've winked at it for a lot of years, but they are not winking at it anymore".

If a person is involved in any way in the violation of these regulations, that person will be held liable for any damages resulting from the violation. For example, if a friend gives alcohol to an intoxicated person and that person is then involved in an accident caused by the abuse of alcohol, the supplier will be held liable for any damages from the accident.

Another point Ms. Bunting emphasized is a misdemeanor will never be erased from a person's record. If charged, it is there for life.

The ABC division in Raleigh is targeting campuses. These laws are not to be taken lightly

Man Arrested for Exposure

By Jefferson Weaver
Staff Writer

A subject suspected of exposing himself in Wrightsville Beach was apprehended Friday at UNCW by Campus Police officers, who detained him until Wrightsville Beach police arrived. The suspect was charged with trespassing and indecent exposure. The man is in his late twenties and has had previous convictions on exhibition charges.

A student was referred for counseling after being charged with DWI Sept. 19. The student was riding a bicycle when he was apprehended by police.

Another intoxicated student was assisted Friday after becoming ill and sustaining injuries after falling down.

An illegally parked truck caused a multiple vehicle accident on Sept. 16 that resulted in all three drivers being charged.

The delivery truck was parked in a right lane in parking lot "A" when another vehicle tried to pass. The second vehicle met an oncoming car that had an unidentified person was riding on the hood.

The truck driver was charged with illegal parking, and the two drivers were charged with driving left of center and allowing a person to ride on a part of a vehicle not intended for passengers.

In other reports: A female student reported that her car was heavily vandalized while parked in lot "M" Sept. 17. Damage estimates were not available, and there are no suspects at this time.

Several reports of lost or stolen parking decals were received over the past week, from both on and off campus. There are no suspects at this time.

Bike Theft a Major Problem on Campus

By Anne Simpson
Staff Writer

It happens too often: a student comes outside to find his bike gone.

During Spring and Fall Semester of the 1985-86 school year, over 81 bicycles were reported stolen to the UNCW Department of Public Safety. The value of these bicycles totaled over $17,248.

26 of these bicycles were not locked. An additional 25 had the wheels locked to the frame but were not secured to any stationary object. Of all these bicycles stolen, only 36 of them were registered.

See Bicycles, pg. 3

Bike Thieves don't always look the part.

Levy Named DeLoach Recipient

WILMINGTON-Dr. Jack B. Levy, professor and chairman of the department of chemistry at the University of North Carolina at Wilmington, has been named the first recipient of the Will S. DeLoach Professorship in Chemistry.

This prestigious appointment will be effective for a five-year period. It carries an annual stipend from the endowed professorship in addition to the recipient's regular salary plus a discretionary fund to support various professional activities.

The endowed professorship, the only one of its kind at UNCW, was given by Dr. Will S. DeLoach who served as professor and chairman of the chemistry department from 1963 until his retirement in 1976.

He was awarded emeritus status in 1978 and in October, 1985, the chemistry and physics building was named DeLoach Hall in honor of his numerous contributions to the university.

The recipient of the professorship, who must be an upper level instructor in the chemistry department, is chosen on the basis of excellence in teaching, research and service. The individual selected for the appointment is expected to maintain a high record of achievement in these three areas during the term of the appointment.

"I had an opportunity to work, side by side with DeLoach when he was chairman of the chemistry department and I was

A 1962 graduate of Duke University, Levy earned a master's degree and doctorate in chemistry from N.C. State University. He later did postdoctoral research in chemistry at Cambridge University. Levy has taught at UNCW since 1968 and has served as chairman of the chemistry department since 1975.

During part of that time, he also chaired the physics department until a separate physics department was re-established during the summer of 1986. He also holds an adjunct professorship chairman of the biology department," said Dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, Daniel B. Pyler. "It wasn't a surprise to me when he set this up and established as the only criteria excellence in teaching, research and service."

"When I received the recommendation from the selection committee that Jack Levy be named, I was delighted because he certainly portrays the type of individual that Dr. DeLoach envisioned because of his excellence in all those areas. Jack's selection is a most appropriate one, and I see a number of people in the chemistry department that five years hence might also be eligible," Pyler said.

Levy commented that he was very happy to be the first DeLoach Professor. "I have a high regard of Dr. DeLoach," he said. "We worked very closely together from the time he hired me until his retirement. He served as an excellent model as department chairman, consulting with the chemistry faculty on every important departmental issue. He and I agreed on virtually everything."

Names May Affect Job Opportunities

By Joseph Allen
Staff Writer

Ethel and Candace are applying for the same job. Both are hoping to become the new manager of International Industries, Inc.

They are both given a typical job application which asks them to answer the typical questions. Both Ethel and Candace fill out the applications which ask their names, education, and experience. Interestingly enough, both Ethel and Candace have excellent educations and similar experience. And as a side note, both are attractive young women.

Who do you think would get the job as manager of International Industries, Inc.? If you guessed Candace, you are wrong!

A study at Rensselaer

Polytechnic Institute shows that male bosses are more likely to hire women with non-sexy names as managers than their sexily-named counterparts. For the study male students were asked to evaluate the sexiness of 250 females. According to the male students, Christine and Candace were very sexy names. Names like Ethel and Zelda were not sexy.

Other students then reviewed two job applications, one with a sexy name, and the other with a non-sexy name. Although the qualifications were identical, men hired more Almas and Florences than Michelles and Jennifers. And the Almas and Florences were even awarded higher salaries.

If the results of this survey hold true, does this mean that women may not get a job if their name is too "suggestive?" Will the courts be suddenly overflowing with women wanting to change their names in order to get a job?

The answer is happily "no" according to Sue Westfall, Assistant Manager of the Employment Security Commission of North Carolina in Jacksonville.

When applying for a job, "skills not name" count, Westfall said. She did say looks might come into play if a woman was applying for a job that required them.

So, if you are a woman looking for a job, you should be able to find one, regardless of what your name is.

YWCA Offers Free Screening

As part of National Breast Cancer Awareness Week, Sept. 29 - Oct. 5, the YWCA at 2815 S. College Road will sponsor a breast cancer awareness workshop on Oct. 3. The program, conducted by the New Hanover County Health Department, will inform women about the progress being made against breast cancer and the importance of early detection in fighting this disease. It will include instruction in proper breast self-examination, an essential element in early detection and successful treatment of this disease. There also will be a discussion on the importance of regular physical examination and the role of mammography. After the workshop private free breast exams will be provided for anyone who wishes to stay.

The workshop begins with a YWCA luncheon at 11:30 a.m. The cost for this is $4.00. Women may participate in the luncheon or come just for the program. The program, which will run from 12:30 to 1:30 p.m., is open to the public at no cost. Free breast examination and individualized instruction on self-examination will begin at 1:30 p.m.

Women are asked to call the YWCA at 799-6820 to pre-register for this event. The deadline for luncheon reservations is Wednesday, October 1.

Business Index Up

The level of business activity in North Carolina rose in July, according to the First Wachovia Business Index. The Index registered 136.7, up 0.4 % from the June level. The increase was due to improvements in three of the four index components.

Total nonagricultural employment in the state rose 0.2 %, while new claims for unemployment insurance declined 4.0 %. The average workweek in manufacturing was unchanged from June at 40.6 hours.

Manufacturing employment was up 0.2 % in July. Higher employment was reported in the textile, apparel, and electrical machinery sectors. For the nation, manufacturing employment fell 0.1 % during the month.

Employment in the nonmanufacturing sector recorded a gain of 0.2 %. Higher employment was reported in construction, services, and government. The number of persons employed in the trade sector was unchanged from June.

The seasonally adjusted unemployment rate for North Carolina was 4.8 % in July, down 0.2 % from June. The national rate was 6.9 %, also a decline of 0.2 percentage points.

The First Wachovia North Carolina Business Index measures the level of economic activity in North Carolina on a monthly basis. Using 1976 as a base of 100, it reflects indicators of employment, industrial production and construction activity in the state's economy. All data are seasonally adjusted for historic seasonal trends and are adjusted to smooth statistical aberrations.

Students, Area Mourn Passing of Praisner

By Jefferson Weaver
Staff Writer

In an official statement released last Wednesday, Chancellor William H. Wagoner of the University of North Carolina at Wilmington expressed deep sympathy for the family of Stephen Praisner who drowned in the Trask coliseum pool Sept. 16.

Around the campus, other students expressed shock and sorrow at the death of the UNCW sophomore who was well liked by his friends and classmates.

According to officials, the pool is closed from 9 p.m. to 8 a.m. During regular swim hours, a lifeguard is on duty. It is still not known how Praisner gained access to the pool area.

Dr. Leon Andrews signed the death certificate Sept. 17. The cause of death was officially listed as accidental drowning.

Student Government President B. Allan Dudley expressed his sorrow Thursday night in a telephone interview.

"When I first heard the name I didn't recognize who he was...then it hit me. I remembered seeing him around the SGA office. He was a real nice guy. This is such a tragedy."

President Dudley was not the only student express grief.

On Wednesday, a memory book was set up in the Union lobby. Thursday evening, two white bows and a banner carrying the student's name were affixed to the columns on the main entrance to the University Union.

Gov. Jim Martin sent a letter to the family and students expressing his family's grief at the tragedy.

SGA Vice-President Allen Daniel will be flying to New Jersey to attend the funeral next week.

Anne Simpson, Seahawk Staff Writer, attended the memorial service last Wednesday for Stephen Praisner.

"Steven Praisner is dead, and it seems like such a waste."

The words of Bob Haywood, UNCW Campus Minister, echoed the feelings of those gathered at the memorial service Wednesday - Steven's family, friends, those who knew him well and those who never really knew him but still wanted to express their sadness at this tragedy.

"I find myself wishing I could have gotten to know him better," continued Haywood. "He was kind of quiet, content to live his life his way."

Haywood talked about the UNCW sophomore's interest in track and swimming, and Steven's closeness to his family.

"The last time Steven and all his family were together was for a dive trip to the Bahamas, and they had such a good time."

Harold L. McSwain, pastor of the St. Matthew Lutheran Church where the service was held, said of Steven's death, "It doesn't make sense."

That's how we all felt.

Johnson Responds to Traffic Conditions

By Olivia Kayler
Staff Writer

Traffic congestion is an increasing problem at UNCW. In an interview with Joseph M. Johnson Jr., Director of Public Safety, Johnson reveals strategies that can be taken to alleviate this problem.

A pressing problem in the student's opinion is a lack of convenient parking spaces. Johnson suggests parking in less congested lots such as Parking Lot K beside Trask Coliseum. He points out that walking across campus is more efficient than riding across campus in search of a parking space.

He also suggests leaving your car in one space for the entire day rather than parking from lot to lot in between classes. Fewer drivers awaiting spaces near classes reduces congestion and decreases potential accidents.

When questioned about the number of parking spaces in comparison to the number of cars, Johnson replied, "We don't have an overall crunch of parking spaces...The problem really lies in our system because we're all basically lazy."

The number of automobiles is not the only factor contributing to traffic congestion. Bicyclists also present a problem when many of them do not obey traffic regulations.

Joe Johnson stresses that bicyclists are subject to the same rules of the road as motorists. They should drive on the right hand side of the road and should yield to pedestrians. One regulation bicyclists may be unaware of is bicyclists must walk bicycles across pedestrians crosswalks.

In Johnson's viewpoint, the most critical problem concerning bicyclists is overloading passengers. Two or more people on a bicycle decreases the driver's control of the bicycle and thus increases the likelihood of an accident.

When bicyclists must drive on sidewalks, Johnson urges bicyclists to obey the pedestrian's right of way. Weaving in and out of traffic on sidewalks increases the potential of an accident.

Pedestrians must also follow regulations to help aid the flow of traffic.

Johnson advocates continued use of pedestrian crosswalks. He welcomes any information concerning "near misses" between pedestrians and vehicles.

"We want to know details, not to prosecute but to know congested areas."

Traffic congestion will not decrease without the cooperation of all involved. The Department of Public Safety accepts all suggestions which may help them serve the UNCW campus community effectively.

Bicycles

Bicycle Registration is provided free of charge by the UNCW Department of Public Safety to all students, faculty and staff. Registering your bicycle cannot prevent it from being stolen, but many thieves seek out less identifiable targets. A registered bike also offers positive identification, improving chances of getting it back.

The Campus Police offer these steps to prevent bicycle theft:

- *Register the serial number, make, model and description with Campus Police. There is no charge for this service, and it will ensure the return of your bicycle if stolen and recovered.

- This creates a permanent record of your bicycle and serial number for police files throughout the entire U.S.

- *Never leave your bicycle unattended and unattended, even for a short time.

- *Always chain both the rear wheel and the frame to a legal stationary object in a conspicuous place.

- *Use a case-hardened chain and sturdy padlock. The chain should be at least 3/8" thick and covered with plastic.

- *If you leave campus for an extended period of time - a weekend or long holiday - put your bicycle in your residence hall room. Do not leave it chained to an outside rack for long periods of time.

- *Check periodically on your bicycle. If it is missing, report to campus Police immediately.

- *Also, you can join Operation ID, a state-wide program designed to discourage burglary and theft of valuables. It also provides a way to identify your stolen property.

- You simply put identifying marks on valuables - bicycles, stereos, cameras, etc. - with an engraving tool the UNCW Public Safety Office will lend you.

For more information, contact the Campus Police.

Follow these safety tips, and don't become a campus crime statistic.

NSF Fellowships Offered

Students selected for awards in the 1987-1988 National Science Foundation Graduate Fellowship competition, conducted for NSF by the National Research Council, will receive stipends of $11,100 for a twelve-month fellowship tenure. The cost-of-education allowance to the institution chosen by the Fellow for graduate study will be $6,000 in lieu of all tuition costs and assessed fees.

In this fellowship competition, panels of eminent scientists and engineers are appointed by the National Research Council to evaluate fellowship applications on the basis of ability. Final selection of Fellows will be made by the Foundation, with awards to be announced in March 1987.

As one means of aiding the progress of science and engineering in the United States, NSF Graduate Fellowships will be offered to individuals who have demonstrated ability and special aptitude for advanced training in science or engineering. Subject to the availability of funds and to sustained academic progress, new fellowships awarded in March 1987.

As one means of aiding the progress of science and engineering in the United States, NSF Graduate Fellowships will be offered to individuals who have demonstrated ability and special aptitude for advanced training in science or engineering. Subject to the availability of funds and to sustained academic progress, new fellowships awarded in March 1987 will be for maximum tenured periods of three years. Applicants must be citizens of the United States.

NSF Graduate Fellowships are intended for students at or near the beginning of their graduate study, and will be awarded for study or work in science or engineering leading to master's or doctoral degrees in the mathematical, physical, biological, engineering, and social sciences, and in the history and philosophy of science. Awards will not be made in clinical, education, or business fields, in history or social work, for work leading to medical, dental, law, or public health degrees, or for study in joint science-professional degree programs. Eligible applicants must not have completed, by the beginning of the Fall 1986 term, more than 20 semester hours, 30 quarter hours, or equivalent, of study in the science and engineering fields listed above following completion of the first baccalaureate degree in science or engineering, or its equivalent. Additionally, no individual will be eligible who, at the time of application, has earned an advanced degree having a significant science or engineering content.

Applicants will be expected to take the Graduate Record examinations (GRE) designed to measure developed abilities as well as achievement in particular fields of scientific study. The examinations, administered by the educational testing Service, will be given on December 13, 1986 at designated centers throughout the United States and in certain foreign countries. The Foundation will pay December 13 test fees for fellowship applicants, providing NSF application is the primary purpose.

The deadline date for the submission of applications for NSF Graduate Fellowships will be November 14, 1986. Further information and application materials may be obtained from the Fellowship office, National Research Council, 2101 Constitution Avenue, Washington, D.C. 20418.

Charleston Trip

The deadline for registering for the historic tour of Charleston offered through UNCW Office of Special Programs has been extended to September 26. Scheduled for October 10-12, the tour features transportation in a fully equipped bus, hotel accommodation at the Days Inn located in the historic district, a two-day tour of homes and churches, Fort Sumter, Charleston Museum and a night at the Queens Street Theatre for the production of "Pippin."

Total cost for the tour is $155 for single occupancy and $135 for double occupancy, but space is limited. A special preparation class featuring Alan Watson, professor of history at UNCW who will discuss the historical features of Charleston. The preparatory class will meet October 7, at 7:30-8:45 p.m. in Room 104 Morton Hall, on the UNCW campus.

For more information, contact the Office of Special Programs, 395-3195.

Lotus Class Offered

"Introduction to LOTUS 1-2-3" for certified public accountants, will be offered as part of a continuing education program sponsored by the department of accountancy of the Cameron School of Business Administration in association with UNCW's Office of Special Programs.

The one-day class, offering 8 CPE's will run from 8:00 a.m. - 5:00 p.m. on Thursday, October 30 in Room 100 of the University Union. Instructors Robert Appleton and Rebecca Sawyer will describe microcomputer basics, electronic worksheets, commands, data entry and calculations.

Enrollment is limited. Fee is $125 and registration deadline is October 16. For more information, contact the Office of Special Programs, 395-3195.

Drawing Class

Youth ages 10 and up interested in learning to draw, can enroll in "The Natural Way to Draw, part 2" being offered through the UNCW Office of Special Programs. Instructor Sybil Thearing will show students the "quick" and "extended" approaches to drawing, emphasizing light and shade, anatomy, composition, structure and design.

The class will meet from 4:00-5:30 p.m. on Tuesdays, October 28-December 9 on the UNCW campus. The $24 fee will be discounted to $17 for registrations received before the October 21 deadline. For more information, contact the Office of Special Programs, 395-3195.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

Is There a Problem?

Over and over, we have heard the complaints about the number of parking spaces, the traffic, the pedestrian crosswalks, and the speed bumps. The Seahawk has done, to date, at least three news stories concerning these problems, and we have received flak each time, from people who claim there is no problem to those who think we didn't cover the problems enough.

UNCW is primarily a pedestrian campus, and because of this the pedestrian has the right of way at crosswalks and in certain other situations. That does not mean that the pedestrian has an open right to go as he or she wishes, though.

The inspiration for this editorial came late Sunday afternoon when a young lady stepped in front of a car that was traveling just a bit fast on "C" Street in front of the University Union.

The driver managed to stop, but the young lady was still knocked to the ground. Her clothes were torn, and she was holding her head as several people helped her into another car.

The fact that an injured person should not be moved under any circumstances is one thing.

The fact that both were at fault is yet another.

Although I am not sure about the entire campus, "C" Street is a 10-mile-per-hour zone. Said car was moving just a tad more than that maybe fifteen.

Any faster and we would have had another tragedy.

The law gives the pedestrian the right of way, but it does not give one leave to step out in front of a vehicle just because he or she is in the right.

One might end up with other people who were within their rights - but did not use reasonable discretion concerning those rights.

Some of those people can be found in your local cemetery.

Just because you are within your rights doesn't mean that everyone else is looking out for those rights.

One For Stephen

A week ago Tuesday morning, a quiet student named Stephen Praisner was found on the bottom of the pool in Trask Coliseum. He had no history of drug or alcohol usage; he had never, according to all reports been in any trouble with the authorities.

He was, and is, however, dead. No amount of euphemism can cover up the fact that his friends and family now have a void where he once stood.

Now that the media has had to stop using the words DROWNED IN TRASK POOL, many are starting to search and pry. One newscaster even went so far as to ask the Chancellor if Stephen could have been involved in some kind of "Ego Match" and was this a possible course of investigation.

Meanwhile, the negligence lawyers are probably starting to pile up, waiting for their chance to jump into what would be a costly case for all - except the attorneys themselves.

Attorneys will cry for attention, many will clamor for blame, and students will slowly slip back into a normal routine of classes, meals, parties, work, and the occasional trip home.

It really is a shame that the only ones to remember Stephen six months from now will be those who can make a dollar from his unfortunate death.

Except for his family.

Man, Dolphins, and Time Warps

BY

T. JAMES STANLEY

The other day, as I was walking between Randall Library and Fawcett Hall (or as we "old-timers" still refer to it, the Marine Science Building), something vaguely strange happened.

Seems that one of those odd Bermuda Triangle-style rips in the fabric of time and space opened up just outside of a telephone booth.

The net result of this disturbance was that I was left standing there, bewildered, and in possession of a twenty-page informal sociobiological report written by a dolphin researcher sometime in the year 2043.

In the report, the researcher explained the things that had come about as a result of a communications breakthrough with our friends, the dolphins.

The following is a simplistic summary of the futuristic researcher's report:

On June 4, 2041, man and dolphin conducted their very first mutually intelligent conversation.

It was immediately apparent that the Dolphin Race was at least as intelligent as any of our hot-shot scientists ever would have ventured to speculate. Turns out that the dolphins have wanted to speak with us for about as long as we've wanted to speak with them.

We have already learned much about them. They are certainly a noble and spirited stock. The dolphins are candid, and apparently they don't feel as if they have to explain their past behavior. They have little to regret in their collective past.

I wish I could report that we humans were generally so pure-natured. We had a Dickens of a time trying to explain what all that hot stuff was that we sent zooming into their waters.

We finally decided to tell them the truth of the matter, even though the truth didn't display the best qualities of our human nature.

The hot stuff being dumped into their ocean was a result of a cancelled-in-the-nick-of-time nuclear attack between the United States, the U.S.S.R., and several assorted and ever-defiant Mid Eastern countries.

You see, just as everybody's missiles started to lift off, wouldn't you know it, our controlling leaders decided that they were just joking and called the whole mess off.

This much was good fortune to say the least, but what was not so fortunate was that some of the nuclear missiles that had made it into the air intercepted one another over the oceans, and much radioactive debris had fallen into the seawater.

The dolphins are a forgiving bunch, though. You know they're a forgiving bunch when they forgive you for discarding your own nuclear war on them. They forgave, and thank Neptune that the concentration of radiation in the sea was not enough to mutate many of their progeny. They may have been a bit more irked with us if we destroyed their genetic blueprint.

The dolphins also were a little curious as to why, at various intervals in our history, we drifted out onto the seas in our massive gunboats, going around and blowing other such vessels and their crews to smithereens. We explained to them, with a straight face, that we participated in this sort of behavior only when we were having a little conflict (called a war) with others of our race.

We naturally continued to explain to the dolphins about how the wars we had were supposed to, in some way, make the world a happier place to live, and about how the wars that used conventional weapons of destruction and regular bullets, were not quite as extreme in the long run as those wars which involve the splitting of the atom.

Remarkably, the dolphins told us that they understood, but they asked just the same that we please not go the full way with one of those atom-splitting kinds of wars, because they want to do a lot more living, and a human nuclear war would put a serious dent in their survival plan.

We made sure that we explained to them that most humans really didn't want a nuclear war anyway, it's just that we got ourselves in a rut where we have to keep up with the Smith's in terms of numbers of atomic bombs, otherwise, the Smith's may realize that they have more bombs than we do and may therefore try to do away with us.

We're still trying to come up with a good reason to tell the dolphins, about why, after our very close brush with nuclear disaster, our nations still build missile silos in people's backyards.

"Just human nature, probably," was our reply.

Why men, why?? So as it stands, the dolphins want to speak with us some more. They told us about how great it was, being able to live and not have to give it any thought that one's own race is set for self-destruction. This thought struck deeply in many humans. Maybe we could live that way too?

STUDENT FORUM

Big Sister is Watching Us

Recently, The Morning Star printed a letter by the UNCW Women's Association complaining about a calendar produced by the Delta Tau Delta Fraternity. I took such exception to this piece of bombastic correspondence that I felt compelled to send a letter in reply.

Firstly, in defense of the Deltas, I'm sure that they didn't get together and say, "Let's go out and exploit these unsuspecting females for a profit. We'll then nefariously distribute these blatantly sexist calendars throughout the campus, thereby degrading women everywhere." Be honest, people. This calendar was a legitimate fund-raising endeavor that was in no way intended to degrade anyone.

Next, the UNCW Women's Association implies in its letter that they consider the women who posed for this calendar to be "...mindless bodies." I'm sorry, but I know several of these women, and they are not mentally inferior to anyone (certainly not mentally inferior to the UNCW Women's Association). The Deltas did not hold automatic weapons to the heads of these women. From what I understand, these women gladly took the opportunity to appear in this calendar.

The majority of the people I know do not object to this calendar at all. It seems to me that once again, just as the religious right is trying to impose its minority views on us, the UNCW Women's Association is trying to impose its minority views on us also. I do, however, approve of the Associations willingness to stand up for their beliefs. What I don't approve of is their moralistic attitude. The female body, as well as the male body, is very beautiful. Right now, the UNCW Interfraternity Council is laying the ground work for an all-male calendar. I'm sure that when it comes out the Women's Association will not refer to it as degrading and sexist. I understand fully the point that the Women's Association is making. It's just that they are blowing a relatively insignificant topic grossly out of proportion.

The Seahawk is looking for several good people.

Between graduation, transfers, and changing interests, the staff of the UNCW Seahawk has been reduced to a fraction of what is needed.

If you can use a 35mm camera (not a Polaroid), do layout, sell ads, or if you are willing to learn, we can probably use you. Depending on how experienced you are, we can work around your class schedule.

Slaughter in the Labs

Lab Animals- Do They Have Rights?

For years animals have died so that humans may live. According to the January '85 issue of Parade, every 24 hours in this country about 200,000 creatures die in the name of medical and scientific progress—a total of 70 million a year, two-thirds of it tax money. How necessary is this? How much good does it do?

Most citizens concerned over vivisection (Term used to denote animal experimentation) will tell you that the experiments are cruel and immoral. In the name of science, conscious dogs are heated until death to determine the effects of heartstrokes; elephants are dosed with LSD to study aggression; newborn puppies are decapitated to study the bloodvessels in their eyes; the heads of baboons are smashed then studied to record any memory loss; the forelegs of baby mice are chopped off to see if they learn to groom themselves with the stumps; and kittens are blinded, castrated, and rendered deaf to show how their sexual preferences develop.

Another procedure under criticism calls for chemically

My Turn With Kim Ordmand

paralyzing monkeys and cats, then performing brain surgery without anesthetics or pain killers. The list goes on and on. Granted these are isolated cases and not all animals in labs are mistreated, yet the fact remains that things like this happen—which is (ideally) good reason for abolishment.

Yet some experimentation is needed. Because of animal experiments, progress has been made in the areas of cancer and diabetes. As long as animals and people suffer from incompletely understood diseases such as canine parvovirus or human AIDS, the studies must continue.

One of the main concerns still centers on the treatment of the animals. If some experiments must be done, why can't they be done humanely?

Right now in the United States the only protection the lab animal has is the poorly enforced Animal Welfare Act of 1970 which sets standards for the housing, transportation, and handling of animals. It does not cover the nature of the experiments. It does state that experiments causing pain must be justified, yet also contains a clause which disavows any intention of interfering with the research.

Moreover the law is a federal one, so facilities not receiving federal funding do not have to comply with the rules.

The comment by Jeremy Bentham in Animal Liberation sums it up: "The question is, not can they reason, not can they talk, but can they suffer?" Obviously regulation of the experiments is the only way to improve what has become a brutal and degrading practice. I detest the treatment of lab animals and feel this senseless tragedy is acceptable only if the necessary experiments are closely watched. Unfortunately, until alternate methods are introduced and the Animal Welfare Act is strengthened many animals will needlessly suffer.

PRESIDENT'S CORNER

SGA Visits Washington

Last spring, the U.S. Department of Education instituted major changes in the verification procedures for student financial aid applications. As a result, both students and financial aid administrators have been forced to wade through a virtual paperwork mountain.

On September 10-12 two of our students went to Washington and met with N.C. Congressmen and Senators to discuss the problems with our students obtaining financial aid. Their main objective was to bring to the attention of the Congress and Senate the problems arising in getting financial aid. We are finding out that the money is there but there is simply too much paperwork involved that is not necessary. Some of the solutions that were taken to the representatives were to eliminate applying for Pell Grants if parental income is over $28,000 and simplifying financial aid forms—maybe like an EZ 1040 form used for IRS.

Jeff Silverman, UNCW Senator and Holly Murphy, Executive Assistant met with Senators Helms and Broyhill. They also met with Congressmen Rose and Coble and

B. ALLAN DUDLEY

Secretary of Education Bennett. The delegation was received most openly and the concerns brought to the attention of these individuals was successful.

IN MEMORIAM

Once more we have all found ourselves drawn up short, standing unwillingly and with shock on the edge of the precipice of time. Steve Prainser is dead. It is tragic. It seems to be a waste. And all that we do not know and can not understand makes this almost unbearable for some, particularly his family.

Most of us knew him but little, if at all. And yet many of us have found a deep sense of concern and compassion welling up within us. We needed to do something, state our concern, express a sense of loss that we each feel, but may not fully understand. And so some gathered in the memorial service both to show our respect and concern for Steve's family and to have some way to deal with our own feelings. Others found different ways of dealing with their feelings. Still others did not find themselves reaching out to the many—much as we all and that is all right too.

I had the privilege of hearing about Steve from some of his friends and his family when they were here and find myself feeling sad that I had not known him. Steve was a kind of quiet person and quite content to live his life his way. He relished life, honed his body to high level fitness with running cross country, with swimming, and when he could, scuba diving. He was excited about his classes this year and his teachers and was finding increasing success in his coursework. He loved going to UNCW and talked to his family about how good he felt about being here. He marveled at the friendliness and honesty of the people he met on and off campus. He felt that being here made his life better, that his life had more direction. The last time the family was together was for a dive trip in the Bahamas and it was such a very good time for them.

Those of us that responded and reacted to the tragedy found ourselves struggling to contain our angry WHY!s. HOW!s, because we have no focus for our frustration, our anger. There is no Cause that we can wrap our hands around and shake.

But with all our helplessness and lack of understanding, Steve's family and some two hundred others chose to gather at a memorial service in a church that by its very structure proclaims God's presence and read the words of scripture that give testimony to the faith that God is with us in times of darkness and in places where shadows hide the sunshine of praise and joy. We affirmed that God provides a sure and certain resurrection but does not avoid the reality of cross and grave. We own that we can not understand and find it hard to accept, but at the same time know deep within us that we can endure. Even Steve's family knew and affirmed that reality in the midst of all their pain.

We live in a time where we are bombarded daily with stories of sudden and untimely deaths of every sort. Steve's death strikes close to home. Yet, he does work for some kind of meaning in the face of tragedy, perhaps it would do us well to focus on what seems to me to be a reality, that is, that life is not to be valued by length of days but by the quality of our life. Steve was living his life well and his parents are finding comfort in knowing that he might do well to reflect on the quality of our own present lives.

*adapted from meditation at a memorial service for Steve Prainser

... we are essentially spiritual as well as a natural creatures ... life in its fullness, the life which shall develop and use all our capabilities and fulfill all our possibilities, must involve correspondence not only with our visible and ever-changing, but also with our invisible and unchanging environment; the Spirit of all spirits, God, in whom we live and move and have our being. The significance, the greatness of humanity, consists in our ability to do this."

It is absolutely normal that many people during their college years, walk away from the religious practices which were a part of their upbringing, particularly if such participation was mainly habitual and did not lead to some significant experiences. After all, much of what we did religiously was part of our parental upbringing and since this a "please mom and dad, I'd rather do it myself" place in our lives, it seems easy cost off the precept "Go to church" along with many other parental "do's and don'ts."

Fine, lest I am concerned that we throw the "baby out with the bathwater." We outgrow some beliefs and even some religious pictures do not feel relevant to the present times of our lives, but if we shut down the spiritual dimension of our personal life, then we really are in danger of damaging our process of growth and becoming. For we are spiritual beings, beings in search of meaning, value and some sense of connectedness to "our invisible, unchanging environment."

If church seems boring, or your belief system doesn't seem to be big enough to hold all you are dealing with or are thinking about; that's fine. As a matter of fact, discovering gaps in our understanding of self, of life, of God, or facing struggles in our life or tragedy in the world around us that leaves us shaking our emotional fist at the heavens and shouting "Why?" are part of the process of developing a more mature spiritual life. But rejecting everything in our religious life is counter-productive. Question, struggles, even fears or doubts or depression are all part of the process of moving deeper into life where the roots of meaning, joy, and love are to be found.

No one is asking you to become a religious zealot, but I am suggesting that the path to all you are after in your life must include some attention to your spiritual growth for we are mind, body and spirit beings. You can deny that to your own hurt.

Listen to your questions, feel and identify your struggles. Both life and God are so much bigger than you realize and also, so much more intimately tied to all your plans and dreams than you now know. The bottom line issue is not so much belief as power for living through these days and that is a spiritual issue. This moment in your life and you as persons are not isolated realities but part of a vibrant universal reality. Name it God or something else, but claim the spiritual part of yourself and get on with it. Working to discover your own connectedness with the "spirit of all spirits, God" is the key to personal power and meaning and possibility.

ARIES: 2000 years ago this week, several Aries roaming this planet were squished by an Aries-selective meteor shower. Astrologers still don't know for certain why on that dreadful day so many Aries were thumped by the space rocks, but we do have reason to believe that this phenomenon runs in intervals of 2000 years to the week. This week is precisely the 2000th equivalent week of the last Aries-thinking. Just thought you should know.

TAURUS: If you do not compromise in several situations this week, your wife and your children may leave you, and your dog will probably chew up your new Hush-Puppies.

GEMINI: If there are any electrical storms in your area this week, please do not go outside. Gemini has much internal electrical energy, and this combined with the fact that the binary star Aldebaran is in direct linear alignment with the site of the ruins of Atlantis here on Earth, leaves many Geminids acting as human lightning rods.

CANCER: This week you are experimenting with new hobbies of the lunatic sort. If you are cancer, you may find yourself parachuting, catching falling trees, or perhaps even playing rugby.

LEO: The lion prowls the week away in search of romantic conquests. Enjoy, Venus is with you.

VIRGO: Wednesday's gonna reek for you, but don't worry, the rest of the week will smell a little less.

LIBRA: The scales balance for you this week only if you are sure not to go out and purchase a luxury yacht or a Fort Fisher Condom.

SCORPIO: The potential for liver failure is high for you this week. Lay off the booze this week, at least until Monday.

SAGITTARIUS: Go for the gusto this week. Unlike Scorpio, you could use it.

CAPRICORN: Romantic attraction is high in the house of the Goat this week. As a matter of fact, it's so high, it's completely out of your reach.

AQUARIUS: Secret lovers will turn up at your doorstep, professing their lust for you. Wow!

PISCES: This week will find you in the same state that last week found you in: Lonely, bored, and in a drunken stupor. Things will look better for you next week. Meanwhile, stay in bed. Please do have a nice week.

The Ideal Pet?

By Mike Young

In the life of a busy college student, one often wonders what pet would be the most comfortably suited to match their typical fast-paced lifestyle.

Dogs and cats are nice pets, but they often get in the way when a weekend vacation is planned. They also get very lonely spending their days locked away in an apartment; so dogs and cats are not the ideal pets.

How about birds? Well, birds are nice pets also, but birds have a tendency to be very messy, which is something a busy college student shouldn't have to bother with. Birds also have a habit of waking up in the middle of the night and making a lot of noise. OK, so birds aren't the ideal pet we're looking for.

Fish? Fish surely have to be the perfect pet for the college student. No, not really, fish are almost the ideal pets. The main problem with fish isn't the fish, but the friends that come to visit. We all seem to know one of those old people who can't resist the temptation to get the fish drunk. The fish don't get drunk; they just float.

So what is the ideal pet? Well, I've found bread mold to be the perfect pet. Bread mold requires very little care, they're quiet, they're clean, they don't eat a lot, they don't get lonely, and they're even furry. I keep my pet bread mold in a deep glass dish at my apartment. They're really great pets. On those boring evenings when I'm home alone, there's always my faithful bread mold to keep me company.

When I really get bored, I amuse myself by feeding him pieces of old food I find lying around my apartment. If you've been thinking about getting a new pet, I strongly suggest you adopt a bread mold.

Students Appreciate Writing Center

By Anne Simpson
Staff Writer

When I first passed by The Writing Place in Morton Hall, I saw the name over the door, and without knowing anything about it I thought, "That must be my kind of place - I like to write."

Since then I have learned more about it and what it offers to students. I found that it is also a place for people who don't like to write; they can get help here with their writing problems, from sentence structure to overcoming writer's block.

The Writing place has five IBM PCs available to students for word processing, and help is available for using them. I first came to The Writing Place to type an assignment and found the word processors delightful to use. They have spoiled me for typing on a typewriter.

The Writing Place also offers help with writing assignments; it is not just a remedial lab, but a place for all students to get writing help. Last year over 2,000 students came there for help; many are freshmen who need help on English 101 papers, but students from a variety of disciplines come also. Tutors work with students on a one-on-one basis, getting the student to talk and think about his writing, rather than giving the students all the answers or writing their papers for them. This is not a proofreading service but rather a way to get help with the content and organization of your paper.

The tutors are either instructors or junior or senior English majors. The Director of The Writing Place, Dr. Thomas G. MacLennan, says that the first priority for the tutors is to establish a rapport with the student. Then tutors guide and advise without doing their tutees' work for them.

Dr. MacLennan emphasized that The Writing Place is student-centered, that it is here for the students. It is even a quiet place for students to go and use dictionaries and other writing references.

Students can evaluate its helpfulness by filling out a survey sheet commenting on the competence and helpfulness of the tutors and the courteousness of the staff.

A tutor who was enthusiastic about the facility said working here had sharpened her own writing skills and is helping her make a decision about whether to go into teaching. "It's a great place," she said.

The Writing Place is located at 203 Morton Hall.

STANLEY JORDAN, GUITARIST EXTRAORDINAIRE

Jordan Has Magic Touch

By Tamara Drew
Staff Writer

The most striking thing about Stanley Jordan, other than his electrifying stage presence, is his humility. He is THE number one jazz guitarist in the music world, acknowledging that it took a lot of hard work, but that he still has a lot to learn. But the main point to it all, according to Jordan, is the fact that it feels so good to do things his way and have people listen and appreciate it.

On Thursday, September 18th, area guitar lovers had the opportunity to observe one of the major phenomena of the guitar music in action when the renowned guitarist appeared in concert at Kenan Auditorium. Jordan, who is one of the most widely acclaimed young guitarists today, appeared solo to demonstrate what has become one of the most remarkable techniques in guitar history.

The show spotlighted Jordan's mastery in producing unforgettable guitar sounds at a lightning speed, along with unique guitar combinations where he plays using two instruments—one strapped over his shoulder and one propped on a music stand.

The two-handed tapping technique that became Jordan's ticket to stardom allows the guitarist to effectively sound like two or three guitarists playing together, a feat that has served to land him in the forefront of the country's musical spotlight.

To the observer in the audience, the speed with which the guitarist creates is like a series of consistently striking lightening.

Energy is everywhere. As the show progresses, you can almost see the musical tension leaving his body with every note that he creates. He is able to actually accompany himself by using his left hand to sound chords and cover bass lines while using the right hand to tap out single notes and arpeggios in the solo tradition.

To say that Stanley Jordan is a phenomenal guitar player is putting it lightly. He has totally redefined the boundaries of the guitar and it's mastery.

The audience cannot help but be captivated by such an accomplished artist. Using a pianist's approach to playing, Jordan has mastered a technique on the guitar that sets him miles apart from his peers and his turned the music world on edge.

As a guitarist, Jordan has been hailed as being of the same pioneering caliber as guitar greats Charlie Christian and Jimi Hendrix. The significance of Jordan's exploration of guitar capabilities is obvious in light of the fact that in a few short years he has progressed from New York street musician to being one of the most renowned guitarists of his time.

By practicing his unprecedented method of fretboard tapping, he has revolutionized the use of counterpoint, facility and range in guitar music and created a whole new world of musical possibilities for his instrument as well as becoming a regularly-mentioned example for study in guitar trade magazines.

Jordan went from playing on New York street corners in 1983 to playing for the city's 1984 Kool Jazz Festival. Since that time, he progressed rapidly to playing other major jazz concerts, television appearance and working with some of the best jazz performers of modern times, including Quincy Jones, Grover Washington Jr., Wynton Marsalis, Dizzy Gillespie and Benny Carter.

In 1985, Jordan released the album MAGIC TOUCH II, which was produced by the legendary guitarist Al Dimeola and released on the Blue Note label. MAGIC TOUCH II rocketed to the top of the Billboard's jazz chart, where it remained for 30 weeks. The album also did well on a pop crossover, and Jordan's career has skyrocketed ever since that time.

In light of all his accomplishments, the remarkable this is Jordan's attitude about his success. He says that while things have changed, he's been working towards his dreams for a long time.

"I don't even really know just how good I am," Jordan said in a recent interview. "In response to a question about what other guitarist of his caliber would he like to play with, he said, 'I really don't know what my caliber is. And I can't think of a single guitarist that I WOULDN'T want to play with. There are just so many excellent artists out there.'"

During the concert, Jordan performed quite a few of the songs recorded on MAGIC TOUCH. One particularly moving selection was his rendition of "Angel" by the legendary Jimi Hendrix, who as Jordan pointed out, had died sixteen years ago to the day of the concert. He also performed an excellent rendition of Led Zeppelin's "Stairway to Heaven" that was almost breathtaking. All in all, the show was exciting. It was truly captivating to see and hear the extents of what can be done on a guitar.

Jordan's greatest hope is to use his music to touch the lives of his listeners, hoping to inspire them to enjoy the music he sees as one of the most cohesive humanitarian factors in the modern world. Although his tour manager, Don Dickson, mentioned that Jordan does have plans for a future recording, none of the exact details have been ironed.

In the meantime, lucky music fans will continue to enjoy the magic Stanley Jordan creates. He will undoubtedly be a major figure on the music scene for a long time to come.

Theatre of the Mind at WHQR

By Tamara Drew
Staff Writer

In the several years since WHQR (91.3 FM) went on the air in spring of 1984, Wilmington's public radio station has managed time and time again to stay in the forefront of local arts news. The Friends of Public Radio worked diligently for a long time to garner support for the establishment and maintenance of a community-sponsored radio station here, and the daily hustle and bustle of activity at WHQR is a testimonial to the fact that their years of effort have enriched the community and generated great response.

A combination of skilled management, excellence in programming, ingenious fundraising methods, and a strong cast of volunteers has served to create and maintain a culturally enlightening and highly enjoyable brand of listening material for the Cape Fear area. The programming format at WHQR includes nearly everything from classical music to folk tales to jazz, and includes something for almost any listener.

Through their devotion to combining nationally aired Public Radio shows with a diverse assortment of those that are locally produced, the staff of WHQR and the Friends of Public Radio have established an entire new dimension in local radio—at least in the minds of local listeners and sponsors.

Now, through the auspices of the Junior League of Wilmington, the staff and supporters of WHQR have produced and are now preparing to launch a thirteen part series of original radio dramas based on works by North Carolina authors. The series includes dramatizations of stories by such North Carolina writers as the famous O. Henry and Thomas Wolfe, along with renowned native storytellers David Stick, Richard Chase, and Richard Walser, among others.

Determined to make their joint effort a combination of support for local public radio and a project that would also facilitate education, the Junior League put their minds together with those of the station staff to draft a project of mutual interest. According to WHQR station manager Michael Titterton, the idea for a drama series (based on works by state authors) that would also fit into an educational context "just evolved".

Consequently, it took months just to narrow down what the choices for live production would be. Selections for the series were made as a result of co-operative efforts between the Junior League, local educators, and librarians.

The drama series, which has been collectively entitled "The Carolina Bookshelf", will have its premiere on Saturday, Sept. 27th with the airing of O. Henry's "Saturday Bargainer." The shows will be aired weekly on Saturday morning at 9:30 a.m., and will be repeated the following Thursday at 6:30 p.m.

Thalian Hall is Hub for Riverfest Events

The Thalian Hall Center for the Performing Arts will be the location for three major events preceding and during Riverfest '86.

On Thursday, Oct. 2, the Thalian Hall Center for the Performing Arts and the Art Council of the Lower Cape Fear will sponsor the North Carolina Shakespeare Festival's touring production of LOVE'S LABOUR LOST. This classic, romantic comedy is one of Shakespeare's most delightful plays. Tickets are priced at $8 and $6, half price for students and Senior Citizens. Performance is at 8:00 p.m.

On Friday, Oct. 3, the Thalian Hall Classical Concert Series will present Ballet South and a company of 20 dancers directed by Dame Sonia Arova, in a performance of "Romeo and Juliet". The performance is at 8:00 p.m. Tickets are $8 for adults and $6 for students and Senior Citizens. Also, on that Friday at 4:00 p.m., the company will give a master class at the Community Arts Center for a fee of $10.

On Saturday, Oct. 4, the Thalian Hall Center for the Performing Arts is particularly pleased to once again present MIKE CROSS IN CONCERT for two performances at 7:30 p.m. and 10:00 p.m. Cross' beautiful blend of all styles of music, done in toe-tapping styles and interspersed with his own unique brand of story-telling and humor continues to delight audiences all over the United States. Cross gave two standing room only performances in Thalian Hall during Riverfest '85, so be sure to order your tickets early. Tickets are $15 and $10.

FOR TICKETS TO ALL PERFORMANCES, CALL THE THALIAN HALL CENTER FOR THE PERFORMING ARTS BOX OFFICE AT (919) 763-3398 OR 763-9328. BOX OFFICE HOURS ARE MONDAY THROUGH SATURDAY FROM 10:00 A.M. UNTIL 5:30 P.M. AND SUNDAY FROM 1:00 P.M. UNTIL 5:00 P.M.

ATTENTION STUDENTS & FACULTY COMPUTER WORKSHOPS AVAILABLE AT BACK TO SCHOOL PRICES!!!

WHAT IS LOTUS 1-2-3?

Lotus 1-2-3 is the most commonly used electronic spreadsheet. Organizations, from small businesses to large corporations, use it to perform accounting functions, project sales, analyze market trends, create employee databases, and countless other functions.

HOW CAN A LOTUS 1-2-3 WORKSHOP BENEFIT ME?

We provide hands-on, individualized instruction. Each class is limited to eight people and is taught by trained computer and accounting professionals. Our workshops not only teach you how to use Lotus 1-2-3 but also how to apply electronic spreadsheets to the real world. Entré training is valuable and fun!

HOW MUCH WILL IT COST ME?

With a student or faculty ID and at least 30 people signed up, we only charge $22.50 per person. It's a worthwhile investment!

HOW CAN I PARTICIPATE?

Simply call Entré computer center at 763-3373 between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m. Monday through Friday. Workshops will begin when enough people sign up, so tell your friends and all attend!

We're with you every step of the way.

Actors recording a scene for a Theater of the Mind production from WHQR 91.3 Public Radio.

THEATER cont. from pg. 6

The dramas were scripted by Wilmington writer and poet Clark Holtzman, who extracted what Titterton terms "the essence of the works" and expanded on the, converting them into "scripts for the theater of the mind."

In a recent interview at the WHQR studios, Titterton explained that Holtzman took "the kernel" out of each of the works, thus dramatizing the overall philosophical lessons that could come out of each one.

While the dramas are intended to be comprehensible for the 8-10 year olds who will listen to them on tapes provided to the New Hanover County schools, according to Titterton they are also meant to be "entertaining - at least intriguing."

According to assistant producer/director John Bonitz, the cast of actors who worked on the project is a cross-section of nearly every Cape Fear area theater group and then some. Nine of the thirteen shows have been completed, and so far 33 actors have participated. Among these are numerous veterans from Opera House Productions, The Academy Players, The Thalian Association and a number of non-affiliated actors as well.

For the past several months, the actors, directors, associate producers, and sound technician David McInnes have converged at Twin Oaks Recording Studio in Rocky Point to combine their many talents and animate the masterpieces.

Coached by Titterton, who has also led the WHQR staff down the road to several awards for news and feature reporting and innovative approaches for corporate fundraising, the volunteers have succeeded in producing an exceptional dramatic series.

The initial dramatization of North Carolina's rich literary heritage will feature actors Bonitz, Tony Rivenbark and Ed Danilowicz heading up the cast of "Blackjack Bargainer", a story about man's noblest instincts.

The Carolina Bookshelf promises an array of entertaining (yet educational) dramatizations of some of North Carolina's proudest literature.

On several occasions, this writer has had the opportunity to eavesdrop on the production of what promises to be a delightfully entertaining and well-written series of radio adventures. I fully encourage readers to enjoy the fruits of so many talented efforts.

Tobacco Road Opens Oct. 1

By Mike Young
Staff Writer

The UNCW drama department will be presenting Jack Kirkland's "Tobacco Road", based on the novel by Erskine Caldwell. Opening night is Oct. 1 at 8:00 p.m. in the SRO theatre. The play begins at 8:00 and runs through Sun. Oct. 5. Admission is free upon presentation of student I.D. and $4.00 for non-students.

This production of "Tobacco Road" is directed by Dr. Terry Theodore, an instructor in the UNCW drama department.

Dr. Theodore chose this particular play because of the plays prior reputation for excellence, demonstrated by the popularity this play achieved on Broadway. "Tobacco Road" holds a record for the second longest run on Broadway where the play ran for a remarkable 3182 consecutive performances. Tobacco Road is truly a great American classic you won't want to miss.

The successes of "Tobacco Road" can certainly be attributed to the dramatic suspense created by the delightful characters that both move our hearts, and inspire our laughter.

This tragic-comedy is based on real people, and real events. Throughout the entirety of the play, the action successfully keeps us involved, while the characters never failer is maintaining a believable persona.

This play centers around a family that has suddenly found itself without a home. It is essential that the family adapt with the times to survive, but this necessary adaptation is a difficult step for the family to take.

Dude Lester will be played by sophomore, Daniel Riggs, who recently appeared in "Who Am I This Time," and "Play it Again Sam."

Ada Lester is portrayed by Marjorie Megivern who has also appeared in "Our American Cousin," "Delicate Balance," and several other productions.

Jester Lester is performed by Dan Wargo who instructs part-time at UNCW. Wargo has been seen on T.V. as George in "Who's Afraid of Virginia Wolfe," and he also played the part of Tom in "Glass Menagerie."

Ellie May will be played by Robin Ritter, a senior, who has recently been in "Ghost Sonata," and "Look Homeward Angel."

Grandma Lester is played by sophomore Heidi Berge. Heidi was in the plays "Play it Again Sam," and "Dream Date."

Los Bensey is portrayed by senior Jon Gionta. Jon is a newcomer to the UNCW theatre, but his talent proves this to be no handicap.

Henry Peabody is performed by sophomore Steven Robertson, a part-time student at UNCW. Steven has worked with the DEG studios.

Sister Bessie Rice is portrayed by senior Donna Callison. Donna has extensive theatrical experience, including "Round and Round," "Babes in Arms," and "Talking With."

Pearl Lester is played by freshman Laura Nadeau. Laura was in "The Trojan Women" recently.

Captain Tim will be performed by Junior Brad Thomas. Brad has been acting since he was 13. "The Ghost Sonata," "Under Milkwood," and "I am a Camera" are only a few productions that he has been in.

Sophomore Julie Brackman, acting stage manager, seemed to be quite pleased with the quality of the rehearsal. Julie attended the N.C. School of the Arts.

Dr. Theodore, the cast, and the crew have all dedicated a considerable amount of time and effort to bring about "Tobacco Road."

Try not to miss it.

Sweeney Todd a Cut Above the Rest

By Mitchell Butz
Contributor

"Raise your razor high, Sweeney."

I admire Thailans for taking on a notoriously successful and dramatically in-depth play such as Todd. But then again, Wilmington is home to some extraordinary talent, many of whom found a part in this first production of the 86-87 Thalian season.

Revenge is the one word that seems to hold this play together. Sweeney Todd, once exiled from London by a dishonest judge, has returned and seeks to settle his need to avenge his ill fate. The judge kidnapped his wife and now she is missing. The judge has raised the daughter and now plans to marry her. Add a dash of lunacy, a sailor in love, a pompous snake oil salesman, and a truly lovable loon of a pie maker and you'll have Sweeney Todd.

Basically, Todd kills people. Mrs. Lovett bakes them into pies and London eats. (Simple plot, huh?) Now, my opinion.

The set is remarkable. It's old, it's cold, it's the flip side of London. A walkway of iron, combined with Lovett's Pie Shop which rotates to serve different settings, is perfect.

However, Gary Ralph Smith's design is big and a bit cumbersome. I felt a need to breathe. In several scenes much of the audience was left out due to set positioning, i.e., a dead Perelli in the trunk with his hand hanging out. Overall, the combination of wood, brick, and metal worked well. On a scale of 1 to 10, I gave it a 7.

As for costumes, Carey Worthing put together a selection that gave the flavor of proud poverty. Good choices. I give costumes an 8.

Most of the lights were positioned on stage, hanging amid the iron grid-work. The balcony held a sweeping spot. It was haunting, shadowy and the right idea, thanks to Allan Everhart. Lighting gets a 10 from me.

The orchestra was a treat, one of the best I've heard. A little loud on the organ sometimes, Bobby. Johannes Bron directed. I rate it a 9.

The make-up was often too make-up and appeared paste-like. But still, it gave a good feeling of the play's intention. It seemed as though some characters were trying to be pretty, while others looked grungy. I liked the grungy. Make-up rated a 6.

Sweeney Todd (Paul Mixon) got off to a slow start, but warmed into a wonderful irony of justified executing and insane contemplating. He was handsome and devilishly charming, rating an 8.

Mrs. Lovett (Sheila Bron) has a good voice but gave a disappointing performance. Bron didn't realize who her character was, or if she did, I couldn't appreciate her interpretation. Songs seemed rushed and dialogue seemed memorized to a point of recitation. Her characterization varied from a Mae West impersonation to an over-dramatic Sally Field. I felt nothing; she gets a 4.

Johanna (Marsha Ulterback) has one of the best voices in Wilmington and showed good control of character. Unfortunately, the director kept Johanna away from the audience, and I felt little compassion for her, so she gets a 7.

As for Anthony (Doug Dodson) - slow down, boy! Stop trying to act. Start believing in yourself and your ability, and I'll start believing you. A fine actor at those moments he forgoes the audience, he has a pleasing voice - not a great one in this role, but nice. For his sincere performance, a 6.

A better imp than Tobias (Chris Fields) I've seldom seen. The audience wanted to hug him, protect him. His fine performance, a little heavy on the ham once or twice, gets a 9.

Perelli (Travis Parker) was believable, sufficiently obnoxious and full of pomp. His voice failed to hit many of those higher notes, and his Italian/Irish dialect was weak. But he knew his character and rates a 7.

The Beggar Woman (Elise Milligen) was the highlight of the show, and I waited for those magic moments when she appeared. She was lost in London and she took me with her. I appreciated her screams, her concern, her warnings of mischief, and I rated her a 10.

The cast as a whole worked beautifully - voices blending, personalities meshing - a very believable scruff of a mob.

Little annoyances made the show slow in spots: far too many black-outs, Sweeney's useless entrance from the audience, along with his and Mrs. Lovett's confusing exit backstage. Cast member Holly Horton overacted with her rolling eyes and pursing mouth.

The cast should remember that even in the dark of a set change we can see them, and so they should move in character.

Good choices were Terry Horton as the judge and Scott Linder as a father who is almost a victim. A bad choice was to have Anthony throw a fake bird down-stage.

On a scale of 1-100, I give Sweeney Todd a 7. It's worth seeing - an admirable product which producer Joseph Riddick should be pleased, not overjoyed. But then again, this is just my opinion...and everyone has one.

Sports Talk Booters Lack Consistency

MATT SHANKLIN, EDITOR

Football Season in Full Swing

Looks as if football season is finally upon us. The baseball season is winding down with no pennant races left. The next month represents football's month to impress us before basketball and hockey sneak up on us.

So far, football is doing its best to impress and amaze us. In college football, there has been many surprises, most of them pleasant, some of them not so pleasant. Pro football has had its share of surprises, but the highlight has got to be college football.

If you happen to pick up a newspaper lately, you may notice that there is a lot of talk about the Atlantic Coast Conference (ACC). The biggest surprise hasn't been the revival of the North Carolina program and the attempt by Head Coach Dick Crum to save his job. The North Carolina State Wolfpack has really opened some eyes as the are now 2-0-1 overall. These include a blowout against East Carolina in their opener, a tie with Pitt, and an exciting comeback win against Wake Forest.

North Carolina looked pretty good in their win over Kansas and tie with 15th-ranked Florida State. Coach Crum, in the last year of his contract, will probably have to come up with a hard-luck 6-5 record or a 7-4 record if he is to be rehired.

The rest of the ACC seems just as tough with Clemson upsetting 14th-ranked Georgia and Wake Forest playing good football. The four North Carolina schools (UNC, N.C. State, Wake, and Duke) are a combined 8-2-2. Maryland, the perennial ACC power, seems to have the inside track to the ACC crown again.

The Terps just have too much to be unseeded. If their quarterback, Dan Henning, holds his own, the Terps will be tough. Henning, even if average, will be just as good as last year's quarterback, Stan Gelbaugh.

Nationally, the ACC seems very unlikely to break into the national polls. If they do, it won't be very far up, because there are too many other teams that are top 20 material. Oklahoma was simply awesome against Minnesota in routing the Golden Gophers 63-0. Oklahoma used almost every player it had as they turned the Golden Gophers into Chip "n" Dale.

The Miami Hurricanes have also been outstanding as they have manhandled every opponent except Florida, who they beat in Gainesville 23-15. Vinny Testaverde, the top Heisman candidate at this point, hasn't been spectacular, but maybe everybody is expecting him too much out of him. The best way to judge Testaverde is by Miami's won-lost record.

Other teams who may challenge for the national championship are Alabama, who is just completing the toughest part of their schedule, and Penn State. Joe Paterno always seems to have his Nittany Lions near the top.

The rest of the so-called contenders are really pretenders and have very little chance of sitting in the top spot.

The pro season is off to a great start. The refugees from the USFL are proving to everybody that they weren't such a bad league anyway. These players have made a large impact in the NFL and may well decide the winners in many divisions.

Washington and San Diego have profited most from the USFL. Washington solved their problem of depth at quarterback by signing Doug Williams. They also replaced John Riggins with the combo of George Rogers and USFL "star" Kelvin Bryant.

San Diego also has a prize in running back Gary Anderson, another refugee. Anderson made one of the most spectacular plays in recent years. He took a pitch from quarterback Dan Fouts and swept right, only to find several Miami defenders between him and the goal line. Anderson then went airborne from the five-yard line, over two defenders, and flipped into the end zone.

Some teams are helpless even with new talent. Buffalo has Jim Kelly at quarterback, but they seem to be a few years away. Other teams that have no hope of making the playoffs or having a good year include, Pittsburgh, Indianapolis (as usual), and Philadelphia. The Los Angeles Raiders may fall into this category as they have begun the new season 0-3.

The powerhouses are much the same. Chicago still has sweetness (Walter Payton), New England will be right there, and Denver may well have a better defense than the Bears. I look for Chicago to play Denver for the Super Bowl crown. Then again, it is only an opinion.

By Matt Shanklin

You could call it one of those weeks when you just couldn't get things going the way you would like them to. That has sort of described the way the UNCW soccer team has felt in their past 3 games. These three games have seen the Seahawks outscored 13-0.

After coming off a road trip to James Madison and George Mason, from which UNCW earned a 1-1 tie with Madison and a 7-0 loss to Mason, UNCW tried to regroup before going to Campbell University Thursday and South Florida Friday. Both games were played at Campbell soccer field in Buies Creek.

The game with Campbell saw the 'Hawks suffer from the same fate they had at George Mason as the Camels handed UNCW a 4-0 loss. UNCW continued to fail in the one area they have been strong, defense. Sloppy play in the back not only led to scoring opportunities for Campbell, but made the Seahawks' offensive attack weak.

"Our key is our defense," said Coach Blackmore. "We build our attack from the back and if our defense isn't executing, our offense suffers."

Campbell scored three times in the first period, two by David Doyle. Doyle also contributed on the Camels fourth goal and was a thorn in the Seahawks' side all day long.

UNCW was not able to convert on any opportunities and were outshot 29-10.

"We played very fragmented and not as a team," said Blackmore, "...and our concentration was poor."

Blackmore and squad traveled back to Campbell Friday to play Sun Belt Conference member, South Florida. This day saw the Hawks play much better, but they still came out on the short end of a 2-0 score.

"It was a 180% improvement over the Campbell game. We got a strong defensive effort and we played together as a team instead of fragmented," said Blackmore of the Seahawks' play Friday.

The game saw the 'Hawks have plenty of chances, but just couldn't convert. South Florida scored at 29:16 in the first period on a goal by Raymond Perlee. Perlee took the ball on the left wing and drove in on helpless goaltender, Donnie Lewis. Perlee took advantage of the mismatch and beat Lewis with a shot to the right corner of the goal.

Lewis, who made several outstanding saves, finished the game with nine total saves.

UNCW had a large opportunity in the second half when ten minutes into the half, South Florida's Alan Anderson was ejected for fighting with UNCW's Terry Lovell. Playing with only ten men, South Florida was able to thwart all Seahawk opportunities. UNCW came close a couple of times, the closest being when Jose Serrano hit the post with a shot from the right wing.

The Bulls of South Florida put the game away with less than six minutes left to play when Raymond Perlee scored his second goal of the game.

With these two losses, UNCW falls below the .500 mark for the first time this season at 2-3-1. South Florida raised its record to 4-1 and Campbell to 2-2 with their wins over UNCW.

UNCW plays next at home versus Navy and American, next Saturday and Sunday at Brooks Field. American was co-champions last year of the Colonial Athletic Association (CAA) and NCAA runner-up to UCLA.

CAA Soccer Honors

FROM STAFF REPORTS

Bruce Lobdell and Sam Sumo, both forwards from George Mason University, were named Colonial Athletic Association (CAA) co-players-of-the-week for the week of September 15. The selections were made at the CAA headquarters in Richmond, Virginia.

Lobdell and Sumo paced the Patriots of George Mason to a pair of Colonial wins over East Carolina (6-1) and UNCW (7-0). Each had four goals and an assist in these games.

Lobdell, a junior from Dallas, Texas, scored twice in each game. Sumo, a sophomore All-American from Monrovia, Liberia, had one goal against ECU and 1 assist against UNCW. The goals and assists were the first of the season for Lobdell. Sumo now has six goals and an assist in three games.

Donnie Lewis collects one of his eight saves against South Florida Sept. 19. UNCW lost to USF 2-0.

Volleyball's First Week Looks Good

By D. Curtis Nichols

UNCW's women's volleyball team opened its season this week. It consisted of two impressive wins over Campbell and St. Andrews, while only having one setback in a tough match against Methodist.

The week started in Fayetteville, N.C. in a doubleheader against Methodist and Campbell. In the first match against Methodist, the Lady Hawks fought hard only to lose a tough one. During the first game, Methodist outscored the Seahawks with strong net play to take the first game 15-8. The tide changed in the second game with the Hawks taking it 15-11. The tiebreaking game did not go the way the Hawks had planned. They were defeated 15-6.

In the second match of the evening, UNCW had an easier time. The Lady Hawks crushed Campbell in two quick games, 15-4 and 15-1. They could do nothing wrong en route to the easy triumph against the Lady Camels.

After splitting its first two games the netters returned home to start its 1986 home schedule. Their first opponent was the St. Andrews Lady Knights.

Coach McDaniel's team was well prepared for the match and showed it with an outstanding victory. "The team played well fundamentally and were hitting their passes," McDaniel said.

In the first game the Lady Seahawks jumped out to an early 7-0 lead. The quick lead seemed to demoralize the Lady Knights as UNCW cruised to an easy 15-3 victory.

The sparkling defense and precise serving of Leigh Noblin allowed the UNCW volleyball team to again take an early lead 10-5. With the score 11-7 Stephanie Wall received the served and promptly finished off the Lady Knights 15-7, serving four straight winners.

With St. Andrews' back to the wall two games to none, the Lady Knights turned their play around. The third game was well played by both squads, with many long volleys occurring during the game. The Lady Knights continued attacking and ended up winning a close game, 15-13.

Coach McDaniel regrouped her players and they responded with a 15-6 win that gave UNCW the match, three games to one. Once again the serving of Stephanie Wall along with the strong net play of freshmen Yvonne Holan, powered the Lady Hawks. In her first outing, Holan controlled the net with tremendous spikes. The Lady Hawks were just too powerful for the visitors from St. Andrews.

"We played much better than we did Monday night. The team continues to grow and improves with each match," McDaniel stated. McDaniel also felt that in additional bonus was the large crowd that turned out to support the team.

"If we could have this all the time it would be great," McDaniel added.

After the first week, the Lady Seahawks have a 2-1 won-loss record. The netters have upcoming matches against Coastal Carolina and William and Mary and hope for continued success.

Big Soccer Weekend

The UNCW soccer team will host the U.S. Naval Academy and American University this weekend. Navy will be at Brooks Field Saturday at 1:00 p.m., while American, the 1985 NCAA runner-up, will invade UNCW Sunday at 1:00 p.m.

American, which lost to UCLA 1-0 in the NCAA finals last season, will be without national player-of-the-year, Michael Brady, who graduated. This should not affect the Eagles of American too much, as they had a very good recruiting year and started the year ranked 18th in the pre-season polls.

UNCW will have to use a strong defense and take advantage of every scoring opportunity if they are to upend either Navy or American. Strong performances by David Cresswell, Chris Conway, Jose Serrano, Uk Moredock, and goalie Donnie Lewis are vital for the UNCW effort.

"It will be a tough weekend," said Head Coach Jackie Blackmore of the upcoming matches. "We are going to have to play with a lot of intensity. American lost the national player-of-the-year, Mike Brady, but they had a very good recruiting year. Navy's strongest is defense. They have a very good goalkeeper in Paul Schmidt, who was CAA player-of-the-week (Week of Sept. 8).

Last season, UNCW dropped consecutive 1-0 decisions at Navy and American.

Seahawk Athlete of the Week

FROM STAFF REPORTS

Freshman cross country runner Kris York has been named Seahawk Athlete-of-the-Week for the second consecutive week.

York, a freshman from Jenks, Ok, won the inaugural Seahawk Run women's division at Brooks Field Saturday. York completed the 5000 meter course (3.1 miles) in a time of 19:54.2. The win represented the second consecutive win for York who won the Pembroke Invitational last week.

"She is going to win many more of these in the future," said cross country coach Dave Agosta. "She hasn't even tapped her potential yet."

York, a high school All-American at Jenks High School, won easily Saturday. She had a comfortable lead at the half-mile mark and never looked back. Extreme heat and a slow course contributed to a slower time. Her 19:54.2 time was a minute off her 18:56 time at the Pembroke meet, UNCW school record.

Kris York

"I've never run three miles (5000 meters) before," said York of running college cross country, "so this is a whole new experience for me. Hopefully the more races I run, the smarter I will get."

The next Seahawk meet is Oct. 4 at UNC Charlotte.

The Seahawk Athlete-of-the-Week was named by the UNCW sports information office. Last week, York shared the honor with Sandy Chester of the women's golf team.

Stephanie Wall (no. 34) spikes past a St. Andrews defender in a volleyball match Sept. 18. UNCW defeated St. Andrews 3 games to 1. See related story this page.

Club Football Loses to Carolina

from staff reports

The UNCW Seahawks lost their season opener to North Carolina University this past Saturday, 8-7.

UNCW struck first with a 35 yard pass from sophomore Dean McFayden to junior Terry Schapert that placed the Seahawks on the 2 yd. line. Fullback Jim Jeffreys then scored for the Hawks on a dive play and Bill Roach converted the extra point as the Seahawks took an early 7-0 lead. UNCW's defense played an impressive game led by sophomore Charles Gray and freshman Todd Lambeth. The Seahawks shut down Carolina's offense, limiting them to just 85 yards total offense.

In the second half the Seahawks came alive with 3 long drives which brought them down to the 15 yd. line. Key passes to Terry Schapert and long yardage pickups by sophomore Barry Mitchell added to the thriving Seahawk offense.

But mistakes kept UNCW out of the end zone. UNCW's last drive ended with a fumble on Carolina's 5 yard line. Carolina recovered and returned it 95 yards for a touchdown. Carolina made the 2 point conversion on a quarterback keeper around the right end.

With only 2:48 left in the game, the Seahawks still did not give up. Tim Giles returned the ensuing kickoff to the 50 yd. line. UNCW attempted numerous passes, but the Carolina defense held.

On Saturday, Sept. 27, UNCW Club Football will play the varsity squad from Galludet College of Washington, DC. The game starts at 3:00 on Brooks field.

NCAA's

Toughest

Schedules

Every year it seems that some college claim to have the toughest football schedule in the nation. An athletic department will use this as a way to build support for the team. A tough schedule is also quite often used as an excuse for a disappointing finish. Alumni, coaches, and the players themselves will point to their schedule to explain the season.

At the start of this football season the NCAA used their computer to determine who has the most difficult schedule. This year's results leave Notre Dame with the dubious honor. Come this fall seven of Notre Dame's eleven opponents appeared in a bowl games last year. A combined record for the eleven teams last year were 78 wins 37 losses and 4 ties having a winning percentage of .672.

First year coach for the 'Fighting Irish' Lou Holtz agrees that the schedule is a difficult one but it has to be overlooked. Holtz can be thankful to know that his predecessor, Gerry Faust, was blessed with even a tougher schedule last year.

When the whistle blows and the game starts no coach or team is worrying about their schedule. Lou Holtz and other football coaches will tell you that the schedule does not make a team. The good teams will continue to win no matter who they are opposing on the field.

Wellnotes    from The Student Health and Wellness Center

Maybe yes. Maybe no. But if you answer yes, you are not alone. Most people when asked, will admit to having feelings of shyness at some time. In a recent study, 40% described themselves as shy.

Especially now, in new surroundings and hundreds of new faces, you may be experiencing shyness and want to do something about it. Don't give in to shyness - push yourself a little and why not try to -

*introduce yourself to a new person every day

*invite someone who is going your way to walk with you

*volunteer on your floor or in class to work with someone on a project or assignment

*invite someone to go "exploring" with you - investigate the Union upstairs, or another building

*go to the cafeteria and smile at the first three people who look at you

*ask someone for directions, and then strike up a brief conversation *say "hi" to 5 new people today. Smile!

No matter what you are doing, you are under some amount of stress. It doesn't matter whether the situation is pleasant or unpleasant; what counts is the intensity of the demand it places on you to readjust.

The only complete freedom from stress is death. Humans thrive on stress because it makes life more interesting.

Distress is harmful because it is continual stress that causes you to constantly readjust or adapt, such as having a job you do not like which leads to constant frustration, or "bad" stress.

Recognizing that stress has a lifelong influence on you, what can you do about handling it?

1. WORK OFF STRESS - physical activity allows you an outlet.
2. TALK OUT YOUR WORRIES - it helps to share worries with someone you trust and respect.
3. LEARN TO ACCEPT WHAT YOU CANNOT CHANGE.
4. AVOID SELF-MEDICATION - Alcohol and/or pills only mask stress symptoms. The ability to handle stress comes from within you, not from the outside.
5. BALANCE WORK AND RECREATION.

6. DO SOMETHING FOR OTHERS - get your mind off yourself.
  7. TAKE ONE THING AT A TIME.
  8. GIVE IN ONCE IN A WHILE.
  9. GET ENOUGH SLEEP AND REST.
  10. MAKE YOURSELF AVAILABLE - GET INVOLVED.

YWCA Offers Course in Registration

For students and their families, getting through the complex process of applying to college is at the very least confusing and often stressful.

On Tuesday, Sept. 30, from 7:00-9:00 p.m., the YWCA will present "Helping Families With the College Application Process." Katherine Jorgensen, speaker for the evening, is a certified counselor who received her Master's degree from Duke University and counselor certificate training from the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill.

This seminar will help students and parents better understand the admissions policies and practices of colleges and universities. Areas discussed will also be covered. Students and parents in attendance will receive handouts and will have the opportunity to ask questions.

Mrs. Jorgensen's experience working with students, families, and professionals has included 19 years as a teacher and counselor in include choosing a college, meeting deadlines, securing recommendations, and visiting college campuses. Completing the application forms, assessing the student's chances for admissions policies and practices of colleges and universities will public and private schools. She holds the Networking Chair on the North Carolina School Counselors Association Board of Directors and serves on the Publications Committee of the Southern Association of College Admissions Counselors.

Ms. Jorgensen has done numerous workshops and presentations for students and adults on leadership skills, lifestyle management, motivation, the healthy family, and the college admissions process.

Cost for this program is $2 for YWCA members and $3.00 for non-members. For more information or to pre-register call the YWCA at 799-6820, or come by the office at 2815 S. College Road.

Rotc Visits Revolutionary Battlefield

This past Saturday was an active day for the UNCW Dept. of Military Science, with the first field trip of the year for the Seahawk Battalion.

The group visited Moore's Creek Battleground near Currie and the U.S.S. North Carolina battleship here in Wilmington.

At Moore's Creek, Park Ranger Paul Stevens led the group along the route traveled by the patriots led by Colonel Caswell and Colonel Lillington as they headed off the Highland forces led by Scotch officers McLeod and MacDonald.

In the brief but furious battle, only one Patriot was killed compared to 30 Scots killed and 40 more wounded.

Stevens also showed the group a variety of weapons used by both sides in the conflict, including a Brown Bess musket and several swords.

After a hotdog cookout, the group of thirty or more toured the U.S.S. North Carolina before returning to campus.

While at the battlefield, the students heard a brief lecture on battle tactics and on the lifestyle of two hundred years ago. Many students were surprised to find that many of the duties considered to be necessary evils now were done by the wives and girlfriends of the colonial troops.

"Not such a bad system," smiled one cadet, whose wife glared at him playfully.

The ROTC's next field trip is planned for Fall Break, when the Dept. of Military Science will sponsor a white water rafting trip.

Addition to Open in December

Hugelet Refutes Reports Construction Behind Schedule

By Anne Simpson
Staff Writer

Reports of a delay in the expansion of the Randall Library are not true, according to Eugene Hugelet, director of the library.

The Seahawk, a controversial underground newspaper at UNCW, ran a headline in its first issue, "Library Expansion Delayed," followed by a story on the library construction project.

In a phone interview Monday Hugelet said "Yes, somebody called that to my attention."

Hugelet said that the expansion is on schedule and that in no way is it delayed.

The plan is to have the addition completed by December 1986, and to move from the old part of the library to the new between fall and spring semesters.

"The project is really in two parts: the construction of the addition and the renovation of the original part," Hugelet said.

When the addition to the library is finished, everything in the library will be moved to the new section while the old section is renovated.

This renovation is expected to be completed in July, 1987, according to Hugelet.

"We hope to have the whole expanded library open by the start of the Fall '87 semester," he said, confirming that the project is on schedule at this time.

The old part of the library has 70,000 square feet and houses about 275,000 volumes.

The addition will have 93,500 square feet. Together, the old and new sections will form an expanded library which will hold 450,000 to 475,000 volumes.

"It will take a number of years to grow to that number of volumes, so we'll have to grow into it," said Hugelet of the expanded library.

Also, the addition will more than double the amount of seating in the library, and the new entrance will be on the east side of the building, in the new section, facing G Street.

The old entrance on the west side of the building will be closed.

Another project under way in the library is an automated card catalogue system. This system may be in use for the fall '87 semester, said Hugelet.

The system will use bar codes which will be on every book and on student ID's. A light pen will read these bar codes, automating the checkout system.

"There will be computer terminals in place of the card catalogue," Hugelet said.

The library already has its own computer, a Data General S-40 mini-computer, and will be working with the computing center to implement its new system.

Group to visit London, Oxford

Evans to Lead Trip to Britain in Spring

By Anne Simpson
Staff Writer

Want to have a really outstanding Spring Break?

Want to have great fun, soak up culture and history, broaden your horizons, and maybe even get school credit for it? Here's your chance.

You can spend spring break in England this year. John Evans is offering a trip to Oxford, England, for students of UNCW. John is a lecturer in the English Department who has studied at Oxford University and has traveled extensively in England.

The group will stay at a cozy bed-and-breakfast inn convenient to all the sights in beautiful, historic Oxford. The inn is convenient to buses, and several trips into London, just over an hour from Oxford, are planned.

Included in the price for the trip are tickets to Les Miserables, a pop musical based on the novel by Victor Hugo, and Starlight Express, both in London.

In Oxford you can see the Bodleian Library, the Ashmolean Museum, Halley's observatory (of Halley's Comet fame), and the centuries-old colleges of Oxford. The culture is different, the pubs of Oxford are delightful.

In London you can see Buckingham Palace, the Houses of Parliament, the Tower of London, Westminster Abbey, and so much more.

The group will fly on Piedmont Airlines and KLM Royal Dutch Airlines from Wilmington to Heathrow Airport. The group will leave Wilmington Feb. 26 and return March 9.

A limited number of students may apply for credit in directed study related to this trip.

For more information, contact John Evans at 395-3226 (office phone) or stop by his office, room 152, Monday-Friday from 9:30 to 11 a.m. Weekends and Thursdays. Those who are interested should make their plans soon since space is limited.

The Tower Bridge in London is one of the sites to be toured by Evans' group this spring. Note the crumbling masonry in the foreground. This wall dates from the Roman period. (Staff Photo by Wes Perry)

USS Stark to Visit

Frigate arriving for Riverfest

By Jefferson Weaver
Staff Writer

This Wednesday, the United States Navy Frigate USS Stark will come to port here in Wilmington. The Stark is scheduled to be a part of the activities surrounding Riverfest and the twenty-fifth anniversary of the USS North Carolina Battleship Memorial.

The Stark is a guided missile frigate, 423 feet long and carries a crew of 175 sailors and 12 officers.

The Stark will be berthed near the Coast Guard Cutter Northwind, which is stationed here at Riverfront park. During her visit, the Stark will be open for visitors from 10 p.m. until 4 p.m. Friday and Saturday, and from 10 a.m. until 2 p.m. Sunday.

A popular part of any ship's visit to Wilmington has been the Dial-a-Sailor program, and this will be included in the frigate's visit to the Port City.

Anyone wishing to entertain a sailor may dial 763-1329 before docking time Wednesday, or 762-1626 after the ship is docked.

Mayor Berry Williams will declare Oct. 2 as USS North Carolina Silver Anniversary Day and will also proclaim October as USS North Carolina Month in a special ceremony Wednesday morning.

The New Hanover High School band will provide music, under the direction of Jerry Perreault.

The Hoggard High School Navy ROTC color guard and drill team will be on hand under the leadership of Master Sergeant John Wilkes.

The crew of the Stark is scheduled to play a football game against the Cape Fear Rugby Club Wednesday Night at the Hugh Macrae Park field. Game time is 7 p.m. and will take place at the main field.

The public is also invited to attend a concert by the Fabulous Shakers on the Battleship Memorial grounds Friday at 7 p.m. A contribution of $1 is requested. Coolers are welcome, but no glass is permitted.

Read next week's Seahawk for complete details on the events of Riverfest '86.

Test Anxiety

Key May Be Relaxation

By Joseph Allen
Staff Writer

Almost every one suffers from some form of anxiety over a test.

Anxiety over a test usually takes hold of a person the night before the test. Any normal amount of anxiety will usually disappear once the test has started.

But for some people, the anxiety they feel over a test will not go away once the test is in hand. A person can become totally paralyzed by test anxiety, becoming incapable of taking a test.
